PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

December 13, 1920.

Present:—Lord Moulton, Lord Sumner and Sir John Edge.

KHEGRAMONI DAS, SINCE

DECEASED, NOW REPRESENTED BY

DUNIA CHAND BARAL AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

JIBAN KRISHNA KUNDU AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 52 (1) (b), 114—Landlord and tenant—Deficiency in area of tenure—Rent, reduction of—Land in the Sunderbunds—"Permanently settled area".

The respondents held land in the Sunderbunds under a permanent mokurrari lease granted by appellant. They claimed a reduction of rent under section 52 sub-section 1 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the ground that part of the land leased had been diluviated. Appellant opposed the reduction, relying on the terms of the lease and on section 114 of the Act, which permits the holder of a permanent tenure in a permanently settled area to grant a permanent mokurrari lease on any terms agreed between him and the tenant. The land had been granted by Government in 1848 to appellant's predecessor at a rent increasing for a period of years, after which it was subject to survey and measurement, and the proprietary right in the grant was to be "under conditions generally applicable to owners of estates not permanently settled."

Held, that the land was not proved to be in a "permanently-settled area" and that, consequently, respondents were entitled to reduction of rent irrespective of the terms of their lease. [p. 3, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court, dated the 9th June 1916, affirming a decree of the District Judge, 24 Perganas, which reversed a decree of the Third Subordinate Judge, Alipur.

FACTS.—To the statement of facts in their Lordships' judgment it may be added that the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit upon the grounds, (1) that it was not maintainable, inasmuch as some of the tenants were not joined as plaintiffs, and (2) that the terms of their lease precluded respondents from claiming the reduction. The District Judge allowed an appeal. He held that the suit was maintainable as the tenants not joined as plaintiffs had been made defendants; that the terms of the lease did not clearly exclude the right to a reduction of rent, and that having regard to section 13 of Bengal Regulation III of 1928, the tenure could not be held to be in a permanently settled area, so as to make section 175 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applicable. He remanded the suit to the Sub Judge to determine the amount of the reduction.

Khetram D. appeared to the High Court. The appeal was heard in the first instance by Chatterji and Maillik, JJ., the terms of the grant from Government to appellant's predecessor (the material parts of which are set out in their Lordships' judgment) were not before the learned Judges, who understood that appellant's holding from Government was a permanent tenure. They were of opinion that, on that assumption, and the land being in the Sunderbunds, it was in a permanently settled area, and that section 79 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applied. They held, further, that the stipulations of the lease excluded the right to a reduction and, therefore, allowed the appeal.

An application for review was made and granted by the learned Judges on the ground that they had been misled by a misstatement in Court that the appellant's lease from Government was a permanent one.

Thereafter, the appeal was heard de novo by Woodroffe and Chandler, JJ., who dismissed it.

Hence the present appeal.

Mr. H. N. Sen, for the Appellants.—The respondents agreed in their lease that there should be no reduction of rent on diluviation. The respondents are not raiyats, but tenure holders, and it was open to them to make what terms they chose with their landlord. Even if the Government grant of 1880 was not a permanent grant still the land was held by respondents upon a permanent tenure. When land is so held in the Sunderbunds it is in a permanently settled area for the purposes of section 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Tamasha Bibi v. Ashutosh Dhur (1).

Reference was also made to Bengal Tenancy Act, sections 3 (7) and 5 and to Bengal Regulation 1 of 1793.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. O., and Kenworthy Brown, for the Respondents.—Section 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply in this case as the land is not in a permanently settled area. Conceding that an area may be a permanently settled area even though no permanent settlement of the District containing it was made in 1793, still the terms of the grant from Government to appellant's predecessor show clearly that this was not a permanently settled area. Section 179 not applying, respondents as tenants could avail themselves of section 52 (1) (b). If it be properly construed, the lease to respondents does not in any case exclude the right to a reduction of rent upon a permanent reduction of the area by diluviation.

The Sunderbunds were not included in the Permanent Settlement.

[Reference was also made to Bengal Regulation III of 1820, section 13 and to section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1855)].

Mr. H. N. Sen replied.

JUDGMENT.

LORD MOULTON.—The action to which this appeal relates is brought by the respondents, who are holders of a lease from the appellants of land situated in the Sunderbunds, with the object of obtaining a reduction of rent on the ground that a large portion of the holding has been washed away by the surrounding waters, and that the area leased has been reduced thereby to the extent of nearly a quarter. They rely on section 52 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, which enacts that—

"Every tenant shall be entitled to a reduction of rent in respect of any deficiency proved by measurement to exist in the area of his tenure or holding as compared with the area for which rent has been previously paid by him, unless it is proved that the deficiency is due to the loss of land which was added to the area of the tenure or holding by alluvion or otherwise, and that an addition has not been made to the rent in respect of the addition to the area."

The facts of the case are not substantially in dispute, although the extent of the diminution of the area is not agreed between the parties and must be determined by measurement in the proper way. There is no doubt that there has been a diminution and no case is set up that there has been any previous increase of the holding without increase of rent so as to bring it under the latter part of the clause.

The substantial defence of the appellants (who are grantees from the Government of the holding which they have leased to the plaintiffs) is that the case comes under section 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, which reads as follows:—

"Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to prevent a proprietor or a holder of a permanent tenure in a permanently settled area from granting a permanent mukarrari lease on any terms agreed on between him and his tenant."

It is contended that by the terms of the lease to the plaintiffs they are precluded from denying their obligation to pay the full rent thereby fixed on the ground of flood or diluviation, and it is to meet a defence founded upon this provision that the plaintiffs contend that they are protected by section 52 (b). The appellants, on the other hand, contend that they hold from the Government a permanent tenure in a permanently-settled area, and, therefore, are excepted from the operation of section 52 by the provisions of section 179 above referred to.

By the definition clause 2 (12) of the Act, "permanent settlement" means the Permanent Settlement of Bengal, Behar and Orissa made in the year 1793. The grant from the Government to the appellants certainly does not come within that description if it be taken literally, for it was not made until December 1880. But, apart from this, their Lordships are of opinion that the terms of the grant are not such as to render the lands to which it refers "a permanently-settled area." In substance, the payment to the Government is not to commence for twenty years from 1831, and is to go on at increasing rates until the expiration of 99 years, when the following clause comes into force:—

"That after the 99th year the grant shall be liable to survey and re-settlement, and to such moderate assessment as may seem proper to the Government of the day the proprietary right in the grant and the right of engagement with Government remaining to the grantees, their heirs, executors or assigns, under the conditions generally applicable to the owners of estates not permanently settled, and that revenue equal to the amount annually paid from the 51st to the 99th year shall be paid annually by the grantees, their heirs, executors or assigns, until such survey and re-settlement or re-assessment as is described above be effected."

These terms are in such strong contrast with what is known as "permanent settlement" in India that their Lordships are of opinion that the appellants have failed to establish that the lands are situated in a permanently settled area. Hence they hold that section 179 does not apply to this holding, and that the respondents are entitled to the relief which they claim under section 52 (b). This was the judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal from which this appeal is brought and their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

A mortgage of family property with the object of raising funds for the purchase of zemindari shares in a village, such purchase being for the benefit of the family and not detrimental to its interests, is binding on all the members who belong to the family. In such a case it is not necessary for the mortgagee to prove that the money raised by the mortgage was actually applied towards the purchase of the zemindari. It is enough if he proves that a representation was made to him that the zemindari was to be purchased and that after reasonable enquiry he believed the representation to be true. [p. 4, col. 2.]

Where a mortgage-deed of family property contains a recital of a previous mortgage and the object of the subsequent mortgage is to pay off the previous mortgage, the validity of which is admitted, both the previous and subsequent mortgages are binding on the family. [p. 5, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Pilibhit, dated the 7th August 1917.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sanyal, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. W. Dillon and Babu P. N. Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale upon a mortgage executed on the 5th of July 1904 by Hulas Rai, Jawahir Lal and Dori Lal who were members of the same family. The appellants before us are the descendants of Hulas Rai and it is contended on their behalf that the mortgage was executed without any family necessity and is, therefore, not binding on the joint family property which was comprised in the mortgage. The amount secured by the mortgage was Rs. 3,000 and this amount was alleged to have been due to the mortgagee, Sohanlal, who is now dead and is represented by his adopted son, the plaintiff, under an earlier mortgage of the 19th of June 1891 executed by Hulas Rai and Jawahir Lal in favour of Sohanlal for Rs. 2,000. We may mention that the present appellants have purchased the interests of Jawahir Lal in the mortgaged property and in the sale-deed which was executed in their favour one half of the mortgage money due to the plaintiff was left in the hands of the purchasers for payment to the mortgagee Sohanlal. In order to consider whether the mortgage now in suit is binding on the appellants it is necessary to determine whether the earlier mortgage of the 19th of June 1891 was made for family necessity or for the benefit of the family. In the mortgage-deed the necessity for raising the loan is stated to be the purchasing of semindari shares in the villages of Tajpur and Muriana. It appears that on the 19th of September 1891 a sale-deed of the said villages was obtained in the names of the two sons of Hulas Rai from the Liquidator of the Uncovenanted Service Bank. The consideration for that sale was Rs. 5,250. If that sale was for the benefit of the family, and if the loan was taken on the representation that the money was required for the purpose of obtaining a sale of the aforesaid property, the debt was incurred for the benefit of the family and was binding on all the members who belonged to it. It is admitted that the two villages of Tajpur and Muriana which were purchased on the 19th of September 1891 are still in the possession of the family including the present appellants, and that the villages have been in their possession ever since the date of the purchase. We have evidence before us which shows that this purchase was one which proved beneficial to the family. One of the purchasers was Baljit and from his evidence it appears that the revenue assessed on the property purchased at the time of the purchase was Rs. 800 a year. Baljit further deposed that at the present time the income from the property is Rs. 1,600 or Rs. 1,700, and that the revenue has been enhanced to Rs. 900. From the fact that at the date of the purchase the revenue assessed on the property was Rs. 800 a year it may reasonably be presumed that the income which the property yielded to its owners was at least Rs. 600 and the fact that at the present moment the profits amount to about Rs. 200 raises a strong presumption that at the date of the sale the purchase was not an unprofitable or improvident transaction but was a purchase for the benefit of the joint family. Had it not been so it is unlikely that the family would have retained possession of this property for nearly 30 years. We may, therefore, take it as established that the purchase which was made in 1891 was a purchase which was beneficial to the family and not detrimental to its interests. We have now to consider whether the creditor, on whom the burden, of course, lay of showing that the loan was taken for the benefit of the family, took reasonable care to ascertain that the representations made to him were representations upon which he could reasonably and honestly have acted. As we have already stated, it is recited in the mortgage deed that the loan was taken for the purpose of purchasing semindari shares in the villages of Tajpur and Muriana. There is the evidence of witnesses which proves that this was the representation made by Hulas Rai and Jawahir Lal to Sohanlal at the time when the loan was taken from him. The amount of the loan, Rs. 2,000, was paid in cash at the time of registration. It appears that, as a matter of fact, the price for the purchase of the two villages had already been paid by the 4th of June 1891 to the Liquidator of the Uncovenanted Service Bank and, therefore, no purchase-money had actually to be paid at the date of the mortgage in question. If, however, the mortgagors represented that they needed the money for the purposes of the purchase and their statements were believed by the lender upon such enquiry as he could have made from the borrowers and he honestly believed that the money was required for the purposes of a purchase he would be entitled to realise his money from the mortgaged property which happened to be joint family property. In the well-known case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musummat Baboosa Munraj

MAUNG MEIK v. U KUMARA.

“Their Lordships think that the lender is bound to enquire into the necessities for the loan and to satisfy himself as well as he can, with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the manager is acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate. But they think that if he does so enquire and acts honestly the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge.” In the present instance the lender, Sohanlal, made enquiries with reference to the parties with whom he was dealing and satisfied himself, as well as he could, that the mortgagors who were the managers of the joint family were acting for the benefit of the family. The sale had not actually taken place and negotiations for it were in progress. If he was satisfied that the sale was about to take place and the borrowers represented to him that the money which they borrowed was needed for the purposes of the sale, it was not necessary for him to ascertain whether the money was actually needed for the purchase or whether the purchase-money had already been paid or not. Sohanlal is now dead and so are Hulas Rai and Jawahir Lal. It must be remembered that a number of years have elapsed since the date of the mortgage of 1891. The only person who is alive and who, along with Hulas Rai and Jawahir Lal, admitted the correctness and validity of this mortgage of 1891 is the defendant Dori Lal but he has not appeared in this case and has not offered his evidence on behalf of the defendants. The fact that the adult male members of the two branches of the family, who were apparently the managing members of the family, executed the mortgage of 1904 and admitted the validity of the mortgage of 1891 is a circumstance which tells strongly in favour of the plaintiffs. The further circumstance that when the present appellants purchased the share of Jawahir Lal they undertook to pay half the amount of the disputed mortgage to the mortgagee on account of the share of Jawahir Lal's liability under the mortgage also tells strongly in favour of the original mortgage of 1891 being a mortgage which was entered into for the benefit of the family. In these circumstances, we must hold that the mortgage of 1891 was binding on the family and that, consequently, the mortgage now sought to be enforced is equally binding. We dismiss the appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale. We extend the time for payment of the mortgage-money for six months from this date.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s 7 (v) (c)—Suit for possession of “religious land”—Court-fee payable—Valuation, method of.

In a suit for possession of land the plaint must be stamped according to the value of the subject-matter, and where the subject-matter is land which pays no revenue and has produced no profits during the year next before the date of presenting the plaint, the value must be deemed to be the amount at which the Court shall estimate the land with reference to the value of similar land in the neighbourhood, and the same principle is applicable where the land in suit is “religious” land [p. 6, col 1.]

The mere fact that the land is “religious” does not render it incapable of valuation with reference to the value of similar land in the neighbourhood. [p. 6, col 1.]

Mr J. N. Basu, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners sued the first two respondents, who are Pongyis, for possession of a certain Kyaung and its close on the strength of a decision of the ‘Gaingdauk Sayadaw’ of Myingyan and joined the third respondent as being also bound by that decision.

A question of the amount of Court-fee payable on the plaint arose, and the Trial Court held that, under the provisions of section 7 (v) (c) of the Court Fees Act, the value of the subject-matter must be deemed to be "the amount at which the Court shall estimate the land with reference to the value of similar land in the neighbourhood."

(1) 6 M. L. A. 393; 18 W. R. 81n.; Sevestre 253n.; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 29; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 552; 19 E. R. 147.

The petitioners allege that this decision is wrong and apply to me to set it aside in revision. They allege that, because the land is religious land it is incapable of valuation, and their learned Advocate argues that Article 17 (vi) of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act should be applied.

It is quite clear that that Article cannot apply to the present case because it applies only to cases which are not otherwise provided for by the Act, and section 7 (c) (c) of the Act makes express provision for such a case as the present. The present case is clearly a suit for possession of land. In such suits the plaint must be stamped according to the value of the subject-matter, and where the subject-matter is land which pays no revenue and has produced no profits during the year next before the date of presenting the plaint, the value must be deemed to be the amount at which the Court shall estimate the land with reference to the value of similar land in the neighbourhood.

The learned Advocate argues that no other land in the neighbourhood can be similar to religious land, and that, therefore, section 7 cannot apply. I cannot accept this argument. The difference between the land in suit and other lands in the neighbourhood is merely a difference of ownership, and that difference is merely accidental and not essential. There is the same difference between lands belonging to different private owners, but no one would be found to argue that that difference prevented the lands from being "similar" within the meaning of the Act.

I, therefore, see no reason to believe that the lower Court was wrong in its interpretation of the Act and I dismiss the application summarily.

Plaintiffs, proprietors of a village, sued to eject three persons, who were brothers, from a piece of land which was alleged to be shamilat land. Subsequently, finding that one of the defendants was on field service, the plaintiffs withdrew their claim as against that defendant and reduced it to two-thirds of the land in suit. A decree was passed in their favour. On appeal the District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground of non-joinder of a necessary party :

Held, that the claim having been reduced so as to relate only to the interests of the defendants on the record, the suit could not be dismissed on the ground of non-joinder of the third defendant. [p. 7, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Karnal, dated the 23rd December 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Kaithal, District Karnal, dated the 29th October 1919.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. O. Vaughan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which the present appeal arises the plaintiffs, who are proprietors in the village, sued defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to dispossess them from certain land which was alleged to be shamilat and which, it was said, they had encroached upon. The defendants Nos. 3 to 5, who are co-owners with the plaintiffs and who did not join them in bringing the suit, were impleaded as pro forma parties. The defendant No. 6, Indraj, who is brother of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, was subsequently impleaded. On the 30th April 1919, Bhura, plaintiff, said that Indraj was on field service, that therefore, the plaintiffs reduced their claim to two-thirds of the land in suit, and that they would sue for Indraj's share later on. This statement was preceded by an order of Court from which it appears that Bhura, probably at the suggestion of the Court, made his statement giving up the claim against Indraj. The first Court proceeded with the case and eventually gave the plaintiffs a decree for the whole land claimed against all the defendants including Indraj whose name was never struck out of the list of the defendants. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that Indraj was a necessary party. It purported to follow Ram Sarup v. Musammatt Rikhi (1) and Rattan Ohand v. Ram Pershad (2) and Motan Mal v. Kirpa Mal (3).

The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal in this Court, and it is contended on their behalf that the rulings relied upon by the lower Appellate Court are not applicable; that the plaintiffs gave up their claim against Indraj in the manner stated, and that as the defendant never objected to this, the suit should not have been dismissed. A perusal of the rulings referred to by the lower Appellate Court will show that they are distinguishable from the present case and in no sense applicable. The plaintiffs having given up Indraj and reduced their claim to two-thirds of the property in dispute and the defendants never having objected to this, the suit should certainly not have been dismissed. Another objection to the order is that Indraj's name was never struck out of the list of defendants, that he continued to be a party to the suit until the end, and that the decree was passed against him as well as against other defendants.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, remand the case thereto for decision of the appeal in accordance with law. It will be for the lower Appellate Court, if it finds in plaintiff's favour on the merits, to decide how far the first Court was justified in passing a decree against Indraj, having regard to the fact that he was never served with a summons and never appeared before it. Stamp in this Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the cause.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Succession—Step-father and step-children—Share of step-child in property jointly acquired by mother and step-father and property inherited by father during marriage with mother.

As regards the jointly acquired property of the marriage between the mother and step-father of a child, where there are no children of that marriage and no children of the step-father by any other marriage, the share of the step-child is one-fourth. The same rule applies to property inherited by the step-father during his marriage with the mother of the step-child. [p. 12, col. 2]

The fact that the step-father has married another wife does not deprive a step-child of his share in the property. [p. 13, col. 2.]

A step-child, however, has no interest in property acquired by the step-father jointly with a later wife. [p. 13, col. 2.]

Mr. O. G. S. Pillay, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. C. Mukerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent, Ma Tha Gaung, as widow of one Chet Su, sued Chet Su's step daughter, Ma Nyein, and Ma Nyein's husband, San U, to recover two plots of land which she claimed as having belonged to Chet Su but which were in the possession of the appellants. She alleged that they had wrongfully dispossessed her, but my learned predecessor has found that that allegation was not established and, therefore, it need not now be considered.

The appellants alleged that one of the pieces of land, known as "Kaingdaunggyi", originally belonged to Chet Su and his wife Ma Thaing, who was the appellant Ma Nyein's mother; that over 20 years ago Chet Su and Ma Thaing gave it to them to work as their own, and that about three years ago, not long before his death, Chet Su confirmed that gift by reporting the transfer to the Revenue Surveyor. In support of this story they produce a "lyatpaing" which recorded the transfer as having been reported by Chet Su and Ma Nyein's husband San U in 1914.

As for the other piece of land, known as "Letpaubin," the appellants alleged that it never belonged to Chet Su at all but had been brought under cultivation by them and belonged to them, and they explained the fact that it stood in the name of the respondent by saying that they lived in her house and that she, being an elderly woman, would be regarded as head of the household. There is, however, no difficulty in accounting for the fact that it stands in respondent's name since before Chet Su died it stood in the joint names of him and his wife Ma Thaing and after Chet Su's death it would in the ordinary course be transferred to the name of his widow, the respondent, his earlier wife, Ma Thaing, having predeceased him.

The Trial Court after hearing the evidence came to the conclusion that the respondent established her case on all points and gave judgment in her favour.

Appellants appealed but the lower Appellate Court dismissed their appeal.

They then came to this Court on second appeal on the following grounds, namely:—

(1) that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that Ma Nyein, as Chet Su's step-daughter, could not claim any share in the property left by Chet Su as against Chet Su's widow, was contrary to Burmese Buddhist Law;

(2) that the respondent's suit to recover the lands was not maintainable in view of the fact that appellants had been in possession of the lands for 20 years either on their own account or jointly with Chet Su;

(3) that the burden of proving title to the lands was on respondent, and

(4) that the Appellate Court was wrong on the evidence in holding that they were in possession of the lands by the permission of Chet Su or as his tenants, and in finding that their present possession as against the respondent was wrongful.

My learned predecessor, after hearing the learned Advocates, framed the following issues and referred them to the Court of first instance for trial:—

(1) Did Chet Su's father, Po Hnyin, die before or after Chet Su married Ma Nyein's mother Ma Thaing? and

(2) when did Chet Su first exercise dominion over the two lands in dispute?

On these issues the Trial Court, after taking further evidence, found—

(1) that Po Hnyin died after Chet Su married Ma Thaing;

(2) that Chet Su came into the possession of the first of the two lands which respondent claimed, namely, "Kaingdaunggyi" on the death of his father Po Hnyin, from whom he inherited it; and

(3) that Chet Su and Ma Thaing acquired the other land, namely, "Letpanbin," while they were husband and wife.

The lower Appellate Court accepted these findings and, after a careful perusal of the evidence, I too accept them. It is, I think, clear that Chet Su's father first occupied the "Kaingdaunggyi" land and cleared it, probably with Chet Su's help, and that after his father's death Chet Su occupied also the "Letpanbin" land, which is separated from the "Kaingdaunggyi" land merely by a creek, and cleared it similarly with the help of his step-daughter and her husband, the present appellants. I have no doubt both the lands belonged to Chet Su and that they were "lette'pwa" of his marriage with Ma Thaing.

As for the share of such property to which respondent as widow of Chet Su would be entitled as against Ma Nyein as Chet Su's step-daughter, very little has been said in argument and the learned Advocates themselves admit that they are in doubt on the point.

The case law seems to be conflicting and inconclusive.

In the case of Nga Po Thit v. Mi Thaing (1) it was held that a son as against his father's children by his step mother is entitled to a one eighth share of the jointly acquired property of his father's marriage with the step-mother. That ruling obviously cannot be applied to a case like the present where there are no children of the step-father's marriage with the mother and the contest is practically one between the step-daughter and the step father.

In the case of Shwe Ngon v. Ma Min Dwe (2) it was held that a step-daughter whose step-mother survived her father may sue the step-mother for a share of properties inherited by the father during his marriage with the step-mother and may recover from the step-mother half those properties. That ruling is authority for the proposition that the step child can claim and recover from the step-parent its interest in property inherited by the parent during the marriage between the parent and the step-parent, but it is no authority for the rule of partition in the present case, since in this case the properties were inherited not by the mother but by the step father.

In the case of Mi So v. Mi Hmat Tha (3) the learned Judicial Commissioner of Lower Burma held some diffidence that as against the step child the step mother takes seven-eighths of the jointly acquired property of the marriage between the father and the step-mother.

The case of Maung Ohit Saya v. Ma Meinkale (4) was a contest between the children of two marriages and the widow of a third marriage which was childless and there was no evidence as to whether the property was letetpwa of any particular marriage or was payin of the husband or of any of the wives. The learned Judicial Commissioner referred the question as to the rule of partition involved to the "Kinwunmingyi" and the "Wetmasuk Wandank" and, in accordance with their opinion, decided that the children of the first marriage were to get half the property, the children of the second marriage one quarter, and the surviving widow one quarter. I doubt whether a detailed examination of the opinions of the two learned authorities on Buddhist Law to whom that case was referred would shed much light on the simpler question which arises in the present case.

The judgment in Ba Kyu v. Ma Zan Byu (5) merely followed Ngaz Po Thit's case (1), in so far as it referred to a rule of partition between the son of a first wife and his deceased father's second wife.

The case of Ma Gun Bon v. Maung Po Kyue (6) dealt with the case of the children of step-children and did not mention the specific shares to which they would be entitled. It did, however, lay down that step-children are to be regarded as heirs without limitation except in the case of ancestral property that is inherited property which is still undivided, and even in that they are granted a share provided the step-parent has lived to have a vested interest in it. This dictum, of course, applies only to a case where there are neither widow nor own children of the step parent to inherit.

The case of Ma Sa v. Ma Thet Haon (7) dealt with the shares of the children of step children and not with those of step-children themselves, and as the rules for partition in the two cases are different it throws little, if any, light on the question which arises in the present case.

In Ma Hnin Dok v. Ma U (8) it was held that the share of a child of a step-child in the jointly acquired property of the marriage of the step-child's parent and step parent is one-eighth. If this ruling and that in Mi So's case (3) are both correct, it would seem that the shares of the step-child and of the child of the step child are the same, and that is hardly what one would expect since the share of an out-of-time grand-child is one-fourth of that of its parent.

In Maung Kado v. Ma Kyin (9) the daughter of a step-child sued her step-mother's second husband for her share of her own mother's separate property and it was held that she was entitled to half that property. That decision throws little light on the present case.

The case of Maung Tun Gyaw v. Ma Balo (10) seems to be important for the purposes of the present discussion. It was a suit between a step-mother and her step-sons for her share of the property left by her husband, who was father of the step children. It resembled the present case in the fact that there were no children of the marriage between the parent and the step-parent. The rule of partition adopted was that the step mother was entitled to a half share of the property which her husband inherited during his marriage with her and the step-children were entitled to the other half share. The authority on which that rule of partition was based is Manugye X 8 which, it may be noted, goes on to say that the step-son is entitled to one-sixth of the jointly acquired property of the marriage of his mother and step-father.

That case is, however, to be distinguished from the present case in that in the present case the property was inherited not by the parent but by the step-parent, which would probably make a difference to the rule for partition.

The case of Nga Son v. Ma Nyo (11) merely followed Ma Gun Bon's case (6) in regarding a step-child as an heir of the step parent.

The case of Ma Ba We v. Mi Sa U (12) was a Full Bench case of the Lower Burma Chief Court. It dealt with a contest between a childless widow and the children of her deceased husband's two earlier marriages and decided that the widow is entitled to a one-fourth share of any "payin" property brought by her husband to his marriage with her, and to a seven eighths share of the property jointly acquired by her and her husband during their marriage. The decision in that case merely followed the rulings of this Court in the cases of Chitsaya and Mi So which the learned Judges in Lower Burma were content to accept as good law, and, therefore, threw no new light on the question now under consideration.

Maung Kyaw Yan v. Maung Po Win (13) merely followed Mi Gun Bon's case (6) in recognising step-children as heirs.

In Sein Tun v. Mi On Kra Zan (14) the contest was between a grand-child of the first wife on the one side and the second wife and her child on the other, and it was held that the grand child is entitled to a one-eighth share of the jointly acquired property of the second marriage, and the second wife to seven eighths, and that in the property brought by the grand father to the second marriage the second wife gets one-quarter, the grand-child three-fifths of the remaining three-quarters, and the second wife's child the remaining two fifths. That rule of partition obviously does not apply in a case like the present.

The case of Ma Leik v. Maung Nwa (15) involved a contest between the son of a first wife on the one side and the second wife and her family on the other, and decided that as against his step mother and her family the son is entitled to a half share in property inherited by the father after the death of the first wife and before marriage to the second, and that such property is an exception to the ordinary rule that the children of the first marriage as against their step-mother take a three-quarters share of the property which their father took to the second marriage. It is clear that that case is of little use as a guide in the present case.

In Mi Ohan Mya v. Mi Ngwe Yon (16) the child of the first wife sued her father's second wife and the child of the second marriage for her share of the property left by the father and it was held that in such a case the child of the first marriage takes a three fourths share of the property taken by the father to the second marriage and one-eighth of the jointly acquired property of the second marriage, but it is to be noted that my learned predecessor did not refer to any authorities in support of the latter rule but said merely that the texts were almost unanimous and that in the case before him the rule was not disputed.

In San Pe v. Ma Shwe Zin (17) the step-children sued their step-father's second wife and her children for their share of the property left by their step father, claiming that that property was partly jointly acquired property of their own parents and partly jointly acquired property of their mother and step-father.

As for the jointly acquired property of the first marriage it was held that, although the children of that marriage could have claimed their share in it from their mother on her marriage to the step father, nevertheless after their step-father's death, all they could claim from his widow and her children would be their own mother's separate property taken to her marriage with the step-father, and that they had no claim to the jointly acquired property of that marriage. As for the jointly acquired property of the marriage of the step-father with his later wife, it was held that "it is only when the surviving step-parent dies leaving no natural issue and no widow surviving that the children of the step-father's deceased wife by a former husband are entitled to the step-parents' property."

If the first part of the decision is good law it would apparently suffice for the disposal of the present case since the lands in dispute here are both "lettetpwa" of the marriage of the mother with the step-father, one being ordinary jointly acquired property and the other what is known as "inherited lettetpwa," that is, property inherited by one of the married couple, in this case the step father, during the subsistence of the marriage. Neither of the lands was the separate property of Ma Thaing and, therefore, if this ruling is correct, her children could not claim it from their step-father's widow. It seems to me, however, that that decision is not in accordance with previous rulings and is contrary to the authority of the recognised Dhammathats. It is based on the solitary "Panam" text cited in section 216 of the Digest and seems to me to misinterpret or misapply the extract from "Pyu" given in section 222. Both these texts start by saying that the step children have no interest as against the step father's surviving widow in the jointly acquired property of the step father and his last wife and this is of course reasonable because the step-children are not related by blood to either of the couple. But the view that the step-children have no interest in the property which the step father took to that marriage and which, as in the present case, may include the "lettetpwa" property of the marriage of the step-father and their own mother, seems to me unreasonable and contrary to the principles of Burmese Buddhist Law. Rules for partition between a step-father and his step children are contained in section 211 of the Digest and of the Dhammathats cited there the Kungye, Yazathat, Dhamma, Rajabala and Kungyalinga give the step-child one-fourth and the step-father three-fourths of the ordinary "lettetpwa" property of the marriage of the step father with the mother.

On the other hand, the Manussika, Dhamma, Manugye, Mann, Dayajja Ambwebon and Chittara give the step children one-sixth and the step parent five-sixths.

The reason for the division into three-fourths and one-fourth is intelligible.

The step-father takes his own half share of the jointly acquired property and half his wife's half share, that is, three-fourths, of the whole, while the step-son gets half his mother's half share, that is, one-fourth, as being co-heir with his father in respect of that half share.

The justification for the division into five-sixths and one-sixth is difficult to understand if only the step-father and the step-children are concerned.

It has been suggested that the one sixth share was chosen as a sort of mean between the share allotted to the child of a step-child, which is one eighth, and the share which the children of the marriage would receive if there were no step-children, but I do not think that this is probable particularly as this rule appears in the Manussika, which is, I believe, one of the oldest of the Dhammathats.

The only explanations of the rule which I can offer are, either, that it may be a survival from a time when the husband was regarded as having two shares in jointly acquired property to his wife's one or else that it is based on some passage in an old Dhammathat which dealt with the shares of the step-children and step-father in a case where there were also children of the marriage with the step-father. In such a case the step-father might be regarded as representing not only himself but his children, those children not being entitled to claim partition while he was alive, so that he would receive his own half share on his own account, while on behalf of his children, who would inherit from both parents, he would receive two shares out of his wife's half-share as against one share taken by the children who inherited from one parent only. That mode of partition would give the step-father five-sixths and the step-children one-sixth but, as I have said, it involves the assumption that there are two families and not only one. The rule in Manugye X, 10, which deals with a case where there are three families, is somewhat similar, the step-father taking on his own account his own half share of the jointly acquired property and one quarter of his wife's separate half share, that is five-eighths of the whole, while the children take three quarters of their mother's separate half share divided between them in the proportion of two shares to those who inherit through both parents, that is, two eighths, and one share to those who inherit through one parent only, that is, one eighth. If the same principle were applied to the case where there are only step children and step father, the result would be that the step father would take his own half share on his own account and one fourth of his wife's half share as her heir, that is, five eighths, while the step children would take three quarters of their mother's half share, that is, three eighths of the whole. One is tempted to suggest that the true explanation of the one sixth share might be that some scribe converted eight into eighteen, and so made the step children's share three eighteenths, that is, one sixth, instead of three eighths and that "five eighths" was then altered to five sixths to make it agree, but I think that the explanation I have suggested above is more probable and that the passages which give the step children one sixth tacitly assume that the marriage between the mother and step father had its natural results and that there were children of that marriage. This view possibly receives some slight support from the reference to children of the second marriage in the very passage of Manugye X, 8 which gives the step father a five sixths share. That passage runs as follows: "If, while the step son is living with the step father and mother the mother dies, let all the property which is with the mother be divided into four shares and let the husband take one. If, while the mother has been living with her second husband, she has received her parents' properties as inheritance, the said properties, because the husband has a right to the wife's property, though there is no child, shall belong half to the step father and half to the former son. If the grand son's share comes into possession in the step father's time the step father shall not enjoy it. It shall belong to the former son. If there are debts, let them pay them in the same proportions. If there is any property acquired while the mother and step father are living together, divide it into six shares and let the former son have one." The specific provision that the step father is to have half the mother's inherited property even though there is no child of the marriage seems to me to suggest that possibly in the other cases mentioned in that passage and particularly in the case of the five sixths share, the father was regarded as taking the share allotted to him not on his own account merely but on account of himself and his children by the mother, and that, therefore, it was necessary to say that the step father got half the inherited property on his own account even though there might be no children whom he could represent.

However that may be, it is clear that we have to choose between the authorities which give the step children a one fourth share and those which give them one sixth, and in view of the fact that the division into one fourth and three fourths is intelligible as following principles of partition which are recognised by the authorities and that the division into one sixth and five sixths does not seem to be consonant with any recognised principle unless it be assumed that it deals with a case where there are two families, and further that that rule of division would lead to the result that in respect of property inherited by the step father, which is differentiated from ordinary "lettetpwa" property, because the step father, as original owner of the property is regarded as having a larger interest in it than he has in ordinary jointly acquired property, the step son would have a larger share than he would have in ordinary "lettetpwa" property, I am of opinion that, in spite of the authority of Manugye, the former rule ought to be followed.

I shall, therefore, hold that as regards ordinary "lettetpwa" that is the jointly acquired property of the marriage between the mother and the step father, where, as in the present case, there are no children of that marriage and no children of the step father by any other marriage, the share of the step child is one fourth.

There remains for consideration the question as to what rule of partition is to be applied to property inherited by the step parent during marriage with the parent, which is differentiated from ordinary "lettetpwa." In all the reported cases where the rule of equal division between the step children and the step parent has been followed the property has been inherited by the parent and not by the step parent and I have been unable to find either in the Dhammathats or in the rulings any express rule for cases where the property was inherited by the step-parent.

The rule of equal shares obviously could not be fairly applied where the step-parent himself is the original owner of the property, and the first question to be decided is whether the step-child as heir of the parent takes any interest in property inherited by the step-parent, and, if so, what is the extent of that interest. There can be no doubt, I think, that the parent acquires by reason of the status of husband or wife some interest in such property, and, if so, one would expect the step child as one of the heirs of the parent to have a share in that interest.

It has been held that in cases where it is necessary to determine the interests of husband and wife in such property on divorce the rule is that two-thirds of the property belongs to the person who inherited it, and the remaining one-third to the other, but it has been suggested that that rule cannot be applied to cases of inheritance. It seems to me, however, that that very rule may itself be regarded as the basis of the rule for equal partition in the case of property inherited by the parent. In such a case, the step-parent would be entitled to one third in his or her own right and to one-fourth of the remaining two-thirds as heir of the parent, that two-thirds share being regarded as the parents' separate property after the deduction of the step-parent's one-third share. Similarly, the step-child as heir to the parent would be entitled to three-fourths of the parent's two-thirds share, the result being that the step-parent and the step child would each receive half since one third plus one-fourth of two-thirds is half and so is three-fourths of two thirds.

I think, therefore, that the two thirds and one-third rule may safely be applied to cases where the property was inherited by the step-parent no less than to cases where it was inherited by the parent.

The result of the adoption of that rule would be that, as against the step-parent the step-child is entitled to three-fourths of one-third, that is, to one quarter of the property inherited by the step-parent during marriage with the parent, and that the step parent by whom the property was inherited is entitled to two thirds and one-fourth of one-third, that is to three-fourths. These shares, it will be noticed, are the same as would have been obtained by regarding the property as ordinary "lettetpwa" and by applying the one-fourth and three-fourths rule, so that it might simplify matters to say that the rule of equal division applies only when the property has been inherited by the parent, and that if it has been inherited by the step-parent it is treated as ordinary "lettetpwa" property in which the step-child takes one-fourth and the step-father three-fourths. Strictly speaking, however, that would not be true because, although the result is the same, the shares are based on a different rule of partition.

I have now found that the step children are entitled, as against the step-father, to one-fourth of the jointly acquired property of his marriage with their mother and to one-fourth of property inherited by him during that marriage, and if they are so entitled as against the step-father himself, it is difficult to see on what principles of law or justice the fact that the step-father has married another wife should deprive them of that right. It seems to me that the wording of the passage from "Pyu", cited in section 222 of the Digest, indicates that the step-children can recover from their step father's widow the interest which they, as heirs of their mother, have in property left by their step-father and that the single passage from Panam, cited in section 216 of the Digest, is not sufficient authority for the contrary view.

As for the jointly acquired property of the marriage between the step-father and his later wife, both those passages expressly lay down the rule that the step-children have no interest in that property and as that rule is clear and reasonable, it must be accepted.

I hold therefore, that as against the step-father's widow the step-children are entitled to the share of the "lettetpwa" property of the marriage between their mother and the step-father, to which they were entitled as against their step-father, and that they are not entitled to any share in the "lettetpwa" property of the marriage between their step-father and his later wife.

Accordingly, in the present case I hold that Ma Nyein's interest in both the lands in dispute is one fourth and that the respondent's interest is three-fourths.

On the first ground of appeal, therefore, I find that the lower Courts were mistaken in holding that the appellants had no interest in the property in dispute and that the respondent was entitled to the whole of it.

As for the second ground of appeal, I do not think that the appellants established either that Chet Su gave them the "Kaing-daunggyi" land or that they were themselves the owners of the "Letpanbin" land. I have no doubt that they worked both lands, or at any rate a considerable part of both lands, for many years but in my opinion they must be held to have worked them as children of Chet Su and not as being themselves owners of them and they would acquire no title adverse to Chet Su or to respondent by so working them. I may, however, note in this connection that I do not think that the aspersions which both the lower Courts cast on the genuineness of the "pyatpaing" in suit were warranted by the facts. The Trial Court said that one important particular, namely, the character of the transaction, was not entered in the form and this was one of the grounds on which both Courts held that the document was a forgery. If the learned Judges had been more familiar with the way in which these documents are prepared, they would have known that Revenue Surveyors commonly enter in the space in which the nature of the transaction is intended to be inserted a reference to the list of kinds of transaction given on the back of the form. Frequently, they enter merely the number of the entry relating to that class of transactions in the list, but quite as often they enter the first words of that entry, and that is what was done in this case, the word "Ayadaw" being merely the first word of entry No. 12, see Note I of the form. There was, therefore, nothing suspicious in the form so far as this matter was concerned and, as a matter of fact, I think that it was possibly quite genuine. As, however, the appellants did not take the trouble to offer any evidence of the transaction beyond the form itself I do not think that they can complain if their case so far as it was based on that transaction failed. There was another matter also which they do not seem to have thought it worth while to put in evidence. It appears from the documents filed at the trial that the dispute between Ma Nyein and Chet Su about the property left in Chet Su's possession on Ma Thaing's death had been referred to arbitration, and, if, as appears to have been the case, an award was made, that award probably settled the matter now in dispute. As, however, neither side pleaded that award or offered any evidence of it, it cannot now be considered.

The third ground of appeal needs no discussion and the fourth has already been dealt with in considering the second.

On the case, as a whole, I hold that the respondent was entitled to recover three-quarters of each of the two plots of land from the appellants and, therefore, I set aside the judgments and decrees of the lower Courts and give judgment for the respondent for partition and possession of three quarters of the lands and not, as the lower Courts did, for possession of the whole lands.

As for respondent's claim to mesne profits, all that she could claim would be a fair rent for her share of the lands and as there is on the record nothing to show what a fair rent would be I do not see how I can give her a decree for mesne profits.

As the respondent has succeeded in respect of three quarters of her claim, she will get three-quarters of her costs through-out.

Decree set aside.

RAJANDRAMANIA DEVI GARU v. YELLAPPA RAMU NAIDU.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 919 AND 927
OF 1919.

August 27, 1920.

Present :—Justice Sir Abdur Rahim, Kt., and Mr. Justice Oldfield.

Sri Sri Sri RAJANDRAMANIA DEVI
GARU AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—

YELLAPPA RAMU NAIDU—DEFENDANT
—RESPONDENT.

D was in possession of home-farm land as usufructuary mortgagee. P. instituted a suit for redemption which was compromised and D. remained in possession for a term of years. On the expiry of this term P., treating the land as ryoti land, gave D. a lease of it on certain terms. P. now brought the present suit, under sections 77 and 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act, to recover rent on the basis of the lease. The suit was contested on the ground that D. having been admitted to possession of ryoti land, within the meaning of section 25 of the Act, he was not liable for rent :

Held, that as D. was previously in possession as usufructuary mortgagee up to the date of the lease, he could not be said to have been admitted to possession of ryoti land at the date of the lease; that section 25 of the Madras Estates Land Act had no application to the case, and that D. was liable for rent according to the terms of the lease. [p. 16, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court, Vizagapatam, dated the 20th December 1918, in Appeal Suit Nos. 303 and 314 of 1916, preferred against the decrees of the Court of the Sub-Collector, Narasapatam, dated the 5th May 1916, in Estates Land Act Suits Nos. 55 and 53 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. V. Ramesam (Government Pleader), for the Appellants.—The District Judge's finding that the home farm land was converted into ryoti land is erroneous. He was also wrong in holding that the plaintiff could not demand the contract rate of rent stipulated in the Kadapa but only to equitable rent. Section 25 of the Estates Land Act does not apply. The defendant could not be deemed to have been 'admitted into possession of ryoti land' within the meaning of the section as he was already in possession prior to the lease as mortgagee. The respondent wishes to adopt a strange position, to claim the benefits of occupancy rights while repudiating the other terms of the lease. Section 181 is silent as to the terms on which conversions from home-farm to ryoti lands could be made.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Respondent.—The plaintiff describes the land in the instrument of Kadapa as jeroyati land and the defendant is termed a ryot. He cannot now go back on that document and say that the land is still home-farm land.

The defendant was a person 'admitted to possession of ryoti land.' The explanation to sub-clause (2) of section 6 shows that where payments are received from tenants under section 45 the tenant shall be deemed to have been admitted to possession. Then on that principle under section 25 he is entitled to make the payment on the basis of what is fair and equitable.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant-respondent in this second appeal has been in possession of the land in dispute for a long time as usufructuary mortgagee. A suit was instituted by the plaintiffs appellants for redemption, and that suit was compromised in 1905. By that compromise the defendant remained in possession for seven years rent free. Then, in April 1912, he was given a Kadapa or lease of the land on certain terms and the plaintiffs have instituted this suit in the Revenue Court under the provisions of sections 77 and 192 of the Estates Land Act for the recovery of rent on the basis of that Kadapa. It is argued by Mr. Ramesam that the land is Seri or home-farm land; that the finding of the District Judge that, although it was home farm land originally, it had been converted into ryoti land is wrong and that we ought to set it aside. But we must hold that the plaintiffs by their own conduct debarred themselves, at least so far as this suit is concerned, from contending that the land is home farm land and not ryoti land so as to exclude it from the scope of the Estates Land Act. The plaintiff describes the land as jeroyati and the Kadapa relied on describes the land as jeroyati and the defendant as a ryot. We must decide this point against Mr. Ramesam.

The learned District Judge, however, has dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiffs are not entitled to the rent claimed by them, and they are entitled only to a fair and equitable rent on the basis of the previous mortgage-deed and as the amount which he had already paid exceeded the amount claimable on that basis the suit was liable to be dismissed. The learned District Judge was of opinion that section 25 of the Estates Land Act applied to this case. In our opinion he is wrong. The defendant could not be said in this case to have been 'admitted to possession' of ryoti land at the date of the Kadapa and Muchilika as he had been in possession previously as usufructuary mortgagee. The land until the date of the Muchilika was home farm land and the District Judge says that by the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant as evidence by the Kadapa and Muchilika the character of the land was changed from home farm into ryoti. It would be straining the language of section 25 too much to say that the defendant in this case was 'admitted to possession' of a ryoti land. That there is a distinction between admission of a ryot to possession and a ryot being in possession is not only clear from the ordinary meaning of the two phrases but the Legislature itself observed the distinction in various sections of the Act. The Explanation to sub-section (2) of section 6 which has been relied on by Mr. Narayanamurthi for the respondents makes a special provision with respect to section 45 by which a ryot occupying old waste and from whom rent has been recovered or received is deemed to be a person admitted thereby to possession. That Explanation supports Mr. Narayanamurthi's suggestion that the phrase "a person admitted to possession" does not ordinarily mean a person in possession. If the contention of the respondent was to be accepted it would lead to manifestly inequitable results. He wants to have the benefit of the contract by which he acquired occupancy or permanent rights in the lands, and at the same time herepudiates the other terms which induced the landlord to confer on him occupancy rights. If there is any provision of the Act itself by which such a result could be sustained the defendant's position could not be assailed, but since section 25 has no application to his case we are unable to hold that he is not liable to pay the rent which he contracted to pay when the land was converted from homefarm land into ryoti land. Section 181 contemplates such a conversion but the Legislature has not made any special provision as regards the terms on which such conversion may be made. In the absence of any such provision, the contract of the parties on the basis of which the conversion was made must be enforced.

The result is the decrees of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Upper Burma Registration Regulation (II of 1897), ss 4, 6—Document not signed, whether executed—Registration, whether necessary—Admissibility in evidence.

Documents which, according to Burmese custom, are complete without signature are "executed" within the meaning of section 4 of the Upper Burma Registration Regulation, and, when they fall within the purview of the section, require registration, and in the absence of registration are inadmissible in evidence by virtue of the provisions of section 6 of the Regulation. [p 18, col. 1.]

Mr. J. O. Chatterjee, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit with which I dealt in Civil Second Appeal No. 372 of 1919 of this Court, the plaintiff sued on a mortgage which she said had been recorded in a stamped document, and she called on the defendant to produce the deed.

The defendant denied the mortgage and naturally did not produce the writing recording it.

The plaintiff had no personal knowledge of the document but said that she got her information about it from her sister. She admitted that the document was not registered.

The sister, who was called as a witness, said that she was present when the document was written that it was written on an impressed sheet stamped with Rs. 3 but that it was not signed by the parties because they said, "It is all right if agreed."

In my judgment I suggested that the statement that the document was not signed was probably false and was intended to account for the failure to have the document registered, since the document was admittedly written on a stamped sheet with a view to its being used as a record of the transaction, and as the transaction was admittedly completed, there was no reason why the document also should not have been completed. I went on to say that even if the document was not signed it would still be compulsorily registrable, and I held that because it was not registered, neither the document itself nor secondary evidence of its contents could be received as evidence of the mortgage. I held, further, that under section 91 of the Evidence Act no evidence of the mortgage except the document itself or secondary evidence of its contents could be admitted to prove the mortgage, and that because neither the document nor secondary evidence of its contents was admissible, the mortgage could not be proved.

I am now asked to review that judgment on the ground that I ought to have held that the document was unsigned because it was not customary among Burmans to sign the documentary records of their transactions and that, therefore, the document was a nullity and might be regarded as non-existent.

This argument seems to me to involve a non-sequitur. If, as is suggested, Burmese records were complete without signature, it would not by any means follow that they were to be treated as nullities or as non-existent. It is true that parabaihs or palm-leaf documents were not usually signed, but this Court continually accepts, and has always accepted, such documents as complete records of the transactions embodied in them and as excluding oral evidence of those transactions. Section 91 of the Evidence Act says nothing about signing or execution. What it says is that, when the terms of a disposition of property have been reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms of such disposition except the document itself or secondary evidence of its contents in cases in which secondary evidence is admissible. The provisions of that section are sufficient to meet the argument that the document in this case could be disregarded, and as a matter of fact the plaintiff herself did not claim to disregard it but, on the contrary, made it the basis of her suit and called on the defendant to produce it.

In his argument in Court the plaintiff's learned Advocate has taken a different ground, and has suggested that the document in suit ought not to be excluded from evidence by reason of its being unregistered. He says that it cannot possibly have been the intention of the Upper Burma Registration Regulation that the unsigned records of transactions, which were usual among Burmans at the time when the Regulation was brought into force should be registered or that failure to have them registered should have the effect of making them inadmissible in evidence.

The Registration Regulation, which came into force at the end of 1897, expressly stated that a document which was required to be registered should not affect any immovable property comprised in it or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting that property unless it had been registered.

Under the Local Government's General Department Notification No. 25, dated the 17th February 1898, which was issued in exercise of the power conferred by section 4 of the Regulation, all non-testamentary instruments executed on or after the 1st of July 1898, and purporting or operating to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish any right, title, or interest in immovable property were required to be registered.

The question whether documents which, according to Burmese custom, were complete without signature could be said to be "executed" was considered by this Court in Queen Empress v. Mi Nan Thi (1) and in Mi Ta v. Nga Sein (2), and it was decided that such documents were "executed", at any rate, within the meaning of the Stamp Act of 1879. I have not been able to trace any published ruling in which the meaning of the word "executed" in section 4 of the Regulation or in Notifications under that section has been considered, but this Court has always held that such unsigned documents were compulsorily registrable and were inadmissible in evidence if unregistered and I see no reason to believe that that view is incorrect. It might possibly have been open to the Courts to hold that the intention of the Regulation and of the Local Government's Notification was to encourage the substitution of a more regular form of execution for the form then customary by allowing registration and its privileges to documents regularly executed and by denying those privileges to documents not so executed, but the Courts have never taken that view, and, in my opinion, it is clear from the Regulation and the Notifications themselves that the actual intention was that, for the future, all non testamentary documents affecting immovable property should be registered and if unregistered should be inadmissible in evidence.

The document in this case was not a para-lik or palm leaf document but was apparently a formal record written on stamped paper. Parties who recognized the necessity for a stamp rarely, if ever, adopted the Barmese form of recording their transactions without signatures and there was, therefore, some presumption that the present document was in the modern form and was signed. But even if it was in the old form and was unsigned it would still, in my view, be compulsorily registrable and would be inadmissible in evidence because it was admittedly unregistered.

I am of opinion, therefore, that my former judgment was correct and that sufficient reason for review has not been established.

The application is rejected.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 43 (5)—Occupancy rights, application for acquisition of—Receiver holding estate, application to, validity of.

Inasmuch as the term 'landholder' in sub-section (5) of section 46 of the Madras Estates Land Act is confined to a landholder who is the owner of the estate, an application for the acquisition of occupancy rights in an estate in the hands of a Receiver must be made to the landholder and not to the Receiver. A Receiver has no jurisdiction to entertain such an application. —[p. 19, cols. 1 & 2.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the orders of the Court of the District Collector, Tanjore, in Revision Petitions Nos. 3 and 4 of 1919, preferred against the orders of the Court of the Revenue Divisional Officer, Kumbakonam, in Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 31 and 21 of 1918 respectively.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Petitioners:—

The Revenue Courts erred in holding that a Receiver appointed by Court had no power to entertain applications under section 46 of the Estates Land Act. He stands in the shoes of the landholder. Under section 3, clause (5) landholder includes transferees from the owner and all persons entitled to collect rents. A Receiver appointed by a competent Court would come within this definition. He exercises all functions of the landholder in respect to the management of the property. There is no meaning in restricting unduly the scope of section 46. The word 'owner' should not be narrowly construed as 'beneficial owner.' See definition in section 7 of the Easements Act.

Mr. Varada Ohariar, for the Respondents.—Whatever may be the definition of 'landholder' in section 3 (5), section 46, clause (5) makes it clear who are competent to receive applications under the section. It is only the landholder who is the owner of the estate to whom the sums payable under the section have to be paid and applications have to be made only to such landholder. A Receiver does not fall within that category. It is needless to enquire into the object of the Legislature in making that distinction. The sub-section is plain.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—These cases arise out of an application made by certain tenants of the Palace Estate, which is under the management of a Receiver appointed by the Court, for the compulsory acquisition of occupancy rights under section 46 of the Estates Land Act. The Revenue Authorities decided against the ryots on the ground that section 46 precludes any application being made under it to a Receiver appointed by the Court as distinguished from the beneficial owner of the property. We have not found it necessary to decide the preliminary objection raised that no objection lies against the order of the Revenue Authorities as, on the merits, we are clearly of opinion that sub section 5 of section 46 is a bar to the present application of the ryots in the case. While in the main clauses of that section the word landholder alone is used, in clause (5) at the end, the Legislature has added: "The sums payable under this section for the acquisition of the occupancy rights shall be paid to the landholder who is the owner of the estate or part thereof and any application or proceeding under this section shall be made only to or against such landholder (which means the landholder who is the owner of the estate). "Landholder," as defined in section 3 clause (5), would include not only the owner of an estate but also persons who are entitled to collect the rents of the whole or any portion of the estate by virtue of any transfer from the owner or his predecessor in title or of any order of a competent Court or of any provision of law. This definition, therefore, would include a Receiver appointed by the Court as a landholder within the meaning of the Act. Therefore, sub section (5) to section 46 when it says that any application or proceeding under this section shall be made only to or against such a landholder "who is the owner of the estate" it clearly intended to exclude persons like a Receiver of the estate from the purview of that section. There is another section brought to our notice by Mr. Varada Chariar, the learned Vakil for the respondent, in which the same definition is found, namely, section 200. It is argued by Mr. Rajah Aiyar that a Receiver exercises all or most of the powers of the landholder with reference to the management of the property and, therefore, in several connections he has been held to stand in the shoes of the owner. That may very well be, but here we have to consider the express words of a Statute which clearly show that the Legislature intended to confine these proceedings against persons who are owners of the estate as distinguished from persons who may be entitled to collect the rents of the estate and to do other acts contemplated by the Act as landholder. It is not for us to speculate as to what the object of the Legislature was in drawing this distinction and in restricting the rights given to the ryots by section 46 to cases where the owner himself is in management of the property. The frame of this section, like that of several sections of the Act, is somewhat peculiar but there is no escape from its language which admits of no doubt as to the intention of the Legislature.

The result is that Civil Revision Petitions Nos. 643 and 644 are dismissed with costs.

ODDAR, J.—I agree. There is no doubt that a Receiver falls within the definition of a landholder in section 3 sub section (5) of the Madras Estates Land Act. See Receiver of Ammayanaikanur Zamin v. Suppan Ohetty (1). It is equally clear that the meaning of "landholder" as defined in section 3 sub-section (5) has been restricted by words in section 46 sub-section (5) for the purpose set forth in that section. Section 46 sub section (5) is very clear and lays down that "any application or proceeding under this section shall be made only to or against such landholder." Such landholder being defined just previously as the person "who is the owner of the estate or part thereof." The difficulty in construing this section arises, in my opinion, from the fact that the definition of landholder for the purposes of the section has been relegated to the last sub section instead of being clearly stated in the first. In view of the clear and unequivocal words of section 46 sub section (5) no good purpose is served by referring to decisions under other Acts in which the word "owner" has been held not to mean necessarily a beneficial owner, as for instance, section 7 of the Easements Act. The construction I put upon subsection (5) of section 46 of the Madras Estates Land Act is further strengthened by the distinction drawn between a landholder who is a landholder who is not owner in section 200 of the same Act.

I, therefore, think that the decision of the Revenue Authorities are right and that the Civil Revision Petitions Nos. 643 and 644 must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 20th November 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Hoshiarpur.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this suit claimed to be joint owners of a certain courtyard, and alleged that the defendants had erected certain chhappars or thatched sheds in front of their house and asked for a perpetual injunction to issue to them directing them to remove the said chhappars or thatched sheds and to restore the courtyard to its former condition. It was alleged that the said chhappars had been erected two years prior to suit. The defendants pleaded that they were the owners of the courtyard themselves, that the chhappars had been erected many many years ago and that the suit was barred by limitation. The Trial Court granted the plaintiffs a decree for the removal of these chhappars but on appeal the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the chhappars had been in existence for over six years and that the suit was barred by Article 120 of the Limitation Act. He accordingly dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs have now come up to this Court in second appeal through Lala Fakir Chand whom I have heard, while Dr. Nand Lal has addressed me on behalf of the respondents.

Lala Fakir Chand contended that, although the suit was one for the grant of a perpetual injunction, it was in essence a suit for possession, that, therefore, Article 144 of the Limitation Act applied and that the suit was within time. I may say at once that I am unable to accede to this contention. The suit was essentially a suit for the issue of an injunction and, although the injunction would have had the effect of restoring the courtyard to a state in which the plaintiffs might have been able to have a more extensive use of it than they have now, I am unable to see that this reason brings the suit for an injunction such as this within the four corners of Article 144.

It was then contended that the obstruction or interference with the rights of the plaintiffs was a continuing one and that for that reason section 23 of the Limitation Act applied and the suit was within time. Punja Kumar v. Bai Kuvar (1) and Kamphul Sahoo

(1) 6 B. 20; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 470.

LAL SINGH v. HIRA SINGH.

v. Misree Lall (2) were relied on by the learned Vakil. The Bombay suit referred to the right of user of a drain and the obstruction complained of was held to be a continuing nuisance. I am unable to see that this decision affords any assistance in the present case. In Ramphul Sahoo v. Misree Lall (2) it was held that, "if the plaintiff had been dispossessed from any portion of his land by an adverse possession having been taken by the defendant, the case would then fall within clause (12); but that if, on the other hand, no adverse possession had been taken by the defendant, then each act of trespass on the plaintiff's land would constitute a fresh cause of action, and whether the period be six years or twelve years, the plaintiff would be competent to rely upon the last act of trespass as constituting a cause of action." Here, by erecting these chhappars, the defendants have definitely taken possession of a portion of the joint land, and that their intention was to take adversely to the rest of the world is evidenced to some extent by the fact that in answer to the present suit they pleaded that the land was their own property. Mr. Fakir Chand then put his case in this way. He said that his clients had a right to enjoy the courtyard including the land under the chhappars. Their erection prevents them from doing so and, so long as these chhappars stand, this disability continues and, therefore, section 23 of the Limitation Act is applicable. By the provisions of section 23 in the case of a continuing wrong independent of contract a fresh period of limitation begins to run at every moment of the time during which the wrong continues. In Achar Singh v. Badhawar Singh (3), a suit for ejectment from a specific field which was recorded as part of a thoroughfare and shamlat instituted nominally on behalf of the village community to remove an obstruction to the enjoyment of the shamlat by the proprietors generally, it was held that section 23 of the Limitation Act did not apply. In Ashutosh Sadukhan v. Corporation of Calcutta (4) a platform had been built by the plaintiff upon a portion of a street or drain vested in the Calcutta Municipal Corporation. This platform had been in existence for about half a century and was an integral part of his building. The Municipal Corporation demanded its removal claiming the land upon which it stood. The plaintiff then instituted a suit for a declaration of his right to the land upon which the platform stood. On behalf of the Calcutta Municipal Corporation section 23 of the Limitation Act was appealed to. It was, however, held that it had no application. Similarly, in the present case it seems to me that section 23 does not apply. The moment the chhappars were erected the injury complained of and sought to be removed by the issue of an injunction was complete. I do not think that there was any continuing injury within the meaning of the Statute. The effect, no doubt, continues but this does not, I think, extend the time of limitation. Kanakasabai v. Muttu (5) also appears to me to be in point. I accordingly am of opinion that the learned District Judge has rightly applied Article 120.

Finally, Lala Fakir Chand contended that inasmuch as the chhappars have been shown to exist for more than four years in the present suit, the suit in its entirety should not have been dismissed. It has been found as a fact that the chhappars had existed for more than six years and it would be, I think, exceedingly difficult to ascertain the exact size of these chhappars. The plaintiffs on whom the onus lay to prove their case alleged that they had been erected only two years before suit. This has been found to be wrong and I do not see how I can hold differently. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Where the parties to a suit themselves effect a compromise, and the fact of the compromise is conveyed to the Court by means of a petition presented by the Pleaders appearing on both sides, it is not open to the parties to question the compromise on the ground that the Pleaders had no authority to compromise. [p. 22, col. 2.]

A compromise by a trustee in good faith of a suit relating to trust property is lawful and the Court will not, in such a case, enquire whether the compromise is or is not beneficial to the trust [p. 23, col. 1.]

Appeal and revision petition against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 45 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Srirangam, in Original Suit No. 453 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasa Gopalachariar, for the Appellants:—The appellants' Pleader had no power to compromise the suit on behalf of his clients. There was no provision in his vakalat empowering him to do so. The compromise petition is signed by the Pleader when he could not actively adjust the subject-matter of the suit.

It is not a lawful compromise within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code. The suit related to a trust and the trustee could not compromise it.

Mr. T. R. Venkatrama Sastriar, for the Respondents:—All that the Pleaders had done was to present the compromise petition to Court. The parties effected the compromise and drew a petition to have it recorded. They have signed it and they are bound by its terms. There is no question here of the Pleader's authority to compromise as they have not done it.

The objection that the appellant did not authorise his Pleader to file the vakalatnamah comes too late. No affidavit to that effect was filed in the lower Court and no application was made to it to have the razi decree set aside.

As to a trustee's powers to compromise a suit relating to the trust there can be no objection to that course if the compromise is for the benefit of the trust.

No authority contra has been shown. Besides, the trustee acted in good faith.

JUDGMENT.—The razinama petition states that it was presented by the parties, that is to say, through their Pleaders, and it also contains a clear and full statement of the views of the parties to the compromise. The matter is set forth in the petition and there is nothing in the record to suggest that this statement is not correct. The petition is signed by the Pleaders appearing on both sides. But it is now said that the appellant did not in fact authorise his Pleader to file this razinama. If that were so, he would at once have brought the matter to the notice of the Court and filed an application to have the decree set aside, or at least he would have filed an affidavit before us stating that the Pleader was not authorised to file this petition. In the absence of any such affidavit, it is not possible for us to act upon a mere statement made by the Pleader appearing before us under instructions.

Then it is argued that the vakalatnamah did not empower the Vakil to compromise the suit. He did not compromise it of his own accord, but it was compromised by his client; and all that he did was to convey the fact of the compromise to the Court. The compromise being embodied in the petition he undoubtedly had the power to present it to the Court in conducting the case and the Court acted upon the petition.

It is also suggested that the compromise is unlawful. It is very difficult to see how that is made out unless a broad proposition is established for which no authority has been cited and which is clearly untenable.

Article 81 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act makes limitation begin to run from the time when the surety pays the creditor and the principal debtor remains liable to be sued for three years only after this payment has been made. [p. 26, col. 2.]

Where the payment made by the surety is made in satisfaction of a decree obtained by the creditor limitation as against the principal begins to run from the date on which the surety pays the money into Court and not from the date on which the creditor draws it out. [p. 27, col. 1.]

Mr. S. Mukerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Since this appeal was filed Yinke Supaya has died and the second appellant Maung Maung Gale carries it on as her legal representative as well as on his own account.

In Civil Suit No. 141 of 1907 of the District Court, Mandalay, C. T. P. A. Chetty obtained a decree dated 3rd July 1907 against the two appellants and respondent in the following terms :—

"It is ordered and decreed that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (Yinke Supaya and Maung Maung Gale) do pay to plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,157 (Rupees one thousand one hundred and fifty-seven only) and costs with further interest at one per cent. per mensem. Time to redeem till 3rd January 1908.

In default of payment on or before the above period the mortgaged property, being Holding No. 18/10 in Block No. 50, situated at Mawyagiwa Quarter, Mandalay, together with all the buildings thereon may be sold by auction and the proceeds applied in and towards payment of decree and costs. If there be any deficiency, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are ordered to pay it.

Against Maung Po Kin there is only a money decree as surety in case defendants Nos. 1 and 2, wife and husband, default.

In the mortgage document it was stated that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 alone mortgaged the property, and the covenant for repayment was made jointly by them and the third defendant as surety. The meaning of the last clause of the above decree, therefore, clearly is that all three are, in the last event, liable for the amount due but the mortgaged property is to be first sold before the third defendant becomes liable. What is then left over is a money decree for any balance against all three according to the covenant for re-payment, with an order that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are to pay it and if they "default" the third defendant is to be as a surety.

As the amount was not paid within the time fixed, the mortgaged property was sold in Civil Execution No. 332 of 1908, the application being dated 24th August

YINKE SUPAYA v. MAUNG KIN.

1908, and realised Rs. 437 on 4th November 1908, and the sale was confirmed on 7th December 1908 and the amount paid out on a chellan dated 12th December 1908.

It is not suggested that the mortgagore had any other property from which the Chetty could have made up the deficiency and it is also quite clear that, once the mortgaged property was sold and out of the way, the Chetty could hold the surety liable on his money decree and leave him to recover from the principal debtors. The Chetty then applied on 24th July 1911 against the surety (Civil Execution No. 159 of 1911) by attachment of his pay—he being a Government Clerk—and, as there were other attaching creditors, a pro rata share was credited each month to the Chetty's decree. When this amounted to Rs. 1,130-9-0 Maung Kin filed Civil Suit No. 32 of 1919 against the principal debtors to recover Rs. 842 9 0 only as he admitted that as to Rs. 258 his claim was time-barred. His suit was dated 20th February 1919 and he claimed that the cause of action (leaving aside the Rs. 258) arose as to Rs. 824 3-0 on the 20th September 1918 and as to Rs. 18 6 0 on the 29th October 1918 those being the dates on which the Chetty had withdrawn the amounts from the Court. He claimed to recover as he had been compelled to pay under process.

The defendants pleaded that the Chetty's decree was barred as against the surety at the time when he executed it and that the surety should have raised this objection. In other words, they said that it was a voluntary payment by the surety and they were not liable to refund it. They also pleaded that the payments to the Chetty were made by monthly instalments and that only those made within three years of suit were within time. It is now said that on this basis, instead of counting from the dates of withdrawal, Rs. 611 8-0 would be recoverable at Rs. 18 6 0 a month but this requires correction as will be seen as the amounts credited monthly were Rs. 15 for most of the period and varied for the remainder. The plea amounted to this that limitation began to run from the payment into, and not the payment out of, Court. They also said the calculations of interest were wrong but this is not now urged. The only issue fixed was, "is the present suit time barred as regards sums paid into Court in execution by plaintiff more than three years previous to this suit?"

There was no issue on the plea that the Chetty's decree was time-barred and that the surety had made a voluntary payment, and the diary shows that the single issue was framed in the presence of the Advocates for both sides on a date previously given for fixing issues. The Advocates were heard in argument on a subsequent date and orders passed on the following day. There is nothing to show that the defendants' Advocate asked for another issue, and in the judgment the Judge dismisses the matter with the remark "the Chetty proceeded against Maung Kin in Execution Case No. 159 of 1911 on 24th July 1911. That application was clearly in time under Article 182, Limitation Act." It is, therefore, obvious that the Advocate did not press the point in the lower Court and gave up the plea of the voluntary payment of a time barred debt, on being convinced that it was not sustainable. On the point put in issue the lower Court held that limitation ran from the date of withdrawal, following the rulings in Fuskoruddeen Mahomed Ahsan v. Mohima Chunder Chowdhury (1) and Pattabhiramayya Naidu v. Ramayya Naidu (2), and it decreed the amount sued for.

It is now objected on appeal that the Chetty's decree was barred by the 24th July 1911, and the surety's payment was a voluntary one and, further, that the above Indian cases were wrongly decided on the point as to when limitation begins to run.

There is, as I have pointed out, no issue on the former objection and it must be presumed that the Court fixed the only issue that was found to arise, and there is no note by the Judge that any other issue was suggested.

The Advocates could only argue on the one legal issue fixed, and if an objection had been raised here against the revival of an argument which had been abandoned at the hearing I should have allowed the objection.

It has not, however, been raised. The Chetty's application for execution against Yinke Supaya and Maung Maung Gale is dated 24th August 1908 and that against Maung Kin, the surety, is 24th July 1911, that is within three years but it is urged that the decree is not joint but several, and that, according to the latter part of Explanation I to Article 182, First Schedule, Limitation Act, the application made under Article 182 (5) on 24th August 1908 has effect only against the persons it was made against. If so, this means that it does not keep the decree alive as regards Maung Kin so that it cannot be used as a fresh starting point when applying against him; and to this it is replied that the decree was joint, but was not executable against Maung Kin until the Chetty had sold the mortgaged property at any rate, as 'that was to be exhausted before any liability began to attach to Maung Kin, and he would not be liable for anything if the mortgaged property had realised the full amount due.

To show that the decree in this case is not joint I am referred to the cases of Narayan v. Timmaya (3) and Kusari v. Vinayak (4).

The first of these cases does not apply here, as the surety there became such only after the suit was filed and before the decree, and it was held that the words "passed jointly" in Article 179 (corresponding to the present Articles 182) do not refer to a case where the surety was not a party, but became liable by the aid of section 203 (now section 145), Civil Procedure Code. In the present case the surety was a defendant in the suit and the decree is against him too. In the second case a surety made himself liable for the principal sum of money only but not for interest and costs for which the principal debtor was the only person liable. The decree-holder applied for execution against the surety for principal and also interest and costs, and, when he failed to get the latter, he applied for them against the principal debtor, more than three years after the decree.

(4) 23 B. 478; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 313

It was held that the decree was one that distinguished portions of the subject-matter as payable or deliverable by each and that the former application could not support the second which was, therefore time-barred. In the judgment it was remarked: "The authorities cited on behalf of the appellant only go to show that where a decree imposes a joint liability upon several persons execution taken out against any one of them is a step-in-aid of execution against the rest."

The question is, whether the present decree is one that distinguishes portions of the subject-matter as payable or deliverable by each judgment-debtor, and a reference to the decree will show that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are first made liable for the amount due both personally and by sale of their property, and that the third defendant is then made liable for the amount on their default. The liability of the surety is co-extensive with that of the principal debtors but is only deferred for a time. If the mortgage property had been destroyed and nothing could be got from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 the surety would have had to pay the whole amount. In the mortgage-deed it is distinctly stated that all three are jointly liable for the principal and interest together with expenses as also costs if the creditor has to sue. The suit was for the re-payment of money and I cannot see that there is any portion of the subject-matter of that suit, which is to recover Rs. 1,157 due on a mortgage, which is payable or deliverable by one and not by the other, and I must hold that the only effect of the decree is that the surety's liability is postponed until after recourse has been had to the property of the principal debtors. It is true that the Chetty's first application was for sale of the property, and could not have been made against the surety, but this is only a detail in the execution of the decree, which is for money for which all are liable.

I hold, therefore, that the decree was not barred against the surety when the Chetty applied for execution against him.

Even if it were otherwise, there is some authority for holding that if the Court issued execution even erroneously the payments made are not voluntary and that the error of the Court cannot be taken advantage of.

YINKE SUPAYA v. MAUNG KIN.

refuse contribution [Shib Ohunder Bidyaruttun v. Huree Doss Bhattacharjee (5) and Mangul Pershad Dichit v. Gria Kant Lahiri (6)].

It seems to me that Article 181 actually applies to the present case and not Article 182. It has been held that the former Article 179 (now 182) only applies where there is a decree which is at once executable and not otherwise and that Article 178 (now 181) is the proper one where the application cannot be made at once. [Chhedi v. Lalu (7), Ali Ahmad v. Naziran Bibi (8)] In this case the Chetty could not apply against the surety at any rate till the mortgage property was sold and that was only confirmed on 7th December 1908. He would then have three years within which to apply against the surety. In any event, the application was not time barred.

As regards the other argument that Maung Kin's suit must be brought within three years of the dates of payments into Court, it is said that about Rs. 660 would be payable on this basis instead of Rs. 842.

No doubt, Article 81 applies and the only question is whether the surety has "paid the creditor" when his money is paid into Court or when the decree-holder draws it out. It is admitted that two cases relied on by the lower Court are authorities for the latter but it is urged that they are wrongly decided. As a matter of fact, both are cases of contribution, and the special Article 81 did not apply. They do, however, lay down the principle that the date of drawing out from Court governs limitation and not the date of realization by the Court.

It is urged on behalf of the appellants that immediately payment is made into Court the money passes out of the ownership of the judgment-debtor and can be attached by other decree holders, or rather that they can claim rateable distribution if they have satisfied the conditions of section 73, Civil Procedure Code. It is also urged that the lower Court should not have used the analogy of Article 182, and the cases under it, when Article 81 clearly lays down a limitation of three years from the payment by the surety.

(7) 24 A. 301; A. W. N. (1902) 60.

What the lower Court followed were the rulings of a preponderance of the High Courts under Article 182 that an application to withdraw money from Court is a "step-in-aid of execution," and, therefore, creates a fresh starting point for the next application, but this, it is urged, does not justify holding that "payment to the creditor" under Article 81 is made only when an application to withdraw is filed or payment out of Court made. The Chetty in this case, it may be noted, applied on 16th August 1918 to withdraw an accumulation of monthly instalments and received payment on 20th September 1918. This will certainly keep alive the decree as against Maung Kin if necessary, but will it affect Maung Kin's right of suit against the appellants?

I do not see what connection there is between the two, and it seems to me that the only point is, whether the two cases of Fackoruddeen Mahomed Ahsan v. Mohima Ohunder Chowdhury (1) and Pattabhiramayya Naidu v. Rimayya Naidu (2) are rightly decided and should govern this case. They were both of them suits for contribution and Article 81 did not apply, and the case quoted by the respondent's Advocate, namely, Abraham Serou v. Raphael Muthirian (9), does not help as it only says that the right to sue arises when payment is actually made. The question here is what constitutes payment by the surety.

In the case of Fackoruddeen Mahomed Ahsan v. Mohima Ohunder Chowdhury (1) it was held that under Article 100 of the Act of 1871, corresponding to the present Article 99, the cause of action arose when the sale proceeds were drawn out of Court by the decree-holder and in the case of Pattabhiramayya Naidu v. Rimayya Naidu (2) the learned Judges said that they were disposed to follow this decision, assuming that the case came under Article 61. There was no argument on the point in either of these cases, and, therefore, nothing to show the grounds on which the decisions were based.

Article 81 makes limitation begin to run from the time when the surety pays the creditor and the principal debtor remains liable to be sued for three years only after this payment has been made. In this case the Chetty allowed nearly four years' instalments to accumulate before he withdrew the money, and it has been held that there is no bar of limitation for an application to withdraw money standing to a party's creditor in Court, so that even fifteen years after the money could be withdrawn [see Apurba Krishna Roy v. Chundermoney Debi (10)]. If so, and if the withdrawal starts limitation running, it is clear that a principal debtor's liability can be indefinitely extended by neglect of the decree-holder to take his money out of Court. This was surely not intended, and I think it is clear that the payment must be regarded from the point of view of the surety's parting with his money and crediting it to the decree-holder's account. It was definitely placed to his credit in Court in this case just as if it had been paid into his credit at his bank, and the Court could no more refuse to give it to him on his application than his bank could.

In the case of Torab Ali Khan v. Nilruttun Lal (11) it was held under Article 61 that the money was paid and the cause of action arose when the decretal amount was paid into Court, and if that constitutes payment under Article 61, I do not see why it does not equally constitute payment under Article 81. As the creditor in this case had got a decree the payments were made through the Court but it seems to me that they were payments to the creditors all the same. The surety could certainly sue the principal debtor at once without waiting till the Chetty chose to withdraw the money, and this seems to conclude the matter because, if the period of limitation once begins to run, it must continue without interruption (section 9) and will have run out in three years.

I must, therefore, respectfully differ from the findings to the contrary, and hold that in this case payment to the surety was made when the money was credited in Court.

The suit was brought on 20th February 1919 and the plaintiff sued only for the amounts withdrawn, including Rs 18 6 0 received in Court on 12th October 1918. He has specified the particular sums and, although he has paid stamps to cover a larger amount than he will now get, I do not think I can allow him in this suit to include further payments in it, for which he has not sued.

The payments in which he can recover begin on 4th March 1916 and amount to Rs. 575-12-0. The Rs. 18-6-0 cannot be included as this was for balances not drawn of payments made in 1914 and 1915.

The decree of the lower Court will be modified and there will be a decree for Rs. 575-12-0 with costs on that amount.

The enfranchisement of service inam lands in the name of the office holder does not per se debar a divided member of the office holder from claiming a share in the enfranchised lands [p. 29, col. 1.]

Where a divided member sues for a share in the lands enfranchised the onus lies on him to prove that he is a member of the original service holder's family and that at any partition which has taken place among the members of the family the inam lands were kept out of partition as undivided property in which all the members retained joint rights. [p. 29, col. 2; p. 30, col. 1.]

The sole possession of the inam lands by the office holder is not per se adverse to the other members of the family divided or undivided so as to deprive them of any interest they might possess. [p. 29, col. 2.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. Rama Row, for the Appellant:—The office of karnam with its emoluments vested originally in the joint family of second plaintiff and first defendant. The partition of 1874 did not affect the rights of the divided members to share in the inam lands at time of enfranchisement. If the family had remained joint plaintiff could have claimed his share in the enfranchised inam. Pingala Lakshmipathi v. Chalamayya (1) and Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (2) The fact of partition did not extinguish their rights. The co-parcenary revived on enfranchisement. See Second Appeal No. 49 of 1911, Appeal Suit 79 of 1917 and Appeal Suit 176 of 1917.

The first defendant's branch were in possession as they were doing the work of the office and no presumption can be drawn from that circumstance against the plaintiff's rights. Enfranchisement does not confer on the title holder any rights in derogation of those who are in possession or are interested in the office. Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (2) and Pingala Lakshmipathi v. Chalamayya (1).

Mr. P. Narayanamurthy, for the Respondents:—The divided members can lay no claim to the enfranchised lands. Whatever may be the effect of enfranchisement, the effect of the partition of 1874 was to cut off the plaintiff's branch from first defendant's branch and they have been living separate since. There is no evidence of an agreement between them that these lands were to be kept intact. The enfranchised lands became, on enfranchisement, the separate property of the office holder. See Audi Raju Pyrappa v. Audi Raju Syama Rao (3). See also Privy Council decision in Durga Prasad Singh v. Trebini Singh (4).

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—No point of law arises in this appeal except in connection with Items Nos. 1—19 and 25 of plaintiff Schedule A.

These were originally karnam service inam lands and were enfranchised in 1906 in the name of first defendant who was then holding the office of karnam. Second plaintiff and first defendant belong to what was originally the same joint family in which the post of karnam vested. According to the plaintiff, partition never took place; but it is found as a fact that a partition did take place about 1874 and that second plaintiff's branch and first defendant's branch then became divided and have been living separately since. It is, however, contended that this does not affect plaintiff's claim to a share of the service inam lands in enfranchisement.

As it is expressed in paragraph 13 of the plaintiff: "The enfranchisement of the properties converts them into family property and enures for the benefit of all the members of the service holder's family existing at the time of enfranchisement, whether divided or undivided."

The sole question before us is, whether this contention is correct. It is admitted that before partition the office of karnam and the emoluments of that office vested in the family to which second plaintiff and defendants belong and it is not seriously disputed that, if the family had remained undivided up to the time of enfranchisement, plaintiff as a member of it would have been entitled to a share in the enfranchised property. The latter proposition in fact follows from the rulings Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (2) and Pingala Lakshmipathi v. Chalamayya (1) and although some doubt was thrown on the latter by reference to the judgment of the Privy Council in Durga Prasad Singh v. Trebini Singh (4) can find nothing in the latter which could be interpreted as overruling by implication these decisions which have so long been followed.

It is argued, however, on behalf of defendants that the effect of the partition of 1874 was to put an end to any interest in the office and its emoluments on the part of plaintiff and that, on enfranchisement, the enfranchised lands became the property only of the office holder, first defendant, and any persons who were joint with him at the time of enfranchisement. This argument has been accepted by the District Judge who has dismissed the appeal, relying on the decision of Spencer and Krishnan, JJ in Audi Raju Pyrappa v. Audi Raju Syma Rao (3).

It will be clear from a careful perusal of the judgments in that case that the two learned Judges took materially different views of the matter. Spencer, J., undoubtedly held that the fact of partition was conclusive that no member of a divided branch of the family would, in any circumstances, whatever have a right to claim a share in the enfranchised lands and that the latter vested, after enfranchisement, only in the last office holder in whose name it was enfranchised and in those persons who formed a joint family with him at the time of enfranchisement. Krishnan, J., as I understand his judgment, was not prepared to go so far. He draws attention to three unreported cases in which it has been held that members of the family of the original grantee who had become divided from the person who held office at the time of enfranchisement were nevertheless entitled to share in the enfranchised service inam. These cases are Second Appeal No. 49 of 1911, Appeal Suit No. 79 of 1917 and Appeal Suit No. 176 of 1917. Krishnan, J., says:—"The rulings thus show that even though a person may have been divided off from the person who subsequently obtained the title deed for the enfranchised land he may prove that his right was kept intact at the partition and may claim his share."

With this view I am in entire agreement. I was a party to two of the unreported cases above cited. In Appeal Suit No. 79 of 1917 as in the earlier case Second Appeal No. 49 of 1911 decided by Benson and Sundaram Aiyar, JJ., it was found as a fact that the service inam lands were treated as joint family property after partition. In the last case, Appeal Suit No. 176 of 1917, the question of what happened at partition appears to have been decided mainly on the pleadings. The respondent in that case endeavoured to set up before us a specific allotment of the service inam to the share of his branch at partition. We disallowed this plea in appeal in the absence of any mention of such allotment in the written statement and on this disallowment it appears to have been accepted without demur on the part of respondent that the property remained joint in spite of partition. The plea of subsequent adverse possession was also disallowed and that plea is not now raised before us. The sole possession of an office holder being sufficiently explained by his indisputable right to exclusive enjoyment as long as he held office, could not be held to be, per se, adverse to other members of the family divided or undivided so as to deprive them of any interest which they might possess.

After further consideration of the point, I remain of opinion that the fact of partition from the person in whose name the service inam is enfranchised is not conclusive against a claim to co-parcenary rights in the enfranchised inam lands. Whether the co-parcenary right survives will have to be determined as a fact in each case. It may be that the office, with the inam attached to it, was allotted at partition to the co-parcener then holding office as a part of his share. In such a case persons divided from him would obviously have no rights after enfranchisement. It may be that, in view of the peculiar nature of the tenure and legal impossibility of severing the lands or any portion of them from the office, the inam was kept undivided on the understanding that, although till enfranchisement only the office holder could enjoy it, yet in the event of enfranchisement all members would be entitled to share. It may be that as in Second Appeal No. 49 of 1917 and Appeal Suit No. 79 of 1917 the other co-parceners were actually allowed by the office holder to enjoy some portion of the inam land or its profits. All that can be said is that, if a divided member claims to share in an enfranchise-ment service land, the onus lies on him of proving, not only that he is a member of the original service family, but that at any partition which has taken place, the inam was kept out of partition as undivided property in which all the sharers retained joint rights. This is in accordance with the law in all cases of partition.

If this onus is borne in mind I do not think the practical difficulties anticipated by Spencer, J., are likely to prove very formidable but, in any case, if my view of the law is correct they will have to be faced.

I would, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court as far as it relates to Items Nos. 1—19 and 25 of plaint Schedule A and remand the appeal for fresh disposal in the light of the above remarks.

In other respects, the decree of the District Judge may be confirmed. Costs in this Court may be provided for in the final decree of the District Judge.

ODGERS, J.—This is a suit for partition, and the point for decision, as stated by the District Judge, is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a moiety of the karnikam service inams (Items No. 1—19 and 25 Scheduled A) or whether these lands became the exclusive property of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on their enfranchisement. The parties originally formed one undivided Hindu family. Both the lower Courts held that the family became divided long prior to the enfranchisement of the inams in 1906 and there was no argument before us on this point. The Munsif held that plaintiffs were entitled to a share in the service inams, the District Judge relying on the decision of this Court reported in Audi Raju Pyrappa v. Audi Raju Syma Rao (3) held they were not.

It may be said at the outset that there is no direct evidence as to what was done at partition in respect of these inams. It may, of course, be that they were then expressly allotted to defendant's share as representing the office holder and his family at the time of enfranchisement. It may again be that the inams were expressly reserved for the divided members or again that nothing was said as to these.

Now, it is clear that no conclusion can be drawn from the fact that possession remained with defendant's branch, as they were admittedly doing the work of the office. The decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Pingala Lakshmi pathi v. Ohalamayya (1) stated that enfranchisement does not confer on the persons named in the title-deed any rights in derogation of those possessed by the person in the inam at time of enfranchisement. It is also clear that at the time of enfranchisement the whole family was interested in the inam i.e., they had a right more or less contingent to be appointed to the office, unless some binding arrangement in derogation of that right had been entered into. So Mr. Justice Bhasbyam Iyengar in Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (2) said: "The freehold title will enure for the benefit of such person or family, as, at the time when the service inam was enfranchised was entitled to the hereditary office, no matter in whose name the enfranchisement was effected and the title-deed issued." It is true that the learned Judge in that case had not to consider the intervention of a partition, but the question is, would that necessarily make any difference. In my opinion it would not, unless, as before stated, some special arrangement was come to at partition whereby the inam was expressly reserved to a particular branch of the family.

The respondent's Vakil was willing to admit that the inams were not expressly reserved to defendant's branch at partition but submitted he is nevertheless entitled to succeed on the ruling in Audi Raju Pyrappa v. Audi Raju Syma Rao (3) where Spencer, J., held that no body belonging to a divided branch would have a right to come in and take a share of the property of the joint family and Krishnan, J., said "there is nothing to show that lands were treated as joint family property either before or after enfranchisement or that any rights were reserved after partition".

With deference, the opinion of Spencer J., goes too far. At the time of the partition the inam lands would naturally be impartible and would only subsequently become partible on enfranchisement and, further, it is clearly impossible to say in face of the authorities that the other members of the family could, under any circumstances, have a right to come in. Krishnan, J., was evidently impressed with the fact that the lands had all along been in the possession of the first defendant. The decisions quoted above show that this could not of itself effect the interest of the other members. Further, the learned Judge goes on to say that a divided member may show that his right was kept alive at the partition and may claim his share. He, however, holds, on the facts of the case before him, that there was no evidence to support such a claim. The onus would naturally be heavily on a divided member to establish his contention, which onus might be more difficult to discharge with lapse of time. This, however, is, of course, a totally different thing from debarring the divided member from the opportunity of proving such a claim.

There are three unreported decisions of this Court, Second Appeal No. 49 of 1911, Appeal Suit No. 79 of 1917 and Appeal Suit No. 176 of 1917 (now before the Privy Council). To the last of these my brother Ayling, J., was a party. It was held in all these that the divided members were entitled to share in the enfranchised inam. In Second Appeal No. 49 of 1911 it was said, "the land in question being emoluments of the Reddi office was left undivided at the time of the partition-deed, Exhibit A, but it is not disputed that it was then treated as property in which all the members of the family had an interest." In Appeal Suit No. 79 of 1917 it was not contended that the suit lands fell to the share of the first defendant's branch at partition and the learned Judges say there can be no doubt that the inam lands were enjoyed in common after partition.

In Appeal Suit No. 176 of 1917 Mr. Narayanamurthi who also appeared in Appeal Suit No. 79 of 1917 did not argue the effect of enfranchisement, having regard to the decision (delivered fifteen days previously) in Appeal Suit No. 79 of 1917 and, following that decision and relying apparently upon the fact that the defendant nowhere in his written statement set up an assignment to his branch, on partition the learned Judges passed a decree for plaintiff's share in the inam lands. Thus Krishnan, J., in Audi Raju Pyrappa v. Audi Raju Syma Rao (3) disposes of these unreported decisions by saying that, "in all of these cases there were circumstances justifying the inference that, in spite of partition, the rights of the divided members were kept alive." The case reported in Durga Prasad Singh v. Trebini Singh (4) was quoted by the respondent's Vakil where their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the incidents of ghatwali tenure in that case was not such as to give the family any rights over the property while it was in the hands of the ghatwal and that the latter was not a trustee of or managing member of the family. In that case the plaintiff relied on and asserted actual possession and receipt of their share of the rents and profits by his vendor or their predecessors-in-title and his evidence on the point was disbelieved.

It will be observed that the decision was confined to a particular instance of ghatwali tenure and that the Madras decision [Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (2)] was not quoted to or considered by their Lordships. I do not, therefore, understand this decision of the Privy Council as overruling the Madras case.

As a result of the foregoing observations, I must, with great respect, differ from the opinion of Spencer, J., in Audi Raju Pyrappa v. Audi Raju Syma Rao (3) and, on the basis of the judgment of Bashyam Aiyangar, J., in Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (2), I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

Madras Estates Land Act (1 of 1908), ss. 45, 163—Eviction of trespasser—Mesne profits, recovery of, as damages—Civil Court, jurisdiction of, nature of.

Under section 163 of the Madras Estates Land Act a Civil Court has no power to award anything else than the sum payable under section 45.

If a land-holder wishes to treat a trespasser as such and to recover mesne profits as damages from him, he must first apply to the Collector under section 45 of the Madras Estates Land Act to get the amount of the latter determined and then bring his suit in the Civil Court under section 163 of the Act.

Second appeal and Miscellaneous appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna at Ellore, in Appeal Suits Nos. 78 and 92 of 1914, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tanuku, in Original Suit No. 443 of 1912.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi (with him Mr. K. Kamanna), for the Appellant:—The Subordinate Judge should not have remanded the case. The Civil Court's powers under section 163 are limited. The land-holder should first apply to the Collector for determination of the mesne profits which he wishes to recover as damages from the trespasser, as no rent is fixed. Then only the Civil Court can award that sum. These are successive stages contemplated by sections 45 and 163 of the Estates Land Act.

Mr. T. Ramachendra Row, for the Respondents:—The Civil Court has the powers of the Collector under section 45 and can assess the damages. Section 163 which gives jurisdiction to a Civil Court to award as damages any sum payable under section 45 means that the powers of the Collector under section 45 are vested in it.

JUDGMENT.—The only question of law which arises relates to the interpretation of sections 163 and 45 of the Madras Estates Land Act as bearing on plaintiff's claim to recover mesne profits as damages. In this connection we are disposed to think that the District Munsif is right and the Subordinate Judge wrong. Section 163 is a section which specifically gives jurisdiction to the Civil Court (1) to evict a trespasser and (2) to award (as damages for the trespass) "any sum payable under section 45." Such a section must, in our opinion, be strictly interpreted and we do not think the Civil Court can be held to have the power to award anything else than "the sum payable under section 45". But this sum where, as in the present case, no rent is fixed for the land, is a sum to be determined by the Collector and by no one else and we cannot follow the Subordinate Judge's reasoning that the Civil Court becomes vested with the Collector's power to fix the rent and assess the damages." It would seem to follow that, if the land holder wishes to treat the trespassers as such and to recover the mesne profits or damages from him, he must first apply to the Collector under section 45 to get the amount of the latter determined and then bring his suit in the Civil Court under section 163. This is no doubt a cumbersome procedure but not impracticable and in no other way do we see how to give effect to the provisions of both sections of the Act.

On this view, we must set aside the lower Appellate Court's order of remand and restore the decree of the District Munsif.

We make no order as to costs in this Court.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 154—Sanction to prosecute—Application to Appellate Court, whether appeal—Limitation, whether applicable.]

Although an application to an Appellate Court under clause (6) of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code is akin to an appeal and is treated as an appeal, it is not an appeal for the purposes of the Limitation Act.

Criminal revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 14th of February 1920, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Lahore, dated the 18th of December 1919.

Mr. Dev Rai, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Mehr Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner applied for sanction to prosecute under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. The first Court refused to grant sanction, and an application was made to the lower Appellate Court under sub-section (6) of the same section. This application being put in on the 32nd day was dismissed as time-barred. Against this decision a petition for revision has been preferred.

The lower Appellate Court apparently considered the application under section 195 (6) as an appeal and thought that Article 154 of the Limitation Act was applicable. In this it was clearly in error as, though applications under section 195 may be akin to appeals, as has been held in Hardeo Singh v. Hanuman Dat Narain (1), and although they may be treated as appeals, yet they are not appeals for the purposes of the Limitation Act. This has been laid down clearly in Bapu v. Bapu (2). Following this judgment I hold the application to the lower Appellate Court as not time-barred and

June 25, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 99, 103, 104, 105, 147, 441—Criminal trespass—Right of private defence of property, extent of—Resistance by trespassers, effect of—Rioting in village—Spectator, whether member of unlawful assembly.

Against criminal trespass the person in possession of the property has the right of private defence of property so long as the trespass continues and this right extends to causing to the trespassers any harm other than death subject to the restrictions mentioned in section 99 of the Penal Code, namely, that no more harm should be inflicted than is necessary for the purposes of defence and that there is no time to have recourse to the protection of the authorities. [p. 49, cols. 1 & 2; p. 50, col. 1.]

If, in the exercise of this right such resistance is offered by the trespassers that a reasonable apprehension is caused to the owners that death or grievous hurt would be the result, the right of private defence of person then arises and extends to the causing of death. [p. 49, col. 2; p. 50, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against the order, dated 13th December 1920, of the Sessions Judge, Bhagalpore, was originally heard by Mullick and Sultan Ahmed, JJ., who delivered the following judgments on 11th March 1920:—

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—(March 11, 1920.)—I propose to consider first of all the evidence of title to the Khamar house in dispute. The fact that in 1877 Mauza Pipra was settled by the Settlement Authorities with Deolal, the father of the appellant Dukhit, and that Deolal was recognised by the Deputy Commissioner as "mul raiyat" does not necessarily prove that he was the exclusive owner. For Exhibit I, the pattah of 1883, shews that in 1883 Gopi, the father of the prosecutor Gober-

DUKHIT SHA V. EMPEROR.

ghan, got a pattah for some land in the Mouza and Exhibit 4, a judgment dated the 9th April 1901, shows that in 1901 Dukhit was at best only a co-sharer. I think, therefore, that there can be no doubt that Mauza Pipra remained the property of the joint family till April, 1901. The circumstance that a title-deed is in the name of one brother does not prove that he is the exclusive owner. The evidence shows that Gopi died in 1901 but it is not known whether before or after the judgment of the 9th April. And, as Goberdhan says that Mauza Pipra fell to the share of Gopi and Saukhi by reason of a partition between Gopi and his brothers, it is possible Gopi died after the judgment. There is, however, no corroboration as to the partition and I cannot accept Goberdhan's story that he and Saukhi became the exclusive owners of Pipra.

If, then, the property still continued joint, the appointment of Dukhit in 1900 as "mul raiyat" upon the death of his father and the Settlement Pattah of 1904 in his favour do not advance his case any further.

Similarly, the payment of rent by Saukhi and Goberdhan in 1912 and 1913 would not necessarily show the exclusive title of these two co-sharers. I do not for a moment believe the explanation given by learned Counsel that the payment was the payment of Dukhit and was to be subsequently adjusted against Dukhit's commission as gomashtha. Firms in India do not usually burden their books with the private account of their gomashthas. Moreover, the explanation is supported by no direct evidence at all. We have merely evidence to the effect that Dukhit as gomashtha was entitled to half the profits of the firm of Gopi-Saukhi. In my opinion, the entry in the account books is clear evidence that Dukhit was not the exclusive owner of the property. As to the payment of rents for previous years Goberdhan's explanation is that they are entered in the books of the firm and that these books are now in the custody of Saukhi who declines to give them up. Saukhi being now on the side of Dukhit and having ejected Goberdhan from his house, this explanation seems to me a reasonable one.

With regard to the partition suit of 1917 I feel some hesitation in drawing any inferences for the simple reason that neither side has thought fit to produce the plaint.

According to Goberdhan's evidence before the learned Judge, the suit was brought against Saukhi, Saukhi's son and Dukhit. We have no evidence to the contrary tendered by the defence. Assuming that Goberdhan's statement is correct, the omission of Mauza Pipra from the plaint is intelligible; for the suit being one for the partition of properties in which all the members of the joint family, inclusive of Dukhit, were interested, Mauza Pipra which is claimed by Goberdhan as the sole property of himself and Saukhi by reason of a previous partition would naturally be excluded, and in 1918 when Saukhi repudiated the position taken up by Goberdhan and filed written statement to the effect that the Mauza was the exclusive property of Dukhit, the amendment of the plaint by Goberdhan and the prayer for the partition of Mauza Pipra as the joint property of the plaintiff and the defendants, become intelligible enough.

If, on the other hand, Goberdhan omitted to sue Dukhit at all and merely asked for a partition as between himself and Saukhi I find it difficult to see why Mauza Pipra was omitted or why Saukhi in his written statement made any reference to Pipra at all and pleaded that Pipra was the exclusive property of Dukhit.

It is urged by learned Counsel that the omission of Pipra from the plaint shows that Goberdhan's original intention was to admit that Pipra was the exclusive property of Dukhit. This inference might, no doubt, be drawn from the omission but then it is not intelligible why Saukhi should have brought Pipra into the case at all by pleading that it was the property of Dukhit.

In the absence of further information, this part of the case must be left in some obscurity, but upon the evidence before me I think the inference may be reasonably drawn that although Mauza Pipra was joint family property it was omitted from the original plaint because Goberdhan wanted to claim it as the exclusive property of himself and Saukhi. Goberdhan's explanation that he forgot to sue for the village in the first instance cannot be accepted. Nor do I think that the facts before me support the inference that it was his original intention to admit Dukhit's sole title.

Bearing in mind the defence set up, namely, the right of private defence, it was incumbent upon the appellants to make good that position beyond all doubt and their failure to adduce evidence in support of the allegations put forward by their Counsel supports the inference that ownership was joint.

I do not think any question arises as to the prosecution being permitted to change their case in appeal. In a criminal trial the sole question is, what are the true facts. The Court is not to be bound by any technical rules of pleading. It is common practice among complainants to put their case too high and that Goberdhan should attempt to exclude his co-owner Dukhit while Dukhit should attempt to exclude Goberdhan and Saubhi is neither improbable nor unintelligible. I think it is perfectly open to me in appeal to decide between these inflated and untenable claims and to find that the real truth is a state of joint ownership.

This finding as to a joint title profoundly affects the question of possession, for then no matter that the Settlement Pattah were in favour of Dukhit's father and Dukhit and that he was actually collecting rent for many years previous to the occurrence, unless he can shew that he was in adverse and exclusive possession Goberdhan must be held, in the eye of the law, to be in joint possession of the village and the Khamar. He would, therefore, have the right to go to the Khamar and to demand the keys from Dukhit's servant Gooli and to occupy the Khamar in the manner in which he claims to have done. There would be no question at all, in these circumstances, of any right of private defence of property. There might, under certain circumstances, arise a right of private defence of the person but with this I will deal later.

Let us assume, next, that this view as to joint ownership is incorrect and that Dukhit had sole title and possession. In that event, the right of private defence would justify the infliction of bodily harm to Goberdhan's men subject to certain limitations. To deal with this position it is necessary to examine the evidence as to the alleged trespass by Goberdhan's men.

The learned Counsel on behalf of the defence has asked us to reject en bloc the account given by Goberdhan's men as to the manner in which they occupied the Khamar and has urged that, in fact and in truth, what took place was the Dukhit came to the Khamar with Gooli on the evening of Friday the 30th May, and that early the following morning when he went with Gooli to open the door, he was suddenly attacked by Goberdhan's men. The learned Counsel is unable to tell us how many men were with Dukhit, or where he spent the previous night, or how it is that while the injuries of Dukhit and Gooli were comparatively slight. Seven men were injured on the other side of whom one died the following day while being taken to the thana. There is no substantive evidence upon which we can accept this version of the occurrence. Nor does it seem to me probable that Goberdhan would have attempted to take possession in this manner. If Dukhit had been in undisturbed possession for over 20 years and if, as is admitted by the prosecution, the villagers were mostly in his favour, it is inconceivable that a force consisting of only seven men or at most 15 men, if we accept the uncorroborated statement made by Gooli to the Police, would be sent to take possession of a village so large as Manza Pipra. Nor can I understand why Goberdhan should at all have conceived the idea of laying claim in this forcible manner to a property of which his cousin had been in undisturbed and peaceful possession for so long a period. To my mind, the story set up by the defence is so improbable that it cannot for a moment be accepted. On the other hand, there is no difficulty in accepting the sworn testimony of Goberdhan's men as substantially true with regard to the occupation of the Khamar and the attack.

There is no evidence to rebut the statement that Dukhit was away in Calcutta and that he returned home to Deoghar about the 28th May. What is more natural than that Goberdhan, if he wanted to assert his claim as co-sharer, should have taken advantage of Dukhit's absence in Calcutta to send his men to take possession of the Khamar Kutchery. It is contended that the story that the seven men arrived in three batches of 2, 3 and 2 respectively was never told to the Police. I cannot regard this as a very serious omission.

Then it is said that the delivery of the keys to Ajodhya is a concoction, that Gooli never parted with the keys till the Police took them from him after the occurrence, and that the explanation now given by Ajodheya that they were taken from him while he was unconscious after the assault is a pure concoction. The allegation that Dukhit came to the Khamar immediately after his return from Calcutta and asked for the keys from Goberdhan's men has been made from the very outset. It was told to the Police in the first information within five hours of the occurrence, it was repeated by five of the injured men. The same day it is contained in Soorju's dying declaration recorded at about mid-day on the next day and I am quite unable to believe that the story is a concoction. I am also greatly impressed by Soorju's statement, and, in the absence of any evidence that he was tutored by Goberdhan's men, I must and do hold that he has substantially spoken the truth. It is noticeable that he cannot name any of the men who struck him. If there had been any tutoring there is no doubt that he would have ascribed the fatal blow to Dukhit. This man was not only beaten most severely with lathis and Farsis but was carried to the river "Chandan" two miles off and thrown into the water. There he appears to have remained the whole of that day and was found the following day by the Police with his body in the water and his head just out of it. There is evidence to shew that he was in a state of extreme collapse. I cannot imagine that it would be possible to tutor a man in this condition. Having regard to the fact that Manza Pipra was hostile to Goberdhan and that his men fled in various directions after the occurrence, I cannot see that there was any time or opportunity for tutoring. The Sub-Inspector deposes that he arrived at Pipra on the afternoon of the 31st May and could get no information as to Soorju and Paryag. On the following day he found Paryag under a tree in a jungle and Soorju, as stated, in the river. Goberdhan himself was not in Pipra either on the 31st or the following day and, beyond the mere allegation of learned Counsel, I can find nothing to support the theory that there was tutoring either of Soorju or of the other injured men. If there had been, the matter would have immediately been brought to the notice of the Police. Then, again, I fail to see what necessity there was of concocting this story as to the keys. It is said that the object was to make out some kind of constructive possession in the Khamar although direct physical possession was with Dukhit and it is suggested that Goberdhan's legal advisers must have concocted the story when the first informant Antu arrived at Deogbar. Now Deogbar is 8 miles from the place of occurrence and the first information was lodged at 11 o'clock. The evolution of a subtle plea of this kind in proof of legal possession required more time and, having regard to all the circumstances, I must reject the contention that it was the brilliant inspiration of some legal practitioner in the Bar library.

It is contended that Gooli Singh would never have given over the keys to Goberdhan on the mere asking, but the reply seems to be that if Goberdhan was a co sharer, Gooli Singh might, being a servant, not have had the courage to resist him in the absence of Dukhit. There is nothing improbable in his having proceeded after delivering the keys to prevent the villagers from doing any work for Goberdhan's men.

It is asserted by the Sub Inspector that Ajodheya did not tell him that the keys and his Dhoti were taken away from him, but Ajodheya was not cross-examined upon this point and it may be that he did not consider it a matter of vital importance. Indeed, to any ordinary person the possession of the keys would not appear to be very material if the house and its contents were the property of Dukhit. A claim to possession of the house could not be supported by mere possession of the key and I do not think it was worth while inventing such a story. On the other hand, if, as is now alleged, the story was the product of the subtle mind of some legal adviser, then we should have expected a detailed elaboration of it in the statements of witnesses during the Police investigation. In my opinion, therefore, no adverse view can be drawn from the evidence given by the Sub-Inspector.

Then, as to Dukhit's visit two days before the occurrence. It is not quite clear whether the visit took place on Wednesday the 28th or Thursday the 29th. For the defence it is contended that it did not take place till the 30th and that it has been ante-dated in order to shew that there was time for Dukhit to seek the protection of the Police. There is evidence that Dukhit was seen in his house at

DUKHIT SHA v. EMPEROR.

Deoghar on the 28th May. This is un rebutted. It is natural that he should, immediately on return from Calcutta, go to the Khamar because he must have known that Gobaradhan had already sent his men. Dukhit is now living with Sankhi and the doings of Gobaradhan, who also lives in Deoghar, must have been known to him. Gooli Singh, moreover, must have informed him of the arrival of the servants of Gobaradhan. In these circumstances, it is improbable that Dukhit would have delayed his visit till the 30th. Here again, it is to be observed that while the story of the prosecution is supported by sworn testimony we have no legal evidence on the other side to support the suggestions now put forward by the learned Counsel.

I accept, therefore, the account given by the prosecution witnesses, firstly, as to the mode in which Gobaradhan's men occupied the Khamar, secondly, as to the delivery of the keys, and thirdly, as to the visit of Dukhit on the 28th or 29th May.

It may be conceded that no real cultivation was done and that only the Khamar and its contents were inspected and that the men were in reality lathials and Gobaradhan was prepared to have a fight.

In view of these findings, it does not appear to me that there could have been any right of private defence of property even on the assumption that Dukhit was the sole and exclusive owner in possession. There is no right of private defence of property unless the invasion amounts to a crime. In this case it is abundantly clear that, even if Dukhit was in exclusive possession, the trespass by Gobaradhan's men was at most a civil trespass in the furtherance of an intention to assert civil right. What then was the remedy of Dukhit? Either he should have gone to the Police as Gobaradhan says he himself did, or he should have, on the morning of the 31st of May, when Gobaradhan's men declined to open the Khamar, pushed the trespassers out of the Khamar without violence. Having regard to the fact that he had 50 or 60 men with him this would not have been impossible. The law both in England and in India does not permit the owner of property to repel a civil trespass by violence. It does permit him gently to press the trespasser away and if resisted to continue the pressure while protecting his own person against any violence that may be offered. Dukhit did not commit any offence in assembling the 50 or 60 men but he had no right to order them to attack Gobaradhan's men even though he was the exclusive owner of the property. The evidence on this point, again un rebutted, shows that it was Dukhit who struck the first blow and that under his orders the 50 or 60 men fell upon the seven men who were there on Gobaradhan's side.

But if we assume for the sake of argument, although the facts do not establish this, that the first blow was struck by one of Gobaradhan's men, then the trespass would become criminal trespass and the right of private defence arose. But then the injury inflicted must be not greater than is necessary. In the present case there were 50 or 60 armed men against 7. There can be no doubt that the right of private defence of property was exhausted. The subsequent treatment of Soorja clearly shows that the appellants and their companions were animated by cruel and vindictive motives.

It is contended that the object of the assembly was perfectly lawful. Assuming that it was lawful in the beginning, it clearly became unlawful as soon as the right of private defence was exhausted, that is to say, when the assembly had inflicted punishment sufficient for the purpose of defence, and took up the part of aggressors animated by the desire for revenge they became an unlawful assembly within the meaning of section 141, Indian Penal Code. It is unnecessary for the prosecution to show who struck the fatal blow or who passed the boundary line. It would be impossible in an attack by such large numbers to fix the responsibility of each and the circumstances clearly show that the whole assembly was animated by the common object of committing an illegal assault. It was open to the appellants to show that they did not share the common object of the assembly after it became unlawful, for instance, by evidence that they attempted to leave them after a certain point or to prevent the infliction of the fatal injuries on Soorja; but they have not made the slightest effort to discharge the burden which lay so heavily upon them.

DUKHIT SHA V. EMPEROR.

Therefore, even upon the assumption that Dukhit was the sole owner and in possession and that the first assault was committed by Goberdhan's men the appellants must be convicted of offences under sections 304 and 149, Indian Penal Code.

I will now briefly deal with the question of the right of private defense of the person.

Firstly, if, as I have found, Goberdhan was the co-owner and his men were in occupation of the vernadab, Dukhit had no right of private defense of the person unless the first blow was struck by Goberdhan's men. Of this there is no evidence.

Next, if he had no title but merely committed a civil trespass by taking possession during Dukhit's absence in Calcutta, then, too, no right of private defense would arise till the first blow was struck by Goberdhan's men.

In either event, the evidence shows that the right did not arise, or that, if it arose at all, it was exhausted.

The result is that, in the view that I take of the facts, there was no right of private defense either of property or of the person. If there was, it was exhausted and the appellants Dukhit, Goberdhan and Varma have been rightly convicted under section 304 read with 149, Indian Penal Code.

Finally, let us assume that the facts are as put forward by Mr. Manuk on behalf of the appellants. There is no legal evidence in support of his statement that 10 or 15 of Goberdhan's men came in the early morning and attacked Dukhit while he was opening the Khamar. It is suggested that Dukhit had others with him, the precise number not being known, but that he was justified in inflicting the injuries that were found upon his assailants.

Now, this part of the case rests upon the mere statement of Dukhit and his Counsel; but assuming that it represents the truth, even then I think that Dukhit's men were members of an unlawful assembly. An attack by Goberdhan's men, if Dukhit had sole possession and title, would perhaps be criminal trespass and raise the right of private defence both of property and of the person; but as I have said before, the overwhelming numbers on Dukhit's side and the injuries inflicted would warrant the finding that his adherents were guilty of rioting and the right of private defense was exceeded. If, as I hold, title and possession were joint, then the right of private defense of the person alone could arise and that only if Goberdhan's men struck the first blow. The evidence, however, in the case is that the first blow was struck by Dukhit's men and there is no evidence to the contrary.

With regard to Budhog and Ganpat the evidence of identification is weak and I agree with my learned colleague that they should be acquitted. With regard to Gooli it is a fact that he was not identified by Paryag on the 3rd June and it is contended that if Gooli gave up the keys to Ajodheya on the first day when Prayag was present. Paryag ought to have been in a position to identify him on the 3rd June. Prayag, however, may possibly have seen Gooli only on two occasions. He may be an unobservant man and, in the absence of any cross-examination upon the point, I do not feel disposed to hold that his omission to identify Gooli indicates that the account given by him of his visit to the Khamar is false.

As, however, there is a difference of opinion with regard to the appellants Dukhit, Gooli and Varma between my learned colleague and myself, the case of all the appellants will be referred to a third Judge.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—(March 11, 1920).—The appellants were convicted by the Sessions Judge of the Santal Pergannahs under sections 148 and 304 read with 149 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to various terms of rigorous imprisonment. The prosecution case is that there were four brothers, Gopi, Saukhi, Gokhul and Deo Lal, members of a joint Hindu family. Goberdhan, the complainant, is the son of Gopi and Dukhi, the chief accused in the case is the son of Deo Lal. The case of the prosecution is that under a pattah a certain plot of land in village Pipra, which is the scene of the occurrence, was settled with Gopi, the father of the complainant, in 1883. Gopi died in 1901 but previous to his death there was a settlement of Pipra with Deo Lal, the father of the accused Dukhit, but as all the four brothers were joint at the time this was really a settlement in favour of the joint family, and that this was so was admitted by Dukhit himself in a suit brought by him in the year 1901 for declaration of his right to remove timber from the jungle of village Pipra. There was a resettlement in 1904 of Pipra with Dukhit, but the prosecution allege that this was also for the benefit of the joint family. Goberdhan says that there was a partition between the brothers some years ago and Pipra fell into the share of Gopi and Sankhi, and his case is that after the death of his father they were in joint possession of village Pipra and that Dukhit has nothing to do with it. His case is that in 1917 he got half the produce in Pipra and his uncle Sankhi got the rest. In 1918 he got nothing because there was no produce at all, and as he had no faith in the Barahil Gooli Singh, one of the accused in the case, he went with Ajodheya and Paryag on or about the 22nd May last to Pipra. On his arrival there he got the key of the Khamar from Guli Singh and made it over to Ajodheya and returned to Deoghar after leaving Ajodheya and Paryag at the Khamar. Two days later he was informed that Gooli was preventing the *raiya*s from cultivating the lands and he, therefore, sent Murari, Surja and Subha to help Paryag and Ajodheya in the cultivation of the lands. Then again at Paryag's request he sent Antu and Jai Nath to Pipra. It appears that on the 25th of May Dukhit, who was said to be away in Calcutta, returned to Deoghar and as Goberdhan apprehended that his return might mean an attack on his men who had been sent by him to Pipra, he went and reported his apprehension to the Police at Deoghar, but the latter replied that the Chowkidar had been warned about it. On the 29th Dukhit is said to have gone to Pipra and asked Antu to open the Khamar but the latter refused. So Dukhit it is alleged returned to Deoghar. On the 31st of May, at 5 o'clock in the morning, when Goberdhan's men were sleeping in the verandah of the Khamar, Dukhit with 50 men is said to have arrived there armed with lathis and Farsas and asked them to open the lock of the room and to leave the Khamar. This having been refused, the prosecution allege that Dukhit and his party attacked Goberdhan's men and caused serious injuries to all of them. The first information report was lodged at 11 A. M. at Deoghar which is eight miles from Pipra by Antu after he consulted with Goberdhan in the Bar Library. Soon after, Ajodheya, Murari and Jainath arrived at the Thana and as they and Antu had injuries on them they were sent to the hospital by the Police. Sub-Inspector Bhupendra Nath Singha then started for the place of occurrence. On the way he met Subha Singh who also had injuries and he sent him also to Deoghar. On arriving at the Khamar he searched for Paryag and Sarju but did not find them. On the 1st of June he found Paryag under a tree about a quarter of a mile from the Khamar with injuries on his head and body. He sent him to Deoghar in a cart and he then started to search for Sarju whom he ultimately found lying in the Chandan River about two miles from the Khamar. The Sub-Inspector took down his statement and sent him to the hospital on a bed. Sarju, however, died on his way to the hospital. Dukhit was arrested on the 1st of June, Gooli was arrested on the 2nd and the other accused were subsequently arrested and were sent up for trial and ultimately convicted by the Sessions Judge as stated above. The most important evidence in the case consists mainly of the six eye witnesses, because they not only speak to the actual occurrence on the 31st but also speak to all the incidents which the prosecution allege took place before the 31st. The evidence of the investigating officer, the medical evidence and evidence of possession given by a number of cultivators practically complete the prosecuting evidence. Before I consider the evidence of the occurrence itself it is necessary to come to a finding as to who was in possession of the Khamar on the 31st morning. The Record of Rights is in favour of Dukhit and, in my opinion, the evidence to prove his possession of the Khamar, at any rate before the 22nd of May, is overwhelming. The learned Sessions Judge also found that Goberdhan had hitherto not been in direct possession of the Khamar and both the assessors were of the same opinion. It is now to be considered whether Dukhit was dispossessed between the 22nd and 31st of May. The prosecution story upon this point, as I have stated above, is that on the 22nd of May Goberdhan went to Pipra and took the key from Gooli and placed it in the hands of Ajodheya and placed the latter in charge of the Khamar. The evidence on this point,

DUKHIT SHA V. EMPEROR.

consists of some of the eye witnesses. It is, however, to be noticed that there is not a word about Gooli making over the key to Goberdhan or Ajodheya in the first information report. No one mentioned this transfer of the key to the Police when the witnesses were examined by the Sub-Inspector. It is further to be noticed that the prosecution case is that the eye witnesses were sent to Pipra by Goberdhan because Gooli had not allowed them to cultivate the lands. It is also found by the learned Sessions Judge that the men of Pipra were supporting Dukhit. Under the circumstances, it seems highly improbable that Gooli would so easily, on the mere asking of it, hand over the key to Goberdhan. It is also remarkable that Ajodheya does not say one word about this incident although the prosecution case is that the key was taken from Goberdhan and handed over to Ajodheya. Another important piece of evidence to refute this part of the prosecution story is that the key was found actually in the possession of Gooli by the Police. The prosecution anticipating this difficulty tried to prove through Ajodheya that Gooli took away the key from him after he fell down. But this explanation is palpably untrue as no mention of it was ever made to the Sub-Inspector. The learned Sessions Judge himself says that there is some doubt whether the keys of the Khamar were taken from Gooli and were taken back from Ajodheya when he was assaulted. Under these circumstances, I hold that this story of the taking over of the key by Goberdhan from Gooli and of then handing it over to Ajodheya is one which cannot be accepted. The second incident relates to the alleged visit of Dukhit Sha to Pipra on the 29th of May. It is alleged that on that day he visited Pipra and demanded the key from Antu and as that was refused he returned to Deoghar. On this point also the evidence is unreliable. In the first information Dukhit is said to have asked Antu to open the house. Antu says the demand was made from him but he replied that Ajodheya had the keys. Ajodheya, however, does not say one word about this. Paryag speaks of the visit but says nothing about the key. Murari and Sankhi are silent about it. Therefore, it is obvious that there is no reliable evidence that Dukhit visited Pipra on the 29th as is alleged by the prosecution. There is, however, the dying statement of Sarju that the fight began on Dukhit asking Goberdhan's men to open the house. The relevant portion of the dying statement runs thus: "Dukhit Sha came with about 50 or 60 men at about 5 A. M. and said 'open the door of the house,' we said, we will not open without the order of the malik. On this Dukhit went to break the lock and we resisted. Then Dukhit gave orders to beat us."

On this it is contended that the men of Goberdhan must have taken possession of the Khamar and they must have been in possession of the key, otherwise they would not have been asked to open the house. To begin with, there is no mention of any key in the dying statement and, secondly, I am not satisfied that the deceased Sarju did not come in contact with the men of his party before he was found by the Police. The medical evidence in the case strongly indicates that Sarju must have been given some food only a few hours before his death and Mr. Mannk contends that it must have been given by men of his party. There is nothing on the present record to suggest that it could not be so. In this connection I may also notice certain inherent improbabilities in this part of the prosecution story. It is said that the eye witnesses were sent by Goberdhan in driblets. One of them was admittedly a sipahi and it is difficult to understand why a sipahi and men of the class of the eye witnesses were sent for purposes of cultivation. Secondly, no explanation is given why they were sent in driblets and why no mention of their going in batches was made to the Police by them. Then, as regards acts of possession exercised by the witnesses, I find that Antu says "I entered the Khamar. I saw the paddy, but don't know how much it was. I did nothing but watch the mango and jack fruit trees. The others did the same." Paryag, however, says: "We sowed some of the ploughed lands with seeds taken from the Khamar." On this point he is contradicted by Antu as noted above. In cross examination he admits that he never went inside the Khamar to do any work himself, except cut some earth with an axe and he alleged that nothing else was done owing to want of rain." Jainath says he cut some earth. He did not know what was inside the Khamar, and knew nothing about the cattle. Murari says he scraped some earth and did nothing else. Subha says he only went to collect rents for Goberdhan. The only one man who gives some details about the Khamar and its contents is Ajodheya but I am not satisfied that his evidence is at all convincing or reliable. While dealing with the question of possession I may as well shortly discuss the title under which the complainant claims to be in possession. I do this simply for the purpose of deciding the question of possession. In his deposition in Court Goberdhan says: "There was a partition between the brothers, Sankhi managed for me on my father's death, I being 6 years old. Pipra fell into the share of my father and Sankhi." Then later he says: "Pipra was settled with Dukhit, at the last Settlement when I was 7 or 8 years old." It is, therefore, clear that there was a partition before the settlement with Dukhit and the subsequent settlement of Pipra with Dukhit in 1904 for 15 years to my mind is a strong piece of evidence to show that under the partition Pipra fell to the share of Dukhit. This view is confirmed by the plaint filed in 1917 by Goberdhan against Sankhi and others for partition of ancestral properties. It is remarkable that Pipra was left out in the schedule of properties and it was only after the written statement had been filed that he applied for the amendments of the plaint and prayed for including Pipra. It comes to this that in this Court he claims to be in joint possession of Pipra with Sankhi to the exclusion of Dukhit, while at a very late stage of the partition suit he claimed to be in possession jointly with Dukhit and others.

If his statement that there was a partition before 1904 is true he has got no case at all inasmuch as the settlement in 1904 was with Dukhit alone. The learned Assistant Government Advocate, however, has argued that in fact Goberdhan was joint with Dukhit in Pipra on the day of occurrence and he relies upon the partition suit of 1917 and also Exhibits 2 and 3 which are entries in the handwriting of accused Dukhit in the account book of the firm of Gopi and Sankhi showing rent paid to the landlord. We have not got the partition proceedings on record, but the oral evidence with reference to it, far from supporting Goberdhan's present claim, throws, as I have shown above, heavy cloud on the same. Then as regards Exhibits 2 and 3 the explanation is simple. Admittedly, Dukhit was a gomashita in the firm of Goberdhan and Sankhi and he used to get half the profits for looking after the firm and the entry may be consistent with Dukhit's explanation that the rent was paid by him from the firm's till, which would be set off against his share in the profits on adjustment of accounts. In my opinion, the position taken up by the Assistant Government Advocate is not available to him in the face of the clear case set up by Goberdhan and in the absence of the partition proceedings in this record. We cannot change the whole nature of the claim of complainant in appeal.

Then, there is a convincing refutation of this part of the prosecution story. After the arrest of the accused and during Police investigation, two test identifications were held. On the first test Gooli was not identified by Paryag and Suba, and on the second occasion he was not identified by any except Murari. This is remarkable, if the prosecution story that these witnesses were at Pipra long before the occurrence and have had continuous dealing with Gooli is true. How could they possibly fail to identify Gooli from whom they had got the key of the Khamar and who later had been interfering with their cultivation? These test identifications afford, in my opinion, ample material to discredit the whole case of the prosecution that these witnesses had been at the Khamar long before the occurrence.

On a careful consideration of the whole of the evidence on this point, I am satisfied that the story of the key having been made over by Gooli to Goberdhan about 10 days before the occurrence and the subsequent possession of the Khamar by the men of Goberdhan has not been established. At any rate, there is no reliable evidence to justify me in holding that the men of Goberdhan took possession of the Khamar at any time before the occurrence.

I now proceed to consider the evidence with respect to the occurrence itself.

Anto, P. W. No. 1, says that "at sunrise Dukhit with 50 persons armed demanded the keys from Ajodheya who refused. He abused us and went into the verandah and tried to break the lock but was stopped by Sarju and Murari with a lathi. He ordered his men to turn us out and they began to throw bricks and strike with garasa and lathis. I got blows on head and body." The other five witnesses Paryag, Murari, Jai Nath, Subha and Ajodheya, substantially support him in Court. All the six witnesses identify the accused in dock. A desperate attempt has been made by the witnesses in Court to attribute to Dukhit the blow on the deceased Sarju's head which resulted in his death. But the Sub-Inspector says that no body mentioned to him that Dukhit had struck any one any particular blow. Again, in the first information, Antu alleged that Dukhit gave Murari a lathi blow but there is no mention of Sarju being struck by Dukhit. As regards identification, it may be pointed out that, as I have stated before, there were two test identifications held by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate. On the first test, i.e., on the 3rd of June, accused Gooli and Kaktu were produced. Gooli was identified by Antu, Murari, Jainath and Ajodheya, and Kaktu was identified by Paryag, Murari, Jainath and Ajodheya. On the second occasion, that is, on the 8th July, Gooli, Ganpat, Burma and Budu were produced. Gooli was identified by Murari only, Ganpat by Suba only, Burma by Murari only, Budu by Paryag only.

DUKHIT SHA V. EMPEROR.

Therefore, Ganpat, Burma and Budu were identified by only one witness, which, in my opinion, would be insufficient evidence to convict the accused in a rioting case.

Dukhit and Gooli were admittedly there. Their case and that of Kaktu will have to be considered on the main ground whether they were members of an unlawful assembly.

The defence case may be best stated in the words of Dukhit himself. In his statement to the Sessions Judge under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code he states as follows: "On Friday, the 30th May I went to Mauza Pipra. My Barahil Gooli Singh was there. I enquired of him what had been done. He replied that 12 maunds had been sown and more would be sown the following day. On Saturday morning, I asked Gooli to bring labourers and I went to take out paddy by opening the Khamar. Just as I went to open the lock 10 or 15 men came up and prevented me from opening it. Then Ajodheya struck me and I became unconscious. I recovered my senses two hours after. Then at night I came to Deoghar." This is substantially the same story as that given to the Sub Inspector on the 1st of June, vide Exhibit F. I have already found that Goberdhan's men were never in possession of the Khamar and the whole story of the passing of the key is false. I have held that they never came to Pipra in batches but came there for the first time on the morning of the 31st having been probably sent to Pipra for the purpose of setting up a claim to the Khamar adversely to Dukhit. Dukhit having been there with his labourers must have resisted their act of aggression on which, as the learned Sessions Judge has found, "blows were exchanged and after Dukhit had been struck his men in a body attacked Goberdhan's men and drove them out." The result of my finding necessarily is that endeavour of Dukhit's men to open the Khamar would be lawful and if resisted would give Dukhit the right of private defence of property. Who started the first blow the Sessions Judge does not find, but obviously before Dukhit was struck the exchange of blows was neither effective nor serious and so, after Dukhit was struck and received 10 injuries three of which were severe lacerated wounds on the head, he would at once have the right of private defence of person and property. There would be no question of taking recourse to public authorities under these circumstances. There can, however, be no doubt that this right was exceeded by some of Dukhit's men. Who they were has not been found nor has it been found that the accused or any of them committed any assault after they became aware that the right of private defence had been exceeded by any of them. Under the law as I understand it, any one who would be guilty of exceeding the right of private defence would be liable for his act but his individual act would not turn the lawful assembly into an unlawful assembly, except as indicated above. This proposition of law has been approved of in the cases of Kales Mundle, In the matter of (1), Baij Nath Dhanuk v. (1) 10 C. L. R. 278 at p. 280.

DUKHIT SHA V. EMPEROR.

Emperor (2). The result is that no unlawful common object of the accused has been established and the charges under sections 147 and 304/149, Indian Penal Code, must, therefore, fail, and the accused are entitled to be acquitted.

Owing to this difference of opinion the appeal was referred to Jwala Prasad, J., for disposal.

Messrs. Manuk, G. O. Pal and Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Appellants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been referred to me on account of difference of opinion between the learned Judges, Mullik and Sultan Ahmed, JJ., who originally heard this appeal.

The appellants are six in number: (1) Dukhit Sha, (2) Gooli Singh, (3) Kathku Singh, (4) Budha Singh, (5) Ganpat Singh and (6) Brama Singh. They were tried by the Sessions Judge of Sonthal Perganae with the aid of two Assessors in respect of charges under sections 148 and 304 read with section 149, Indian Penal Code. The Assessors returned a verdict of not guilty. The learned Sessions Judge disagreeing with their verdict convicted and sentenced them to various terms of rigorous imprisonment.

The common object of the unlawful assembly was stated in the charge to be to assault Ajodhya Singh and others and turn them out of the Khamar house of a village called Pipra. The latter are partisans of one Goberdhan Sha, first cousin of the principal accused Dukhit Sha. Each of them claimed to be in exclusive possession of village Pipra and the Khamar house in respect of which the occurrence took place. The accused plead right of private defence and it is, therefore, necessary at the outset to determine who was in possession of the Khamar house at the time of the occurrence.

Gopi, Sankhi, Gokbul and Deo Lal were four brothers of whom Sankhi alone is now alive. We do not hear of Gokbul in this case. Gopi and Deo Lal died some time before April 1901, but the exact date is not known. Goberdhan, the complainant, is son of Gopi, and Dukhit is son of Deo Lal.

(2) 1 Ind. Cas. 973; 36 C. 296; 13 C. W. N. 677; 9 Cr. L. J. 443.

The family settled at Deoghar. The four brothers were joint, and had a shop and a house at Deoghar. On the 26th October 1877 they obtained settlement of the village in the name of Deo Lal, who was recognised as mul raiyat of the village by the Deputy Commissioner per pattah, dated the 26th October 1877 and his name was recorded in the Settlement Record of Rights; that all the brothers were jointly interested in this settlement is clear from the pattah (Exhibit 1, dated the 31st January 1883). In it, it is stated that although the settlement was in the name of the younger brother, Deo Lal, Gopi (complainant's father) was also all along in possession of the village, and hence some of the lands that were excluded from that settlement on account of some boundary dispute with the Zemindar of the neighbouring village, Khajuria Jore, were settled in the name of Gopi in 1883. The judgment, Exhibit 4, dated the 4th April 1901 also shows that the village was the joint family property of all the brothers. This is a judgment in a case brought by accused Dukhit as plaintiff against certain other persons, Mahananda, etc, concerning the right to take wood and timber from the jungle of the mul-raiyati village Pipra. Dukhit's case was that the property was acquired by the four brothers jointly in the name of Deo Lal and was held jointly by plaintiff Dukhit, son of Deo Lal, deceased, Goberdhan (complainant) son of Gopi, deceased, and Sankhi and Gokbul. Sankhi is stated to have exercised the right of possession by cutting timber from the jungle on behalf of the family which led to criminal case and afterwards the civil suit, terminating in the judgment (Exhibit 4) in favour of Dukhit representing the family.

Thus, up to April 1901, the village was a joint property of the family including the complainant and the accused. Hence the re appointment of Dukhit prior to this, per order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, dated the 27th July 1900, Exhibit A, will not make him the exclusive owner of the property. His re appointment as mul raiyat was confirmed and the village was re settled in his name by Government in 1904 per pattah (Exhibit D) for 15 years at an enhanced rent over that of the previous settlement and was followed by parcha and the Record of Rights in his name.

DUKHIT SHA V. EMPEROR.

Thereafter, the history of the family or of the village is obscure. There appears, however, to be a firm by the name of Gopi (Goberdhan's father) and Saukhi at Deoghar. Dukhit was managing this firm and writing the account-books, as is proved by Exhibits 2 and 3 of 1912 and 1913. He was receiving half the share in the profits of the firm. It is contentious whether he was a gomashia or a sharer in the firm and in what capacity he receives the profits.

Saukhi was aged now about 70 years of age, Goberdhan was minor all this time. Dukhit was a young man, now 37 years of age, and was probably taking active part in the family.

Soon after the complainant Goberdhan attained majority in 1916, he began to assert himself and commenced an action in the Civil Court for partition of certain properties against Saukhi by filing a plaint on the 12th of March 1917. The record of the partition suit was not produced in the Court below. Hence what actually was the case of the parties was left vague and the learned Judges who originally heard this appeal had some difficulty in finding out what it was. The record of the partition suit had, however, come to this Court in Miscellaneous Appeal (No. 122 of 1919). I have, therefore, with the consent of the parties, looked into it and have placed the paper-book containing the pleadings of the parties on the record of this case.

Originally, Saukhi and his son only were made defendants in that suit on the allegations that Saukhi and Gopi had separated themselves from the other two brothers and lived together and were joint in business and property. After the death of his father the complainant, who was a minor, continued to be joint with and under the guardianship of his uncle Saukhi, and consequently he was entitled to have a share in the properties.

Saukhi filed his written statement on the 10th December 1917 and denied that he was ever joint with Goberdhan and stated that all the four brothers separated in every respect during their lifetime, and said that some of the properties in suit belonged to Dukhit.

On the objection of Saukhi, Goberdhan applied for the amendment of the plaint and for adding Dukhit and the members of his family and those of Goberdhan's to be made parties to the suit. The amendment was allowed on the 3rd or 4th September and Mauza Pipra, indispute in the present case, and some other properties were added in the schedule to the plaint with the allegation that they were the joint properties of Goberdhan and Saukhi and that through the fraud and collusion of Saukhi and Dukhit, Mauza Pipra was entered in the Settlement Record in the name of Dukhit.

Dukhit filed his written statement on the 22nd October 1918 supporting Saukhi in the allegation set forth above regarding the separation of the four brothers during their lifetime. He claimed Pipra as belonging exclusively to him. Issues regarding the additional pleas of Dukhit were framed on the 21st February 1919. The case proceeded to the 7th of April 1919 when the record came to this Court on account of the Miscellaneous Appeal filed on the 7th of May 1919. This brings us near the date of occurrence which happened in the last week of May 1919.

In the present case the complainant in his evidence adheres to his allegations made in the partition suit that his father Gopi and Saukhi separated themselves from the other two brothers during their lifetime and that village Pipra fell to their share. He excludes Dukhit altogether from the village.

The case of Dukhit, on the other hand, is that there was a complete separation among all the four brothers and the village has exclusively fallen to his share. Except their own statement, there is no evidence of any partition among the four brothers during their lifetime. On the other hand, the judgment, Exhibit 4, shows that even after the death of Gopi and Dao Lal, the family continued to be joint and village Pipra was held jointly by their sons Dukhit and Goberdhan and the surviving brothers Saukhi and Gokbul.

On the other hand, there is a suggestion made by the accused in the cross-examination of the complainant Goberdhan that there were mutual deeds of release in 1916 between Saukhi and Goberdhan and that in accordance therewith a decree in the name of Saukhi was realised by Goberdhan. It has further been suggested that Goberdhan "wrote to Saukhi that the lands will remain with them in whose name they stand." The suggestion is for the purpose of showing that by some arrangement village Pipra remained with Dukhit in whose name it stood. The suggestion made by the accused shows that till then there was no regular partition among the members of the family. There may have been some arrangement, but we do not know definitely what it was.

The entries (Exhibits 2 and 3) in the account-books of the firm showing payment of rent in respect of the village are also contentious. The entries show that the rents were paid in 1913 and 1914 by the firm of Gopi and Sankhi. Upon this the complainant founds his claim of exclusive possession of the village Pipra by himself and Sankhi. The explanation of the accused Dukhit is that these payments were, as a matter of fact, made by him, as they were subsequently adjusted against his share in the profits of the firm.

Goberdhan challenges this suggestion and says that the account books of the firm, which are in the possession of Sankhi, would show that the rents for the previous years were all paid by the firm. No certain inference can be drawn from this kind of evidence.

The deeds of release referred to in the cross-examination of the complainant or the account-books of the firm, have not been filed in this case. They must be with Sankhi and he is on the side of Dukhit. Sankhi has not been even examined. It would have been well if he were examined and the aforesaid papers were called for from him. The evidence on the record is too meagre to hold whether there was any arrangement between the parties and, if so, what were the terms thereof, and as to there being a regular partition of the family properties between them the evidence on the record is almost nil.

The parties are now making their statements in the criminal case with a view to suit their purpose in the partition case. We cannot, therefore, rely and decide with confidence in this case as to whether or not there was a partition between the parties and whether by any partition or arrangement the village in question fell to the share of Dukhit alone or that of Goberdhan and Sankhi. The matter is sub judice in the partition case and I decline, upon the evidence on the record, to decide as to the rights of the parties in the village in question. It was also suggested in cross-examination that the claim of the complainant before the Sub-Inspector was that he and Dukhit held the village jointly. This case if adhered to by the complainant would have been somewhat plausible, for the village was originally obtained in the name of Dukhit on behalf of the four brothers and continued to be the joint property at least up to 1901 and there is no evidence in this record of any regular partition of the village or allotment of it to Dukhit in whose name it stood in the Settlement Record. Nor the complainant's case that Dukhit was excluded altogether from the village is substantiated by evidence in this case. Some of the prosecution witnesses (Nos. 9, 14 and 15) say that the village and the Khamar belong to and are in possession of Sankhi and Gopi, while others (witnesses Nos. 17, 18 and 19) say that they belong to Dukhit. But all of them admit that Dukhit was directly in charge of the village and was looking after the cultivation and making collection from the tenants and granting receipts, whether he was doing so on behalf of the entire family or only as a gomashta of Sankhi according to the case of the complainant or as the sole and exclusive owner thereof as claimed by him. This is, however, certain that, after he filed his written statement in the partition suit on the 22nd October 1918 claiming the property as his own he would not allow the complainant to go near the village even if he had a right to do so. The complainant admits that he did not get any share in the income or produce of the village in the year 1918, although he explains it by saying that Sankhi said that there was no produce. He did not accept this explanation of Sankhi. Certainly, he understood that he was being excluded from any participation in the profits of the village and was being ousted therefrom, for he at once resolved to take direct possession of the Khamar (store house and Kutehri) which had mejote and bari or garden land attached to it and to cultivate all the lands himself excluding not only Dukhit but also Sankhi, his admitted co-sharer.

Gooli, accused, was the Barahil of the village and he was directly under Dukhit. He and the other villagers were on the side of Dukhit. The complainant was fully cognizant of this. He, therefore, engaged new men to assist him in obtaining direct possession of the village. The key of the Khamar house in the village, where the occurrence is said to have taken place, was in the possession of Gooli. According to the complainant, therefore, his first step towards obtaining possession of the Khamar house was to obtain the key from Gooli. He says that about the 22nd of May he went to the village with Ajodheya, a servant of 2 or 3 years' standing, and Paryag, a sipahi, who was engaged only 5 or 6 months before, asked for the key from Gooli and got it and made it over to Ajodheya, asked Gooli to act under him and placed Ajodheya and Paryag at the Khamar and came away.

This did not prove effective, for Paryag reported to him that Gooli was preventing *raiya*s from cultivating, and accordingly two days after he sent Murari and Sarja, who were engaged that very day, and Suba (brother of Paryag) who was engaged a month before; and again two days after he sent Antu and Jai Nath whom he engaged that very day, as re-inforcement.

On the 28th of May, he says he learnt that Dukhit had returned from Calcutta and was staying with Sankhi and would attack his men at Pipra, and consequently he informed the Daroga.

The complainant thus makes out a case of having the key of Khamar on the 20th or the 22nd being in charge of it though the afore-said seven persons whom he had employed for the said purpose about the time or shortly before the deputation up to the time of the occurrence which took place at 5 A. M. on the 31st. These persons apparently did nothing and do not know what was in the Khamar and in the state of affairs then prevailing, i. e., when Gooli, the Barahil and the entire village were against the complainant, they could not have been permitted to remain in charge of the Khamar, and admittedly from the earliest time they were being obstructed.

The story about the complainant having got the key from Gooli and handing it over to Ajodheya is not proved and is highly improbable. No mention of it is made in the first information lodged on the 31st May, at 11 A. M., nor in the dying declaration of Sarja to the Sub-Inspector although the Sub-Inspector says that he told him that Dukhit came and asked for the keys. The keys were found, after the occurrence, in the possession of Gooli and he made them over to the Sub-Inspector. Ajodheya in his evidence in Court states that the keys and his Dhoti were snatched from him by Dukhit after he fell down but he did not make this statement to the Police. The explanation now offered as to how the keys went into the possession of Dukhit and produced by Gooli, is an after-thought. The learned Sessions Judge himself doubts the story about the keys. Upon the evidence in the case it is impossible to hold that the story of the key is at all true. This throws great doubt as to the complainant's case that he was in possession of the Khamar or that his men were in charge thereof at any time before the occurrence. Even Ajodheya and Paryag seem to be ignorant of what the contents of the Khamar were. They might have been loitering about the village now and then previous to the occurrence in order to reconnoitre and to engineer their plan to take possession of the Khamar. On the 31st of May, therefore, they occupied the Khamar for the first time unnoticed by Dukhit, Gooli, his Barahil, or other men. The prosecution story relating to the incident prior to the occurrence must, therefore, be rejected.

Now let us see what happened at the time of the occurrence.

The occurrence is said to have taken place at 5 A. M. on the 31st May. The first information report was lodged at 11 A. M. at Deoghar, which is 8 miles from Pipra, by Antu after consultation with the complainant Goberdhan.

Soon after, Ajodheya, Murari and Jai Nath arrived at the Thana. Their statements were taken down and they, along with Antu, were sent to the hospital by the Police for examination of their wounds. The Sub-Inspector immediately proceeded to the place of occurrence. He met Suba on the way who also had injuries and was sent to the hospital. The Sub-Inspector did not find Sarja and Paryag that day at the Khamar.

The next day, on the 1st of June, he found Paryag under a tree at quarter of a mile from the Khamar, with injuries on his head and body. Lastly, he found Sarja lying in water in the Chandan river about two miles away from the Khamar, off the

DUKHIT SHA V. EMPEROR.

Deoghar Road. He took down his statement and sent him to the hospital on a bed. Sarju, however, died on his way to the hospital.

Dukhit was arrested on the 1st of June and Gooli on the 2nd, and the other accused were arrested subsequently.

Briefly speaking, the case of the prosecution is that the aforesaid 7 persons deputed by Goberdhan were at the time of the occurrence on the verandah of the Khamar house. They state that Dukhit came with 50 persons and asked them to open the lock and on refusal he himself went into the verandah and tried to break open the lock. Dukhit was stopped by Sarju and Murari. Then he struck Sarju and Murari with a lathi and ordered his men to turn the complainant's party out, whereupon the people of Dukhit began to throw brickbats and strike the complainant's men with garases and lathies, the result of which was that all the seven persons on behalf of the complainant were more or less severely injured, and Sarju ultimately died the next day on his way to the hospital. The version of the accused is given by Dukhit himself on the 1st of June at 7 A. M. to the effect that he went to his Khamar to get seeds and he told his Barahil, Gooli Singh, to open the lock of the Khamar house, but Antu Dhanuk did not allow him to do so, saying that he would not allow him to do so so long as Goberdhan did not come. After this, Dukhit himself went to open it. Antu Dhanuk struck a lathi blow on his head and so did Ajodheya with a lathi.

The learned Sessions Judge has summarised the medical evidence as to the injuries received by the complainant's and the accused's parties. All the seven persons, Paryag, Suba, Jai Nath, Ajodheya, Murari, Antu and Sarju had a number of injuries more or less severe on different parts of their persons both front and back, on their heads, hands, neck, shoulders, and thighs, shins, cheeks. The deceased Sarju died on account of compound fracture of the skull and consequent injury to the brain.

Dukhit, on behalf of the accused, had three severe lacerated wounds on the forehead and one on the back of the head. He had also some ecchymosis and abrasions on the back, right arm, knee and finger. Gooli had slight abrasions on the right shoulder.

The wounds on both sides were caused in Doctor's opinion with lathi blows, while the incised wounds on Goberdhan's men were caused by a sharp instrument like Farsa. The number of men injured on the side of the complainant and the accused was 7 to 2, and the injuries also were much more in number on the side of the prosecution than on the side of the accused.

Six accused were arrested and placed on their trial. Two test identifications were held by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Maulvi Amjad Ali. On the first occasion, the 3rd of July, accused Gooli and Katku were produced. Gooli was identified by Antu, Murari, Jai Nath and Ajodheya, and Katku was identified by Paryag, Murari, Jai Nath and Ajodheya.

The second identification was on the 8th July, when Gooli, Ganpat, Burmah and Budhu were produced; Gooli was identified by Murari only; Ganpat by Suba only; Burmah by Murari only; and Budhu by Paryag only.

Thus, Ganpat, Burmah and Budhu were identified by only one witness. This was considered as insufficient evidence by Sultan Ahmed, J., for the purpose of their conviction. Mullick, J., agreed with him with regard to Budhu and Ganpat but not with regard to Dukhit, Gooli and Burmah. He does not give any reason to show how the case of Burmah is distinguishable from that of Ganpat and Budhu.

The learned Assistant Government Advocate contended that the case of Burmah was distinguishable from that of Ganpat and Budhu and invited our attention to the statement in the first information, where Antu stated that he would be able to identify the man who aimed a Farsa blow at him but whose name he did not know and also upon the fact that Bhodal Manjhi, chowkidar, produced a Farsa before the Police and said that he got it from one of the assailants of Burmah. His evidence is most unsatisfactory on the point. To the Deputy Magistrate he told that he did not know from whom he took the Farsa and in cross examination in the Sessions Court he said that he was induced to make this statement by Sankhi. No reliance can be placed upon the statement of such a witness. Antu himself did not recognize Burmah when he was produced at the test identification on the 8th of July. His statement in Court that he received the blow from Burmah Singh appears to be an after-thought after the chowkidar had made the statement that he recovered the Farsa from Burmah. If he failed to identify Burmah as his assailant when he was first produced on the 8th of July, his subsequent statement in Court cannot be accepted.

I would, therefore, hold that the evidence against Budhu, Ganpat and Burmah is insufficient for their conviction, whether there was an unlawful assembly or not.

Katku, no doubt, was identified on the 3rd of July by Paryag, Murari Jai Nath and Ajodhya. In the whole record there is absolutely no evidence to show that he took any part in the riot and the learned Sessions Judge also comes to the same conclusion. It has not been shown that he had any interest on behalf of Dukhit and Gooli, or how he helped them at riot. There is nothing to show that he was more than a mere spectator, and in a riot of this kind occurring in a village the mere presence at the place of occurrence will not make one a member of the unlawful assembly. Apparently, Mullik, J., also was of the same opinion, for he omits him altogether from his consideration. I would, therefore, acquit him also.

The case of Dukhit and Gooli, who admittedly were there and were interested in driving the complainant's party from the Khamar, requires serious consideration.

First, let us consider whether they actually struck any body on the side of the complainant. In the first information, or in the evidence of witnesses, (except Jai Nath and Murari) Gooli is not said to have struck anybody. Murari says that he was struck by Gooli and Jai Nath supports him; but Murari said to the Sub-Inspector that he could not say who struck him, so did Jai Nath. He was not identified either by Antu, Paryag or Jai Nath on the 8th of July. The evidence about his having struck anybody is unsatisfactory.

As to Dukhit, in the first information Antu stated that he gave Murari a lathi blow. In his evidence in Court he stated that Dukhit struck both Sarja and Murari with a lathi. Murari, Ajodhya, Prayag, Jai Nath, and Suba stated in their evidence that Dukhit struck Sarju on the head with a lathi. They did not say that he struck Murari. Sarju himself in his dying declaration does not say that he was struck by Dukhit. He only says that Dukhit ordered an attack, whereupon he was beaten and he fell down. He said he would recognize his assailants but he did not know their names. After Sarju is dead, the prosecution witnesses are now attributing his death to the blows given by Dukhit. This was not the case in the first information. To the Police none of these witnesses said that Dukhit struck any one. It is thus not proved that Dukhit gave the fatal blow to Sarju or that he actually gave any blows. On the other hand, it appears that he called his men to help and ordered an attack as stated by the deceased. This would naturally be when he himself was being struck when he went to open the Khamar house according to the case of both the parties. Dukhit, on behalf of the accused, must have been first wounded, for after the attack upon the complainant's men it was not possible for them to assault Dukhit, as according to their case they were severely wounded and fell down. They could not therefore, have been able to repel the attack and assault Dukhit. The learned Sessions Judge also holds that after Dukhit had been struck, his men in a body attacked Gobaradhan's men and drove them out. This is a plausible theory.

Thus, the severe injuries on the complainant's men were caused after Dukhit himself was struck. It is possible that there might have been some exchange of blows between Dukhit and Sarju and Murari when they were wrangling about the opening of the lock on the Khamar house. Dukhit and Gooli went to open the lock, the complainant's men resisted and there was then an altercation. Murari and Sarju would not permit him to open the lock. It is not clear as to what happened at that stage, but this is certain that the fight commenced on account of the resistance offered to Dukhit and Gooli in opening the lock, by the complainant's people, which led to an altercation in the course of which Dukhit received the injuries described by the Doctor. He called out to his men. This was responded to and the villagers, who were on the side of Dukhit, belaboured the complainant's men with lathi.

The question then is, whether Dukhit and Gooli are responsible for the assault on the complainant's men.

Dukhit was for a long time in direct possession of the Khamar house either on his own behalf or on behalf of the other members of the family including the complainant. The Assessors have found possession with him. His direct possession did not cease for a single moment. At least from a year before, when he filed his written statement in the partition suit on the 22nd October 1918, he has been claiming adversely to that of Goberdhan and he was thus in any case in adverse possession. The complainant was not present at the time of the occurrence but sent his hired men, the aforesaid seven wounded persons, to take sole possession of the Khamar, excluding Dukhit and Saukhi, his admitted co-sharer. He says that he meant to cultivate for himself and to give a share to Saukhi. He was thus trying to oust Saukhi and Dukhit from the Khamar house. The complainant's men occupied the Khamar on the morning of the 31st and were there merely as trespassers. They were Rajput Lathials, one of them being a sipahi Ajdheya, who was in service for the last two or three years, must have known of the partition suit and the rival claims of the parties. He and Paryag were the leaders of the party. Their object necessarily was to deprive Dukhit of his direct possession. Under section 441 of the Indian Penal Code, dealing with criminal trespass, possession only and not title, is to be considered. There was, therefore, a criminal intent in their occupation of the Khamar and thereby they were committing a criminal trespass. Against this trespass Dukhit had the right of private defence of property, so long as the complainant's party continued to be in the occupation of the Khamar, under section 105 of the Indian Penal Code. Under section 104 this right extended to causing to the trespassers, the complainant's men, any harm other than death subject to the restrictions placed upon it by section 99 of the Indian Penal Code, that is, of inflicting no more harm than was necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence. According to the case of the prosecution, Dukhit and Gooli went there simply to open the lock and to take out seeds from the Khamar house which admittedly was kept there by them. This was within their rights. The complainant's men admittedly resisted. This was clearly wrong and entitled Dukhit and his men to use such force as was necessary to turn them out. Altercation ensued and, according to the finding of the learned Sessions Judge, blows were exchanged. At that stage it is not known whether any harm more than what was necessary to turn them out was caused to the complainant's men. The learned Sessions Judge holds that, after Dukhit had been struck, his men in a body attacked Goberdhan's men and drove them out. The injuries on the person of Dukhit are, therefore, the result of that attack by the complainant's men. Three injuries on the head of Dukhit were severe; besides a number of injuries on different parts of his body, back, right arm, knee, finger and shoulder were caused. The attack on Dukhit by the complainant's men and their actually striking him with lathis must reasonably have caused an apprehension to him and his men that death or grievous hurt would be the result, and, as a matter of fact, some of the injuries were on the head and were severe. The right of private defence under section 103, clause (4), therefore, extended to the causing of death to the assailants, the complainant's men, subject, of course, to the restrictions placed by section 99.

The complainant's men are not shown to have ever desisted from the trespass, or that they would have done so unless they were beaten by Dukhit's men, and, therefore, no injury in this case appears to have been caused to them more than what was necessary for the defence of person and property. All of them had to be at once attacked and were, as a matter of fact, so attacked, so as to prevent any of them from striking Dukhit and causing his death. Unfortunately, Sarju, one of the complainant's men, received a serious injury on the head which resulted the next day in his death but that injury was necessarily the result of the exercise of the right of private defence by Dukhit and his men. Thus, the first restriction placed by section 99 does not apply to the case.

The next restriction placed upon the right of private defence is, that there should have been no time to have recourse to the protection of the authorities. The learned Sessions Judge apparently thinks that Dukhit or his men had time enough to go to the Police which was close at hand. The Thana is 8 miles away. The complainant's men had already occupied the Khamar house. The time for cultivation had arrived, inasmuch as both the parties went to commence the cultivation and Dukhit had already gone to take out seeds from the Khamar house. The trespass was already committed by the complainant's men. There was no time left to Dukhit to inform the Police. His immediate remedy was to turn them out. He simply went there and wanted to take out seeds, but the complainant's men resisted by means of force. The right of private defence of person then arose. There was not time to have recourse to the Police. Dukhit and his man, Gooli, had, therefore, a right of private defence and had not exceeded it. I agree with the learned Sessions Judge in his view that Goberdhan's conduct was unjustifiable, so also of his men who had hired themselves to support him. I also agree with him, as already observed, that after Dukhit was struck, his men in a body attacked Goberdhan's men and drove them out. But I disagree with him in the view that the right of private defence did not arise, or that they had exceeded that right, or that there was time enough to have recourse to the authorities. The men on behalf of Dukhit were not members of an unlawful assembly, whether they had gathered there from before or had suddenly appeared, for their object was simply to protect Dukhit's direct possession over the Khamar house and defend against an aggression and trespass to the property of that house. They never became, at any subsequent stage of the occurrence, members of an unlawful assembly. Dukhit and Gooli are also, therefore, entitled to acquittal, and for the matter of that all the other four accused persons whose case on identification has already been considered even if they were held to have been present there and taken part in the occurrence.

I have arrived at this conclusion after having fully considered the authorities cited on both sides: Moher Sheikh v. Queen Empress (3) and Baij Nath Dhanuk v. Emperor (2) on behalf of the Crown and Fouzdar Rai v. Emperor (4), Sunder Buksh Singh v. Emperor (5), Ohandulla Sheikh v. Emperor (6) on behalf of the appellants and I need hardly discuss them.

The result is that all the accused are entitled to acquittal and are hereby acquitted and set at liberty. Their conviction and sentences are accordingly set aside and their bail bonds are cancelled.

LADHA SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Mr. H. A. Herbert, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Ladha Singh has been convicted by a Magistrate, invested with section 30 powers, of attempting to murder three persons, vis, Musammât Amar Kaur, Musammât Gulab Devi and Gian Singh, and under section 307, Indian Penal Code, has been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment for the attempted murder of Musammât Amar Kaur, and to three years' rigorous imprisonment for the attempt to murder each of the other two persons, the sentences to run concurrently. The prosecution story, which will be found in the evidence of Nanka Singh (P. W. No. 2), is set forth in great detail in the judgment of the Magistrate and need not be repeated. The theory for the prosecution is that Ladha Singh mixed arsenic in peras and sent them by the hand of his step-son Bakhshish Singh (P. W. No. 13) to his step-daughter Musammât Amar Kaur with the intention that she should eat the poisoned stuff and die. She shared the sweetmeats with her neighbour Musammât Gulab Devi and with Gian Singh, her brother-in-law, who came up and asked for some of it. It is proved by the evidence of Nanka Singh and others that after the death of Musammât Jowala Devi, the appellant's wife and mother of Musammât Amar Kaur and Bakhshish Singh, relations became strained between the appellant on the one side and Musammât Amar Kaur and her husband's relations on the other. It is in evidence that Musammât Amar Kaur had gone to live in her husband's house, that Ladha Singh wanted her to return to his house in order that she might help to look after his one year old baby whose mother had died, that Musammât Amar Kaur refused to return and that he tried to persuade her and on the last occasion went away saying that he had come for the last time. It is, I consider, clearly proved by the evidence of Mul Singh, Labh Chand and Uttam Singh (P. Ws. Nos. 15, 6 and 4) that some ten days before the occurrence the appellant through Mul Singh purchased 9 mashas of arsenic from Labh Chand. The purchase was entered in Labh Chand's register in the name of Mul Singh because the latter was known to Labh Chand whereas the appellant was not known to him. I see absolutely no reason to disbelieve this evidence. In addition to this, we have very reliable evidence of Nihal Singh, Ishna Singh and Hardit Singh (P. Ws. Nos. 8, 10 and 16) to the effect that during the Police investigation the appellant produced a packet containing some 8 mashas of arsenic from his house. It has been contended that Hardit Singh the Head Constable, bore a grudge against the appellant, but, in my opinion, no such grudge has been proved and I see no reason to suppose that Hardit Singh has made up a false case against the appellant. Munshi Ram (P. W. No. 3) has given evidence as to the purchase by the appellant of peras from him, and Bakhshish Singh (P. W. No. 13) has described how the appellant gave a part of the peras to him to eat, and mixed some stuff which he took out of his dab with the remainder, and sent it by his hand to his sister Musammât Amar Kaur. Musammât Gulab Devi and Musammât Amar Kaur (P. Ws. Nos. 11 and 12) have given evidence as to Bakhshish Singh's bringing the sweetmeat to Musammât Amar Kaur and saying that Bhaiya, meaning thereby Ladha Singh, had sent it to her. Nanka Singh and Musammât Amar Kaur have deposed to all the previous circumstances and I am fully satisfied that the appellant had a motive for causing injury to Musammât Amar Kaur. It is possible, as she says, that the appellant had been making overtures to her, and it may be, because she rejected these and would not return to his house, that he made up his mind to kill her. Proof of an adequate motive, however, is not necessary if the evidence that the appellant sent poisoned sweetmeats is otherwise strong. Shortly after they had partaken of the sweetmeats, Musammât Gulab Devi, Musammât Amar Kaur and Gian Singh were all taken ill with vomiting and purging, and the medical evidence, together with the Chemical Examiner's report, satisfies me that their illness was due to arsenical poisoning. The mere fact that in Musammât Gulab Devi's excreta no arsenic was found is not at all conclusive proof that she did not eat any arsenic, because it is quite possible that all the arsenic taken was expelled when she first began vomiting and purging and that the vomit and excreta subsequently collected and sent to the Chemical Examiner did not contain any arsenic. It is, in my opinion, very clearly proved by reliable evidence that Ladha Singh sent poisoned sweetmeats to Musammam Amar Kaur with the intention of causing her death and that Musammam Amar Kaur, as well as Musammam Gulab Devi and Gian Singh, to whom she gave a part of the sweetmeat, all became seriously ill as a consequence of partaking it.

Dr. Nand Lal has raised two legal points. The first is that even if the appellant can be convicted of attempting to murder Musammam Amar Kaur, he cannot be convicted of any offence in regard to Musammam Gulab Devi and Gian Singh as he did not administer poison to them or intend that they should partake of the poisoned sweetmeats which he sent to Musammam Amar Kaur. Now, section 301, Indian Penal Code, deals with the case of culpable homicide by causing the death of a person other than the person whose death was intended. Having regard to this section, I am quite clear that if either Musammam Gulab Devi or Gian Singh had died as a consequence of eating the poisoned sweetmeats, the appellant would have been guilty of murder because he would indirectly have caused their death. In the case reported in Public Prosecutor v. Mushunooru Suryanarayana moorty (1) decided by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court the facts were as follows:—S., with the intention of killing N., gave him poisoned halwa to eat. N. ate a little and threw the rest away. This was picked up by R. who ate it and died. It was held that on these facts S. was guilty of murdering R. The law is fully dealt with in the judgment of the Court and I agree with the reasoning contained therein. If Musammam Gulab Devi and Gian Singh had died the appellant would have been guilty of murder. As they did not die but recovered, the appellant is guilty of the offence described in section 307, Indian Penal Code.

The second point urged is that the appellant cannot be convicted of an attempt to murder because it is not proved that the amount of arsenic which he caused to be taken was sufficient in the natural course to cause death. The facts in the case reported in Queen Empress v. Tulsha (2) are very similar to those of the present case. There it was found that a woman of twenty years of age had administered datura to three members of her family. They all recovered from the effects of the datura but it was held that she must be presumed to have known that the administration of datura was likely to cause death, and her conviction under section 307, Indian Penal Code, was maintained. Similarly, the appellant must be held to have known that the administration of a deadly poison, such as arsenic, was likely to cause death, and as he administered it with the intention of causing death and serious illness resulted therefrom from which the person to whom the arsenic was administered recovered, his conviction under section 307 is justified. The appellant's act was intended to cause death and he did all he thought necessary for the carrying out of his object. He cannot escape conviction merely because through some cause or other the persons to whom he administered the arsenic recovered. The present case is on all fours with the Allahabad case and Illustration (d) of section 307, Indian Penal Code, also appears to meet the case. The point, moreover, is not very important, because the appellant, even if he could escape conviction under section 307, Indian Penal Code, could certainly be convicted under section 328, Indian Penal Code, and if I thought it necessary to alter the conviction to one under that section, I should maintain the sentence. The appeal is dismissed.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Ellore, dated the 1st June 1920, in C. C. No. 223 of 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. R. Shenai, for the Petitioner.—The petitioner is a compositor in a Press. Though his work involves manual labour, the work of setting up types involves, to some extent, the use of brains also. It is not down right manual work. He cannot be called an artificer, workman or labourer Natuthodi Kunhi v. Chamu Nair (1).

The agreement in this case provides for re payment of the advance within a specified time. The relationship created is that of debtor and creditor and not servant and master. See Abdul Rasul Ismailji, In re (2) and High Court Proceedings, 9th January 1880 (3). Petitioner cannot be dealt with under Act XIII of 1859.

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown and Mr. V. Suryanarayana, for the Respondent.—A compositor has mainly to do manual work. He is an artificer.

Exhibit A, the agreement, provides for re-payment of the advance by periodical deductions from the petitioner's wages. The petitioner has to work out his advance. This is different from the agreements that were in question in the cases cited by the petitioner's Vakil.

(1) 43 Ind. Cas. 787; 41 M. 182; 33 M. L. J. 607; 22 M. L. T. 435; 19 Cr. L. J. 211; 6 L. W. 745; (1917) M. W. N. 825.

(3) 1 Weir 681,

ORDER.—The first question argued in this revision petition is whether the petitioner, who is a compositor, is an artificer, workman or labourer within the meaning of Act XIII of 1859. A compositor is defined in the Century Dictionary as one who sets up type. Mr. Shenai on petitioner's behalf contends that, because he has to use his brains to some extent in order to set type, he does not come within the scope of the Act. Mr. Shenai has relied on the judgment of Aiyang, J., in Natuthodi Kunhi v. Chamu Nair (1), but that is not in point. We think that a compositor, in ordinary parlance, would be regarded as an artificer, if not as a workman. This point, therefore, fails.

The remaining argument is that Exhibit A, the agreement between the petitioner and his master, simply creates a relation of debtor and creditor, not as a master with a workman who has received an advance. Reliance is placed on the construction put by the Court on what are alleged to be similar agreements in Abdul Rasul Ismailji, In re (2) and High Court Proceedings, 9th January 1880 (3). Neither of these cases is, in our opinion, analogous to the present. In the first the last sentence of the agreement provided, quite generally, for re-payment of the advance made within a period which was specified although, no doubt, from the workman's wages. In the second, similarly, the deposit or loan was to be refunded at the close of the period of the contract. In neither was there anything resembling the provision in Exhibit A by which the advance to the workman is to be re-paid by periodical deductions from the amount of his wages and should in any case be worked out by him.

The revision petition fails and is dismissed.

Where a person commits house-trespass and attempts to murder an occupant of the house he may be convicted of both these offences, but a separate sentence for each offence is not justified.

Queen-Empress v. Malu, 23 B. 703 (F. B.); 1 Bom. L. R. 142; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 472, followed Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, First Class, Kasur, District Lahore, with powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, dated the 8th July 1920.

Lala Rama Nand, for Maclvi Ghulam Muhy-ud-Din, for the Appellant.

Sardar Mehtab Singh, S. B., Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Barkat Ali, has been found guilty of having, on the night of the 10th/11th May 1920, made an attempt to murder one Buti; and has been sentenced under section 307, Indian Penal Code, to rigorous imprisonment for seven years. There can be no doubt that the victim was brutally assaulted on the night in question, and the medical evidence shows that his nose bone was smashed into innumerable fragments, and that the wound inflicted upon him was 2 inches deep.

The assault by the convict is deposed to not only by Buti, but also by his mistress Amda who was actually on the same bed with him at the time when he was struck. Further, we have the evidence of the witness Kamil (who was admittedly living in the same haveli with Buti) to the effect that upon hearing the noise he came up to the spot and saw the appellant going away from the courtyard where the victim was lying wounded on a charpoy. I have carefully perused the evidence of all these witnesses and see no valid reason to distrust it.

The convict puts forward the usual story that there was a fight between him and the victim in the course of which the latter fell down on a piece of wood and accidentally injured his nose. This story is perfectly absurd and deserves no serious consideration.

It appears that the offender had made immoral advances to Buti's mistress Amda, which were not responded to by the latter. This incensed the convict and led to a quarrel on the day preceding the night of the occurrence. Some friends, however, intervened, and there is evidence on the record to show that the appellant departed with the threat that Amda would not spend the ensuing night with Buti.

That there was a motive for the assault does not admit of any serious doubt, and upon the direct testimony referred to above it is clear that it was the appellant who committed the assault. The only question is whether the case fulfils the requirements of section 307, Indian Penal Code, or falls under section 325, Indian Penal Code. Now, the medical evidence shows that the blow was struck with tremendous force, and the bone of the nose, as stated above, was smashed into a large number of small pieces. There was profuse bleeding, and it was at one time feared that the victim might die. It is, further, clear that the offender intended to kill his victim or to cause such injury as he knew was likely to cause death. In these circumstances, I am of opinion that the conviction under section 307 is justified, and there is no adequate ground for interfering with the sentence.

The learned Magistrate has convicted the appellant also under section 452, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to three years' rigorous imprisonment. Now, the conviction for criminal trespass is technically correct, but I do not think that a separate sentence is justified, vide Queen Empress v. Malu (1).

Accordingly, I accept the appeal so far as to set aside the sentence imposed under section 452, Indian Penal Code. In all other respects the appeal is dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 528—Transfer, order of, by competent Magistrate—Cancellation of order by superior Magistrate without notice to party who obtained original order, legality of.

When a complainant has obtained from a competent Magistrate an order of transfer of a case made after hearing both the parties, a Magistrate of superior jurisdiction should not cancel the order and re-transfer the case to the original Magistrate without hearing the complainant in support of the order of transfer.

Petitioner, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Additional District Magistrate, Tanjore, dated the 1st July 1920, in D. Dis. No. 455 M. of 1920, preferred against the order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kumbakonam, in D. Dis. No. 205 Magl. of 1920 (C. C. No. 164 of 1920, on the file of the Court of the Stationary Sub Magistrate, Papanasam).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.—No order should be passed to the prejudice of a party without notice to him and without giving him an opportunity of being heard against the order. It was especially necessary in this case where the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had already made an order of transfer to the very Court from which the District Magistrate re-transferred it. Though notice is not required under the Code, it has been the invariable practice to act under the transfer sections only after hearing both parties.

Mr. V. L. Ethirai, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—Section 528, Criminal Procedure Code, does not require that action should be taken under it only after hearing both the parties. The issue of notice is a matter in the discretion of the Court.

ORDER.—In this case the Additional District Magistrate should have given notice to the petitioner, who was complainant in the case, before making the order of transfer. The complainant had obtained an order for transfer of a certain criminal charge filed in the Stationary Sub Magistrate's Court of Papanasam to the Sub-Magistrate's Court of Kumbakonam on the ground that he had reasons for apprehending that his case would not be properly tried. Thereupon the accused applied to the Additional District Magistrate of Tanjore for re transfer of the case from the file of the Sub-Magistrate of Kumbakonam to that of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Papanasam and the Additional District Magistrate made an order of transfer without giving any opportunity to the complainant in the case to be heard in support of the order of transfer which he had obtained from the Sub-Divisional Magistrate transferring the case from the file of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Kumbakonam. It may be, as contended by the Public Prosecutor, that the law entitles the complainant to no notice, when a Magistrate proposes to act under section 528, Criminal Procedure Code. At the same time, it is obvious that when the complainant has obtained an order of transfer from a competent Magistrate who made that order after hearing both the parties, a Magistrate of superior jurisdiction should not cancel the order and re-transfer the case to the original Magistrate without hearing the complainant in support of the order of transfer which he had obtained. I set aside the order of the Additional District Magistrate and direct the case to be restored to the file of the Sub-Magistrate of Kumbakonam.

Further enquiry, order for, when to be made—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 323, 325—Evidence that fight occurred, whether sufficient for conviction.

Where the whole of the available prosecution evidence has been recorded, an order for further enquiry means simply a second trial on the same evidence.

The mere fact that the District Magistrate places a different value on the evidence from that placed by the Trial Court is not a good ground for directing further enquiry under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Unless the evidence is good enough to warrant a clear finding as to the facts and as to the guilt of the accused no conviction under sections 323 and 325 of the Penal Code can be arrived at simply on the ground that enmity and a fight have been proved and that serious injuries have been caused in the fight.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Rohtak, dated the 10th April 1920, reversing that of the Magistrate, Second Class, Sonapat, District Rohtak, dated the 12th January 1920.

Lala Har Gopal, for the Petitioner.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Magistrate in this case passed an order of discharge after recording a lengthy judgment in which he fully discussed the evidence for the prosecution. In that judgment he points out the various discrepancies, and holds that the evidence of the complainant is not to be trusted, and that the offence has not been proved.

The District Magistrate has set aside the order of discharge and has ordered the case to be sent to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for trial. I presume that this means a re-trial. Apparently, all the evidence available has already been recorded, so a re-trial will simply be a second trial on the same evidence. The same discrepancies will again occur, unless the witnesses re-shape their evidence so as to avoid this.

The District Magistrate gives the following reasons for ordering a re-trial :

1. The medical evidence shows that Giani received six injuries including a broken skull.

2. There was previous enmity and on the day in question there was a fight between the two parties.

3. The District Magistrate does not think the discrepancies in the evidence or the reasons given by the Magistrate sufficient for a discharge.

As to No. 1 there is, of course, no doubt that Giani received injuries.

As to No. 2 also, no doubt there was enmity and a fight occurred. But unless the evidence is good enough to warrant a clear finding as to the facts and as to the guilt of the accused no conviction can be arrived at.

As to No. 3 the Magistrate's judgment is not, in my opinion, either manifestly perverse or foolish [See Emperor v. Kiru (1)], and I do not think that the mere fact that the District Magistrate places a different value on the discrepancies is a sufficient reason for a re-trial. The discrepancies pointed out are certainly not, in my opinion, such as can be regarded, as worthy of no consideration at all.

In my opinion, there is no good and sufficient ground for setting aside the order of discharge, and I accept this application and set aside the District Magistrate's order.

Though, as a matter of law, a conviction may be based upon a retracted confession if the Court can come to the unhesitating conclusion that the confession is voluntary, yet, as a matter of prudence, no conviction should be based upon such a confession. Whatever value may be attached to the retracted confession of an accused person as against himself, the value to be attached to such a confession as against a co-accused is exceedingly weak. Criminal appeal against the order, dated the 14th July 1920, of the Sessions Judge, Purnea.

Mr. G. O. Pal, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants, together with one Fidvi Hussain, were tried under section 302, Indian Penal Code, by the learned Sessions Judge of Purnea with the aid of two assessors.

The present appellants were convicted by the learned Sessions Judge under section 302, Indian Penal Code and sentenced to transportation for life. The trial was with the aid of two assessors, one of them holding that the charge under section 302 had not been established against the appellants while the other assessor was of opinion that the case had been satisfactorily proved against them.

The prosecution case may be stated as follows:—

The deceased Akbar Ali was the uncle of one of the prosecution witnesses, Tamizuddin, who lived jointly with the deceased at Mauza Rubia.

On the morning of the 19th of March Tamizuddin came to know that his uncle Akbar Ali was missing. He made a search for him but to no purpose. No trace of Akbar Ali was found. In the evening on the 19th Tamizuddin, therefore, lodged an information at the Thana as regards the disappearance of his uncle.

On his return from the Thana Tamizuddin met one of the witnesses in the case named Zulfat Hussain, and subsequently he also met another witness in the case named Sahar Ali and learnt from them that the appellant Chaharu was seen by them to have taken away his uncle Akbar Ali from the Baithaka of Zulfat Hussain on the preceding day, that is, the 18th March, in the night. Getting this information Tamizuddin sent for Chaharu but he was absent from his house. On the Sunday following he again sent for Chaharu at his house and questioned him as to the whereabouts of Akbar Ali. It is admitted on all hands that Chaharu had been a very great friend of Akbar Ali. Chaharu first of all, the prosecution case is, denied any knowledge of the whereabouts of Akbar Ali, but being pressed hard he told Tamizuddin that he had taken Akbar Ali while he was strolling about his door up to a Bansbari when certain persons seized him and carried him away towards Karakbasti. Chaharu also mentioned that Faiz Bux, accused, had seen this incident and, therefore, Tamizuddin went and questioned him and Faiz Bux seems to have corroborated the statement of Chaharu. Tamizuddin getting this information from Chaharu and Faiz Bux that possibly his uncle has been killed by the residents of Karakbasti went and reported the matter at the Thana next day stating that his uncle was probably murdered by some of the residents of Karakbasti.

After lodging the information he returned home the same day. On the following Tuesday Amiruddin, one of the witnesses in the case, informed Tamizuddin that he had learnt from some fishermen that they had come across a dead body in the Kanohan Jhil while they were fishing there. Upon this information two constables and several villagers were sent to that Jhil and they kept guard over it for that night. Next morning the Daroga Havildar and others came to the Jhil to search for the dead body which was found and recognised as the dead body of Akbar Ali. The dead body was ultimately sent to Kisesganj for post mortem examination and after investigation the accused were sent up by the Police for trial. It is alleged that there had been several disputes between Akbar Ali and Fidvi Hussain accused, and that on Friday preceding that Thursday on the night of which Akbar Ali disappeared, there was a certain ceremony in the house of Fidvi Hussain in connection with which there was a feast. It was alleged by the prosecution that Akbar Ali having had disputes with Fidvi Hussain refused to go and persuaded others not to go to that feast. This is said to have annoyed Fidvi Hussain and he thereupon instigated the appellants to murder the deceased. Fidvi Hussain and the appellants, therefore, on these facts were sent up for trial as I have stated above, but Fidvi Hussain was acquitted.

The accused Faiz Bux was arrested on the 25th March. On the 27th he was taken to the Sub Divisional Officer, Kissanganj, and his confession was recorded. Before his confession was recorded it appears that he made a statement to the Police that a dhoti belonging to the deceased could be found in the Kanshan Jhil. Accused Jagdeo was arrested on the 15th April and his confession was recorded on the 17th April.

It also appears from the evidence that a pair of shoes belonging to the deceased was found in the house of the appellant Chaharu, and chadar belonging to the deceased was found in the house of the appellant Maksud Ali.

The conviction of Faiz Bux rests on his confession and the discovery of the articles. The conviction of Jagdeo rests entirely upon his confession. The conviction of Maksud Ali depends entirely upon the discovery of a chadar in his house coupled with the statement made by the confessing accused. The conviction of Chaharu is based upon the discovery of the pair of shoes belonging to the deceased in his house as well as the evidence of Zulfat and Sahar Ali who said that they last saw the deceased in his company on the 18th of March, the night of the occurrence.

The case of Faiz Bux will be dealt with after we have dealt with the cases of the other three appellants.

Before we deal with the case of these accused individually, it may be pointed that the confession of the accused persons were retracted in the Court of the Committing Magistrate.

The case of Jagdeo rests, as I have stated above, upon his retracted confession, and though, as a matter of law, a conviction may be based upon a retracted confession if the Court can come to the unhesitating conclusion that the confession is voluntary, yet, as a matter of prudence, as has been held in the case of Safiruddeen, In re (1), Queen-Empress v. Amanullah (2), Queen-Empress v. Jadub Das (3), Queen-Empress v. Mahabir (4), no conviction should be based upon such a retracted confession. That being the consistent practice of all the Courts in India, we have absolutely no hesitation in refusing to act upon the retracted confession of this accused and convict him. We, therefore, direct that he be acquitted forthwith.

The conviction of accused Maksud is based upon the discovery of the chadar and the retracted confession of the co-accused, whatever value may be attached to the retracted confession of an accused, the value against the co-accused of such a retracted confession is exceedingly weak. In fact, cases have gone to the length of holding that no Court would be justified in acting upon such a confession. But even if that confession is considered, the corroboration which the discovery of the chadar affords is not such on which we can unhesitatingly come to the conclusion that the charge under section 302, Indian Penal Code, has been brought home to this accused. The result, therefore, is that this accused must also be acquitted.

The evidence against Chaharu consists of the discovery of the pair of shoes and the retracted confession of the co-accused. In his case, however, there is an additional fact that he was last seen by Zulfat and Sahar with the deceased. This additional fact, however, does not carry the case further than the case against accused Maksud whom we have just acquitted. Chaharu must, therefore, also be acquitted.

We now come to the case of Faiz Bux. Against him there is the retracted confession plus the discovery of certain articles. There can be no doubt that the Police found the cloth (dhoti) in the Jhil after statement was made by him. There can also be no doubt that he had mentioned in his confession that Chaharu had taken home the shoes of the deceased and Maksud had taken the chadar and they were found exactly as Faiz Bux had stated. These are circumstances which can undoubtedly afford corroboration of the confession and if this confession is admissible we think that effect should be given to it and the accused should be convicted. The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellant has, however, contended that the irregularities committed by the learned Magistrate in recording the confession are such that the confession should not be admitted at all. The learned Sub-Divisional Officer, it appears from the record of the confession itself, started by putting a question to the accused,

"what do you want to say?" Then he got down the statement of the accused. In the end, he put the following question:—

Question.—Did you make this statement out of your own free-will. Did nobody tutor you?

Answer.—I am making these statements out of my own free-will.

Question.—When did the Police arrest you?

Answer.—Day before yesterday at Chatti.

Then follows the usual certificate. There is no record that he gave any warning to the accused before recording his confession. It has repeatedly been pointed out that confessions so recorded are extremely defective. Prejudice that may be caused to the accused persons by such a record cannot be exaggerated. This case itself affords an illustration. This accused will be convicted upon a confession which, on the face of it, however, does not show that any warning was given to the accused. Reference to cases of Ragho Laya v. Emperor (5) and Jiubodhan Bhuian v. Emperor (6) clearly shows that the Magistrate must satisfy himself that the confession which he is about to record is voluntary. Such a confession, in the absence of any other provision of law which would by extraneous evidence make it admissible, could not be admitted at all. But the Legislature has, however, provided under section 533, Criminal Procedure Code, that defects of this character can be remedied. Mr. Sharling has been examined in the case and he has pledged his oath that he gave due warning before recording the confession. He tells us that he told the accused that he was a Magistrate and any statement that he would make may go against him, that he should not make any statement which he did not think proper to make. In short, he gave the accused all the warning that the law required him to give. In the face of the oath that he has taken in this case, it is difficult for us to say that the nature of the confession was anything but voluntary and once we hold that the confession is voluntary we are bound to act upon it, and if we are bound to act upon it, we are bound to convict the accused. If there had been no other circumstances to corroborate this confession we would have hesitated to convict the accused upon this confession. But when we find that there is evidence corroborating the statement of the accused in material particulars we are bound to accept the finding that the confession was voluntary. We accordingly uphold the conviction of accused Faiz Bux. The result is, that his appeal must be dismissed and the appeal of the other accused is allowed and they are directed to be released forthwith.

EMPEROR V. PAKHAR SINGH.

original turn lasted for six gharis but in consequence of his having mortgaged 14 bighas to Budh Singh he had to give up two gharis of his turn to Budh Singh. When Pakhar Singh had used the water for four gharis, Budh Singh wanted to take his turn, but Pakhar Singh would not agree and drove Budh Singh away. Pakhar Singh's defence is that he only mortgaged the land but did not give up his rights of irrigating the remaining land for the full period of six gharis. This defence was overruled by the Magistrate who held that the right to use the water went with the land, so the Magistrate convicted Pakhar Singh under section 70 (4) of the Canal and Drainage Act, VIII of 1873, and sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 10 or in default one week's rigorous imprisonment. Pakhar Singh appealed to the District Magistrate who agreed with the Magistrate on the merits, but held that the distribution of water with which Pakhar Singh interfered was not an "authorized distribution" within the meaning of section 70 (4).

We are informed by Sardar Mehtab Singh, who appears in this Court on behalf of the Crown, that the Canal Authorities distribute the water between the different villages, deciding how long each village is to have the use of the water, but that the internal distribution in any village is left to be settled by the proprietary body of that village. The question is, whether the distribution made by the villagers themselves is an authorised "distribution" within the meaning of section 70 (4). It is, as the learned District Magistrate describes it, a waribandi, based merely on mutual agreement between the persons who use the water. No doubt the canal authorities are quite content to leave it to the villagers to settle the internal distribution themselves, and so long as the arrangement works smoothly there is no need for the Canal Authorities to interfere. But still we find ourselves unable to hold that such distribution can be properly described as an "authorized distribution." By the words "authorized distribution" we understand, as does the District Magistrate, a distribution made by some authority, and we cannot regard a distribution made simply by the proprietary body as an "authorized distribution" within the meaning of section 70 (4).

It has been argued before us that it is merely a case of the Revenue Authorities delegating their own authority to the villagers, and that the arrangements made by the villagers are confirmed by the Revenue Authorities inasmuch as the latter realise water-rates in accordance with the distribution and thereby ratify the arrangements made by the villagers. No doubt, the Canal Authorities are quite willing to accept the arrangements made by the villagers and to levy the water-rates accordingly, but the mere fact that they accept the distribution made by the villagers does not, in our opinion, make that distribution an "authorized distribution" within the meaning of the Act. It is urged that if the Canal Authorities are driven to make the internal distribution within each of the villages, this will entail a tremendous amount of extra trouble and labour, but we are unable to see why each village should not be called on to submit a scheme for its own distribution which can be sanctioned by the Canal Officer concerned. In other words, the villagers can still continue to make their own arrangements as before, but when the arrangement has once been made in the village it can be put up before a Canal Officer for sanction. When that officer has once sanctioned the proposed arrangement, the distribution, though actually arranged by the village proprietors, will become a distribution sanctioned by the Canal Officer and will then have his authority. In the present case we are unable to find that the distribution made by the villagers has ever been submitted to any Canal Officer for approval or sanction. All that appears is that, so long as no trouble arises, the Canal Authorities are content to leave it to the villagers to make their own arrangements. We think it would be straining the law to hold that a distribution made by the village proprietors is an "authorized distribution" within the meaning of section 70 (4). We, therefore, agree with the finding of the learned District Magistrate and dismiss the appeal.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No 425 OF 1920.

October 2, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

ISRI PRASAD CHAWDHRI AND OTHERS,

1ST PARTY—PETITIONERS

versus

Shaikh WARASAT HUSAIN, 2ND

PARTY—OPPOSITE PARTY.

proceedings initiated on Police report—Jurisdiction.*

A Magistrate does not act without jurisdiction when he initiates proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code upon a Police report that there is a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. [p. 61, col. 1.]

Mr. J. N. Maitra, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Sami, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application was admitted on the ground that the Police report, upon which the proceeding of the Magistrate under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was drawn up, did not disclose any apprehension of a breach of the peace. In the proceeding the Magistrate has referred to the report of the Police Sub Inspector, dated the 2nd November 1919, and says that he is satisfied from that report that there is a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. This report is, therefore, the basis of the proceeding, and if that report does not afford any material for the Magistrate to be satisfied as to the existence of a "dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace", the Magistrate will have no jurisdiction for instituting the proceeding under section 145 of the Code. I entirely agree with the view expressed by Mr. Justice Sultan Ahmed in the case of Ram Saroop Chaudhury v. Musammatt Darsano Koer (1) that if the Police report upon which the proceeding of the Magistrate is founded, does not disclose any dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, the proceeding and the order of the Magistrate as to possession under section 145 based upon it will be ultra vires. I also agree with the view that the previous report of any Police Officer not referred to by the Magistrate in the proceeding will be of no avail to show the existence of such a dispute. We have, therefore, to confine ourselves to the Police report in the present case in order to see whether there was any material in that report to justify the Magistrate to say in the proceeding that he was satisfied of the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace.

The enquiry of the Sub-Inspector was started upon the report of the chawkidar to the effect that the parties were collecting mobs to plough the land in dispute and that consequently there would certainly ensue a severe rioting. A copy of this report of the chawkidar, noted in the Station Diary, was incorporated in the report of the Sub-Inspector. The Sub-Inspector made enquiries and concluded his report by a request to the Magistrate to take preventive action in order to put a stop "to the apprehended breach of the peace." From this it would seem that the Sub-Inspector accepted the report of the chawkidar and assumed it to be correct for there was no meaning in his request for his recommendation to the Magistrate to take preventive action. The Magistrate also could not ignore the chawkidar's report of the parties collecting mobs and of there being a likelihood of a serious riot in consequence of the dispute between the parties, inasmuch as the chawkidar's information was made a part and parcel of the Sub-Inspector's report. It was not a separate independent previous report such as is referred to in the decision of Mr. Justice Sultan Ahmed in the aforesaid case relied upon by Mr. Haque. Apart from the chawkidar's report, there was material in the Sub-Inspector's report itself contained in the concluding passage already referred to, upon which the Magistrate was entitled to be satisfied in his mind of the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace.

We cannot look into the sufficiency or otherwise of the material. If there was no material at all in the Police report, the Magistrate would have no jurisdiction to institute a proceeding under section 145 of the Code. But this is not the case here. The concluding words of the Police report may not be sufficient in the minds of others, yet they might be sufficient to satisfy the Magistrate. This would not oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to take action under section 145 of the Code.

ISRI PRASAD CHAUDHRI v. WARASAT HUSSAIN.

This has been made clear by the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Parmessar Singh v. Kailaspati (2) Chamier, O. J., observes as follows:—

“For instance, at one time it was said that a High Court could examine the information that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace, on which the Magistrate initiated the proceedings with a view to testing its reliability or sufficiency, but it is now well-settled that the sufficiency of the information is entirely a matter for the Magistrate and that the High Court will not require it to be furnished to him in any particular form.”

It will be dangerous to hold otherwise. The Magistrate being responsible for peace and order, his discretion to institute a proceeding under section 145 should be unfettered, provided he has before him material, however slight, for his being satisfied as to the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. The Legislature has purposely laid down in clause (1) of section 145 of the new Code that all that the Magistrate need be satisfied of, for the purpose of instituting proceeding under section 145, is “that a dispute likely to cause breach of the peace existed”. No longer the danger need now be imminent or immediate. No longer the Magistrate should wait till the matters precipitate into a riot ending, perhaps, in bloodshed, which only a timely action under section 145 can avoid or prevent. I, therefore, hold that upon the materials in the present case the Magistrate was entitled to start the proceeding under section 145 and his action was not without jurisdiction. I need not refer to the other authorities cited by Mr. Haque, for he conceded that the ruling already referred to [Ram Saroop Chaudhury v. Musammatt Darsano Koer (1)] is the strongest and approaches more nearly to the present case than others. True, as pointed out by Mr. Haque, witnesses during the enquiry do not speak of any danger to a breach of the peace. But there is no necessity of any evidence being recorded on the point, for, after the proceeding is legitimately started under clause (1) of the section, the enquiry under clause (4) is restricted the finding out of the possession of the parties. For the same reason, the Magistrate is not required to record a finding on the existence of a danger to the breach of the peace in his final order under clause (4), declaring one of the disputing parties to be in possession of the propriety. The petitioners did not offer any evidence of there being no danger to the breach of the peace, nor did they, it is conceded, urge this point in argument before the Magistrate. They did not avail themselves of clause (5) of the section, under which it was open to them to show to the Magistrate that no such dispute, as was mentioned in the proceeding drawn up under clause (1), existed. The fact stated in the proceeding, that the Magistrate was satisfied as to the existence of dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, remained, therefore, unchallenged at the trial. This shows that the Magistrate was right in the interpretation of the Police report and in his coming to the conclusion upon that report that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed. This also shows that the petitioners would not have raised this objection if the decision of the Magistrate was not adverse to them on the question of possession. I do not think they can be permitted to take this objection in revision unless there was a clear want of jurisdiction: Vide Kulada Kinkar Roy v. Danesh Mir (3). Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court observe as follows:—

“But he contends that, as the Police report, upon which the Magistrate proceeded to draw up the initial order, was defective and did not set out sufficient facts to justify an apprehension of the breach of the peace, the whole proceedings were without jurisdiction, and it is the duty of this Court to set aside the final order. We have no hesitation in holding that we ought not to accede to this contention. Here the petitioner, in the language of Coleridge, J., in Marsden v. Wattle (4), chose to wait and take the chance of judgment in his favour, and he cannot now be heard to complain of excess of jurisdiction and to claim as matter of right that the proceedings should be quashed. The rule laid down by the Court of Appeal in

EMPEROR v. NGA PO SIN.

Harguharon v. Morgan (5), namely, that where total absence of jurisdiction appears on the face of the proceedings in an inferior Court, the superior Court is bound to interfere, does not, even in its limited form, apply to the circumstances of this case, and so far as we are aware, has never been adopted by the Courts of this country."

I, therefore, overrule the principal objection, upon which this application was admitted and the Rule was issued.

Mr. Haque then contends that the order of the Magistrate is wrong, inasmuch as he has discarded the documentary evidence of the parties as being valueless, has omitted to consider the mortgage-bonds and other documents produced by the petitioners and exhibited in the case and has based his finding of possession in favour of the second party upon insufficient documentary evidence.

I have carefully considered this argument and at first it appeared to me to be plausible, but on a full consideration I am unable to agree with the contention of Mr. Haque. The Magistrate has considered the oral and documentary evidence adduced by the parties. No doubt, he thought the oral evidence adduced by the parties as valueless. He was, however, of opinion that the documentary evidence was overwhelming and conclusive as to the possession of the second party. He has detailed them seriatim A to B. It would appear that the road cess jamabandi filed by the proprietors including the family of Isri, the first party, and the decision of the butwara officer in the presence of first party whereby the names of the second party were recorded, conclusively proved their possession of the land. The recent butwara paper, particularly after contest, is under the law conclusive as to possession in a proceeding under section 145 of the Code. The name of the second party is further recorded in the Zemindar's Sarishta and rent receipts were granted by the first party, Isri Chawdhri and his co partners. The oral evidence supported by the aforesaid documents, though in itself valueless, might very well cause preponderance of evidence in favour of the second party. Therefore, the Magistrate's finding is unchallengeable when he says:—

"I am satisfied on the consideration of the entire facts and evidences that the second party is in possession."

In face of this clear statement, it cannot, with any propriety be said that the Magistrate did not consider the documents on behalf of the first party. There is, therefore, no error of jurisdiction in the order passed by the Magistrate.

The application is accordingly rejected.

UPPER BURMA JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 383 of 1920.

May 10, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Heald, A. J. C.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

NGA PO SIN—ACCUSED.

Burma Towns Act (III of 1907), ss. 7 (1) (k), (l), 9 (2)—Headman, duties of, whether include conveyance of dak—Refusal to assist headman—Offence.

It is no part of the ordinary duty of a ward headman to provide coolies to take out a Deputy Commissioner's letters from his headquarters. [p. 64, col. 1.]

Therefore, where a person residing within a ward is requested by the headman to convey letters to the Deputy Commissioner's camp and he fails to do so, he is not guilty of an offence under section 9 (2) of the Burma Towns Act. [p. 64, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The headman of Mingyaunggon ward in Bhamo Town was ordered by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Bhamo to provide a cooly to take letters to the Deputy Commissioner, who was on tour. The ward headman ordered one Po Sin, who is a fisherman, to go, but Po Sin failed to go, because, as he says, he was footsore and his daughter was ill. The headman complained to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, who transferred the complaint to the Additional Township Magistrate "for trial under section 9 (2) of the Burma Towns Act." The Magistrate tried Po Sin and convicted him under that section, fining him Rs. 5.

The District Magistrate, who is of course also Deputy Commissioner, called for the record in revision, and reported it to this Court for a ruling as to whether or not Po Sin was rightly convicted.

Section 9 of the Towns Act says that every person residing in a ward shall, on the requisition of the headman, be bound to assist him in the execution of his public duties and that if he refuses or neglects to comply with any lawful requisition of the headman he shall, in the absence of reasonable excuse, be liable to fine.

Section 7 specifies the public duties of a headman and the District Magistrate suggests that the duty "generally to assist all officers of the Government in the execution of their public duties," may possibly cover the present case.

There seems to be no ruling in either Upper or Lower Burma exactly on the point.

The case of Queen Empress v. Nga Kauk (1) was in some respects similar, but the wording of the clause on which the decision was based was different.

The meaning of clause (n) of section 8 of the Village Act, which corresponds to the clause (l) of section 7 of the Towns Act to which the District Magistrate refers, was considered in the case of King Emperor v. Lu Pe (2), but the circumstances of that case were different and the ruling is of little, if any, help towards the decision of the point raised in the present case.

It seems to me that it is impossible to lay down any general rule and that each case must be decided on its own merits.

It is possible to conceive circumstances under which the refusal of a villager or resident of a ward to take a message from the headman to the Deputy Commissioner would be punishable under section 9 (2) of the Towns Act, but it seems to me that it is no part of the ordinary duty of a ward headman to provide coolies to take out a Deputy Commissioner's letters from his head-quarters and that, in the absence of proof of any emergency, the Sub Divisional Officer's requisition calling on the headman to perform that duty was not warranted by the provisions of section 7 of the Towns Act.

The clause (k) of section 7 to which the Township Magistrate referred, was obviously inapplicable. It says merely that it is the duty of a ward headman to collect and furnish guides, carriage, and means of transport for troops or Police and provides that payment for those services must be made in advance. In the present case there is no suggestion that any payment was ever tendered, and the services required were not those mentioned in that clause.

I am of opinion that the conviction in this case was mistaken, and, as the case has been reported by the District Magistrate, I set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the accused be acquitted and that the fine which has been paid be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

Under section 10 of Madras Regulation II of 1816 a Village Magistrate has power to enforce a sentence of confinement only in the village choultry and nowhere else. Confinement of an accused person in front of a temple is illegal.

Petition, under sections 107 of the Government of India Act, and clause 27 of the Letters Patent, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Village Magistrate, Vellai Adambar, in C. C. No. 1 of 1919, dated the 31st December 1919.

Mr. R. Ganapathi Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—Section 10 of Regulation II of 1816 authorises the Village Magistrate to sentence a person guilty of certain offences of a trivial nature to confinement in the village choultry for a period not exceeding 12 hours. In this case the accused was sentenced and placed in confinement in front of a temple which is said to be a public place in the village of Vellayathambur. The Village Magistrate has power only to enforce the sentence of confinement in the village choultry and nowhere else. [See Kumarasami Ohetty, In re (1)]. The sentence is, therefore, set aside.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Badaun, dated the 20th May 1917.

Mr. Lakshmi Narain, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—On the authority of the case of Nandan Singh v. Ganga Parshad (1) and the case of Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar (2), I think that we have no alternative but to restore the decree of the first Court, allowing the appeal with costs here and hitherto.

SULAIMAN, J.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit for mesne profits. It appears that on the 17th of August 1878 one Musammal Mohan Kuér who was only a limited owner, made a mortgage of the property for which mesne profits are now claimed in favour of the defendants. It is now admitted that on the death of Mohan Kuér, Piarey Lal, her daughter's son, succeeded to the full proprietary interest in the property, the mortgage being good only for her lifetime. On the 30th of September 1915, Piarey Lal sold his rights and interest to the plaintiff. After this the plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of possession of the property covered by the sale deed without claiming any mesne profits. The exact date on which the suit was brought is not apparent from the record. On the 16th of August 1916 a decree for recovery of possession was passed in favour of the plaintiff. After this decree, the plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of mesne profits for the year 1323 Fasli, on the 16th of September 1916. I may note that the year 1323 Fasli begins from a period previous to the execution of the sale-deed and extends right up to the 11th of September 1916, that is to say, sometime after the passing of the decree for possession. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. The learned District Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the present claim was barred by Order II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff comes up in second appeal to this Court, and the case has been referred by a Single Judge of this Court to a Bench of two Judges. On behalf of the plaintiff it is contended that a claim for mesne profits arises out of quite an independent and distinct cause of action from that on the basis of which a suit for recovery of possession is brought, and that, therefore, the present claim was in no way barred by the provisions of Order II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the old Act, VIII of 1859, in section 10 there was an express provision under which a claim for mesne profits was deemed to be based on a distinct and separate cause of action from a claim for recovery of possession. Act XIV of 1882 apparently introduced an alteration. The words of the present Act, V of 1908, Order II, rule 4, are similar to section 44 of Act XIV of 1882, and are as follows :—

“No cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property, except claims for mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed or any part thereof.” On behalf of the appellant it is contended that as Order II, rule 4 is worded it is quite clear that the Code contemplates that the claim for mesne profits is based on quite a distinct cause of action from the claim for the recovery of immoveable property. If the question had been res integra, I might have had some difficulty in accepting this interpretation of the rule, but the Full Bench case of Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar (2) has interpreted this rule in the way contended for by the learned Vakíl for the appellant; and in the Full Bench case of Nandan Singh v. Ganga Parshad (1) an opinion has been expressed which to some extent supports his contention. In this latter case it was distinctly held that a claim for arrears of rent is not on the same cause of action as a claim for possession of the property. Now, a claim for mesne profits and a claim for arrears of rent stand on the same footing so far as Order II, rule 4, is concerned. I, therefore, think that the view expressed by the Full Bench is binding on this Court. The claim is not barred by Order II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure; but the plaintiff is entitled to mesne profits only from the date of his sale-deed, dated the 30th of September 1915, up to the end of the Fasli year. This amount had been granted to him by the Court of first instance. I would, therefore, restore the decree of the first Court.

By THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance is restored with costs in all Courts.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. L. A. Govindaragava Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The plaintiff's suit is not sustainable having regard to the provisions of Order XXI, rule 93, Civil Procedure Code. Though the sale was held while the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 was in force the judicial declaration that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold was made only after the passing of the new Code. The plaintiff, the Court auction-purchaser, cannot claim the benefit of section 315 of the old Code which gave him the right to restitution of the purchase-money. Order XXI, rule 93 of the new Code, which corresponds to the old section 315, does not prescribe such remedy for the auction-purchaser unless, on his application to set aside the sale under rule 91. See Mohideen Ibrahim v. Mahamed Meera Levvai (1) and Tirumalaisami Naidu v. Subramaniam Chettiar (2). Also Abbott v. Minister of Lands (3).

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachari, for the Respondents.—The cases relied on by the other side are applicable only to sales held under the new Code. The statutory right to a refund of the purchase money in the eventuality of the judgment-debtor being found to have no saleable interest was acquired by the purchaser the moment the sale was held under section 315. The sale, which is the potent factor, was held under the old Code. The right of the purchaser cannot be divested merely because the judgment-debtor's absence of interest was declared after the passing of the new Code. The purchaser would not have bid at the auction if he had not the statutory safeguard provided by section 315.

JUDGMENT.—The facts antecedent to this case are thus summarised by the learned District Judge: "The first defendant's late husband obtained a decree against two persons, Manisami and Arumugam, and attached certain property and brought it to sale on 20th August 1906. The plaintiff purchased certain items and paid the money which was applied to the decree in rateable distributions. A third party then sued the plaintiff and first defendant's late husband. The suit was dismissed in 1907, but the first appeal was allowed in 1910 and the second appeal confirmed this in 1912. It was declared that the judgment debtors had no saleable interest and the sale was, therefore, set aside.

On this, plaintiff sued to recover from first defendant, as the representative of her late husband, the portion of the sale price paid by him, which had been paid over to her husband in rateable distribution. The District Munsif dismissed the suit as not maintainable. The District Judge, on appeal held that the suit was maintainable and remanded it for disposal on its merits. Against this the present appeal is preferred.

The sole question is, whether the suit will lie. Mr. Govindaragava Aiyar for appellants draws our attention to the difference between section 315 of the old Civil Procedure Code and the corresponding provision of the present Code, (Order XXI, rule 93) and argues that under the present Code where the judgment-debtor is found to have no saleable interest in the property sold, the auction purchaser has no remedy at all except in cases where he himself applies under rule 91 within the prescribed time to have the sale set aside. As authority he relies on the judgment of Napier, J., in Mohideen Ibrahim v. Mahamed Meera Levasi (1) and of a later Bench of this Court in Tirumalaisami Naidu v. Subramaniam Chettiar (2). If the question has to be decided solely with reference to the provisions of the present Code these cases are certainly authority for Mr. Govindaragava Aiyar's contention, though we desire to guard ourselves against expressing concurrence (as at present advised) in the conclusions therein arrived at. It is, however, unnecessary for us now to decide the somewhat difficult question of the position of the auction-purchaser in such cases, because there is an important differentiating factor in the case before us. The sale with which we are concerned was held in 1906 under the old Code and that Code declared that, "when it is found that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in the property which purported to be sold and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it, the purchaser shall be entitled to receive back his purchase-money (with or without interest as the Court may direct) from any person to whom the purchase-money has been paid." (Section 315). Plaintiff in the present case would undeniably have been entitled to the right thus declared if the old Code had remained in force and, in our opinion, he is not deprived of its benefit by reason of the supersession of that Code by the present enactment. The sale was held under the Civil Procedure Code of which the section above quoted was a part: this was in effect one of the conditions of sale and a most important one at that. As already stated, we do not propose to discuss the state of affairs under the present Code. But it cannot be denied that the right of an auction purchaser to recover back his money where it turns out that the judgment-debtor had no interest in the property is a very potent factor in determining the amount a reasonable man would bid. The absence of such a remedy and the consequent necessity of guarding himself against the risk of total loss of his money must tend to make a prudent man limit his bidding to something materially below what he may estimate to be the market value of the property. In the present case plaintiff must be taken to have made his bid in reliance on the guarantee of remedy in a certain eventuality given him by section 315 of the Code then in force and he is, in our opinion, both equitably and legally entitled to the benefit of that provision in spite of the fact that the Legislature did not choose to reproduce it in the present Code, which governs the sales that take place after its enactment. It is true that the absence of saleable interest in the judgment debtor was not declared till 1910, but this is immaterial, GANGA PRASAD v. RAM SARUP.

He is none-the-less entitled to the benefit of the express declaration of the law under which he purchased, that in a certain eventuality he should have his remedy. We think the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving (4) is very much in point in this connection. To quote the words of Lord Macnaghten this is more than a matter of procedure, it touches a right in existence at the time of the passing of the Act. We do not think the case relied on by appellants' Vakil, Abbott v. Minister of Lands (3), has any bearing on the question. That case turned on the right to exercise an option, which was not in fact exercised until the law conferring it was abrogated. The right to recover in a certain eventuality claimed in the present case was a right which accrued the moment plaintiff paid the sale price.

The conclusion we have taken on this point is identical with that arrived at by the learned Judges in Tirumalaisami Naidu v. Subramaniam Chettiar (2).

We dismiss the appeal with costs of first respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1174 OF 1917.

July 5, 1920

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott and

DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

Hindu Law—Joint family—Father, as manager, right of, to alienate family property—Necessity—Burden of proof.

A father, as manager of a joint Hindu family, has not a general right to dispose of joint family property by way of sale or mortgage. Even though the money raised is used by him in some business by which he expects to make more money. Where a mortgage of family property by a father is sought to be enforced, the burden lies heavily on the person seeking to enforce it, of proving the existence of legal necessity for the transaction [p. 69, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 23rd May 1917.

Dr. K. N. Katiu, for the Appellants.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit on a mortgage of the 2nd of May 1909. The mortgagors were two brothers, Newazi and Dhanna. The suit is brought by the mortgagee against these two, along with Ganga Prasad and Basant, the minor sons of Dhanna. The property alienated was a share in an ancestral house, of which share the present owners are admittedly the four defendants. The object of the suit, of course, is to bind the interest of the two minor defendants in the property sought to be brought to sale. The mortgage-debt is stated in the deed in suit at Rs. 500. It was made up as follows:—Rs. 269 was already due to the mortgagee upon a series of loans advanced to the mortgagors on their personal security; a sum of Rs. 231 was to be paid over at registration. The minors filed a separate written statement raising various defenses. We are only concerned at present with the fact that they challenged the plaintiff to prove that the sum of Rs. 231 was actually advanced and, secondly, that, if advanced, it was borrowed by the mortgagors for any such legal necessity as would entitle them to charge the ancestral joint family property.

The Court of first instance found for the plaintiff on all issues so far as these concerned the sum of Rs. 269, and the appeal now before us does not challenge the right of the plaintiff to obtain a decree for sale in respect of this sum with interest.

The Trial Court, however, upheld the defence of the minors in respect of the item of Rs. 231 to its full extent, holding that it was not proved that this cash advance had ever been made by the mortgagee to the mortgagors. On this finding, of course, the question of legal necessity for this loan did not arise. In appeal the learned District Judge held that Rs. 231 had, in fact, been paid over by the mortgagee to the mortgagors at the time of registration, though not in the presence of the Sub-Registrar. This is a finding effect by which we are bound and which is not challenged in the memorandum of appeal before us. The question remains, whether this sum of Rs. 231 represents a debt incurred for legal necessity. On one point which has only incidentally been taken by the learned District Judge, the appellants are certainly right. It appears that of the two appellants in this Court, namely, the two minor sons of Dhanna, Ganga Prasad, the elder, was in existence at the time when the mortgage in suit was contracted while Basant, the younger, was born subsequently. The learned District Judge has remarked incidentally that, under these circumstances, Basant, at any rate, is not entitled to challenge the alienation. On the principles laid down by a Bench of this Court in Tulshi Ram v. Babu Lal (1) it is sufficient that the elder of the two minors, Ganga Prasad, was in existence at the time of the alienation to enable this defense to be set up on behalf of his younger brother as well as of himself. There remains the question whether the learned District Judge's finding that there was legal necessity for this loan of Rs. 231 is a correct finding, or is one with which we can or should interfere in second appeal. The question of legal necessity is usually a mixed question of fact and of law. The evidence on which the learned District Judge has seen fit to proceed is undoubtedly slender, but we are prepared to accept so much of his decision as can be treated as a finding of fact. It appears then that, at the time when this transaction was entered into, Newazi and Dhanna were carrying on a business as contractors for the Saddle and Harness Factory at Cawnpore. They borrowed this sum of Rs. 231 for the purpose of this business. There the evidence stops, and the learned District Judge himself has recorded no finding which goes beyond this. He seems to be of opinion that a father, as manager of a joint Hindu family, has a general right to dispose of joint family property by way of sale or mortgage, provided that the money thus raised is used by him in some business by which he expects to earn more money. In our opinion this is not a correct statement of the powers of the manager of a joint Hindu family, and a heavier burden of proof lay upon the plaintiff mortgagee in this case before he could succeed as regards this loan of Rs. 231. We are content to refer to what is practically the latest authority on this point, the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2). We refer particularly to the remarks regarding the onus of proof in such a suit as the present, which are to be found at page 445 of the report. In our opinion this appeal must succeed.

We set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance so far as these present appellants are concerned. The appellants in this Court will be entitled to their costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court. The costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale. We formally enlarge the time for payment to three (3) months from the date of this decree.

RESPONDENT.

Life Assurance Company—Agent, right of, to receive commission on premia paid subsequent to his dismissal.

In the absence of a definite agreement to that effect, an Agent of a Life Assurance Company is not entitled, on the termination of his services, to commission on subsequent premia paid by policy-holders in respect of policies secured by him, as his right to receive commission on such policies lapses on his dismissal. [p. 74, cols. 1 & 2.]

EMPIRE OF INDIA LIFE ASSURANCE CO. LTD., BOMBAY v. NANU AIYAR.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Vellore, in Appeal Suit No. 2 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Vellore, in Original Suit No. 307 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, (with him Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri), for the Appellant.—The lower Court erred in allowing commission to the respondent on premia paid by policy-holders after the termination of his agency. The respondent does not base his suit as for damages for wrongful dismissal. The lower Court has ignored the book 'Instructions to Agents,' Exhibit T, which is part of the contract between the parties. Article 29 of that book clearly sets forth that the commission was payable only so long as the premiums were paid and the agent continued to represent the company. Even if there was no such contract, the agent who is paid commission for services to be rendered will not be entitled to it when he is no longer in a position to render any service to the company. See Albert Life Insurance Arbitration, Lewin's case (1). Generally, the services for which an agent is paid by way of commission are more substantial than the introduction of policy-holders. They are in the Book of Instructions, vide Articles 31 and 41, and it is only reasonable that the commission lapses on the termination of his agency.

Mr. T. A. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Respondent.—Generally, the commission is for the agent's introducing business to the company. He is entitled to commission on whatever is paid by customers whom he introduced. In Bilbee v. Hass & Co. (2), Salomon v. Brownfield (3) and Gerahty v. Baines (4), the commission agent was allowed commission even after his severance from the principal.

JUDGMENT.

NAPIER, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit by one S. Nannu Iyer against the Empire of India Life Assurance Company of Bombay. The plaintiff alleges that he was once an agent of the company and claims a declaration and an account in respect of all premia paid by the policy holders in respect of all policies procured by the plaintiff after the termination of the plaintiff's services as agent. The plaintiff does not allege that he was wrongfully dismissed or claim damages for wrongful dismissal. The lower Appellate Court has found that he was an agent employed by the company and was properly dismissed for misconduct but, on the terms of his engagement, as found by itself, has held that the plaintiff is entitled to premia on the original policies obtained through his efforts for three years prior to the suit. I accept the finding as to the agency, but the important question remains whether the lower Appellate Court has based its finding as to the terms of engagement on proper materials. The plaintiff alleged that he was engaged on certain terms, but in his plaint did not state whether his engagement was in writing or oral. In his evidence he endeavoured to establish that he was engaged on the terms of a letter, which is Exhibit F in the case, his evidence being "the terms written to me by Venkatachela Iyer (that is the chief agent) are mentioned in Exhibit F" The lower Appellate Court has found that Exhibit F was not addressed to him nor any letter in those terms, and as Exhibit F is not a letter but a circular and as he has proved no other letter there can be no doubt that this finding is correct. But the lower Appellate Court has held that he was engaged on the terms set out in a letter, Exhibit S. Now, Exhibit S is not a letter addressed to the plaintiff, but a letter addressed by the Chief Agent for Madras to the Company at Bombay in 1913 and is his report about the plaintiff after the date of his dismissal. In that letter the agent states that the plaintiff had been working under him until the 30th March 1912 under the terms of 10 per cent. commission on the first year's premia, 5 per cent. on renewals plus a bonus of one per cent. on new collections up to Rs. 1,000, 2 per cent. up to Rs. 3,000 and 3 per cent. above Rs. 3,000 and he states that he gave one copy of the book of "Instructions to Agents" to the plaintiff. The admissions by this servant of the company must, of course, be taken altogether and the statement that the sub-agent was supplied with a copy of the "Instructions to Agents" is part of the admission as to the terms of percentage,

This "Instructions to Agents" is Exhibit T in the case. This has been ignored by the Subordinate Judge, whereas it should have been treated as part of the contract.

The "Instructions to Agents" sets out the terms of commission and bonus commission and, as the evidence shows those rates have been altered, the contract is varied to that extent, but other terms undoubtedly apply. Article 29 which is in that part of the book dealing with commission is as follows:—"The commission is allowed so long as the premia are paid and the agent continues to represent the company." This clause was, in my opinion, part of the contract and this being so the claim must fail in toto.

Even if Article 29 was not incorporated in the contract, I should be of the same opinion. This claim by an agent or sub-agent to be entitled to renewal premia after his connection with the company was severed, was a subject of a suit, O. S. No. 100 of 1899 on the Original Side of the High Court. In that suit the plaintiff alleged that he was wrongfully dismissed and that he was entitled to receive the future premia. Boddam, J., held that he was properly dismissed for improper and fraudulent conduct and dismissed the suit. The case went on appeal (O. S. Appeal No. 42 of 1899) before Shephard and Davies, JJ., and their Lordships held that, in the absence of any specific agreement for such payment, the agreement must be treated as binding only as long as the agency lasted.

Another suit was filed on the Original Side of the High Court in 1903, O. S. No. 178 of 1903. In that suit the plaintiffs, who were the head Madras Agents, had their agreement terminated by notice and not for misconduct. They claimed that they were entitled to commission on renewal premia as long as any policy remained in force which had been obtained by them or their sub agents. The case was tried by Moore, J., who found that the agreement in that case was founded on Exhibits O and P, two Instruction Books, and he states that nothing is said in either of them as to whether the commission is to continue to be paid after the termination of the agency or not. The learned Judge held that, as there was no claim for damages as compensation for wrongful termination of the agency, the claim could not be sustained. An appeal was filed from that decision but withdrawn.

The claim has lately been renewed in a suit on the Small Cause Side of the District Munsif's Court of Cuddapah in Small Cause Suit No. 991 of 1915, which was brought before a Bench of this Court in Civil Revision Petition No. 933 of 1916. That suit was against the defendants in this suit by another dismissed agent. There, too, the plaintiff did not claim that he was wrongfully dismissed. The difference between that suit and this is, that the Court found that the terms of the contract were in a letter, which was Exhibit A in that case, and which contains the terms set out in Exhibit F in this case, and it does not appear that the book of "Instructions to Agents" was sent to the plaintiff. Anyhow, it is not found to have been part of the terms of the contract. The District Munsif dismissed the suit relying upon a statement of law in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume I, page 185, the judgment of the Bench of this Court in O. S. Appeal No. 42 of 1899 and the judgment of Mr. Justice Moore in O. S. No. 178 of 1903. The Bench has distinguished those cases on grounds which, with all respect, I am unable to appreciate. The decision presents one difficulty in that there is a seeming contradiction on a finding of fact. The learned Judges say that the "respondent did not contend that any part of petitioner's claim related to renewals or to anything except the payments of ordinary premia on the original policies obtained through his efforts." The defendant being the same as in this suit it is easy to ascertain what is meant by the word "renewals" in respect of which the petitioner is stated not to be claiming. As a matter of fact, subsequent premia on original policies are renewals and are called renewals in the books of this company, and are known as renewals in ordinary insurance parlance. When, therefore, the Bench distinguishes the other Madras cases on the ground that they deal with the agent's right to commission on payments made in consequence of renewals they are, with all respect, making a distinction that does not exist, for the claim in the Madras cases, was exactly the same as the claim in that case with which they were dealing, namely, subsequent premia on original policies which are in fact renewals.

The only insurance case to which our attention has been called is a decision of Lord Cairns, L. C., reported in Albert Life Insurance Arbitration, Lewin's case (1). In that case the Directors of the Albert Company entered into an agreement with one Mr. Lewin that he should act as an agent for the Insurance Company on a salary of £ 250 with a commission of 10 per cent. on the renewal premia on all policies effected through him and in case of his retirement from his agency a commission of 5 per cent. for the remainder of his life on the renewal premia on all policies which had been effected through him. The Company went into liquidation and Mr. Lewin claimed to rank as a creditor in respect of the premia, which he would have earned after the close of his services, basing his claim on the last clause above referred to. The Lord Chancellor held that it was entirely ultra vires of the Directors to provide for the payment of commission on renewal in case of retirement of Mr. Lewin from the agency. In that case there was salary as well as commission; but his Lordship thought that it was unreasonable and improper to agree to pay commission after the retirement of the agent from his service just as it would have been to agree to pay salary. Both salary and commission must be for services rendered and not for services which are not rendered. It is to be noted that it was not suggested in this case that the general language that the plaintiff was to have a commission of 10 per cent. on the renewal premia on all policies effected through him would entitle him to recover commission on premia after retirement but that there was a specific contract to that effect. This case is of value for the proposition that a specific clause being so unreasonable the absence of a specific clause either allowing or refusing in terms cannot lead to the inference that such a right was contemplated or implied in the agreement. With reference to his Lordship's observation that commission is for services rendered, it is to be noted that Exhibit T shows a class of services required of agents in respect of renewals. Article 31 of "Instructions to Agents" gives directions to the agent for action to be taken when a policy holder desires to have his policy altered in any particular. Article 41 deals with the duty of an agent on the death of any person assured in his agency and those duties are of a distinctly exacting nature. One very important duty of an agent will always be to impress upon policy holders the value of keeping up their premia and this is especially a work necessary for the earning of the premia which, in the view taken by the Bench in the case under consideration, would have to be done by some other agent while the original agent or his executors or his trustee in bankruptcy drew the proceeds for doing nothing at all. So far for insurance cases.

Mr T. R. Venkatarama Sastri in the course of his able argument invited our attention to a series of cases on commission in respect of other business. The first case is Bilbee v. Hassé & Co. (2), a decision of Lopes, L. J., sitting at Nisi Prius. In that case both the parties were butter merchants the plaintiff having a large and extended business and the defendants only a small business. The defendants agreed with the plaintiff to do business with persons introduced by him and, "as regards your commission you have agreed to allow  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. upon all orders executed by us and paid for by the customers arising from your introduction." After a certain time the defendants gave notice to the plaintiff to close his transactions on defendants' behalf, and a suit was brought to recover commission on business done, after his severance with the defendants with persons who had been introduced by the plaintiff. No cases were quoted and the learned Lord Justice thought that the remedy in the hands of the defendants was to give up business transactions with persons introduced by the plaintiff. He held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the commission.

The next case is Boyl v. Mathers (3), a decision of the Court of Appeal. The plaintiff was an advertising contractor and the defendant, the proprietor of a newspaper. The terms of the contract were that the plaintiff should act as advertising contractor and canvasser in connection with the paper and should receive from the defendant a commission of 25 per cent. on renewal orders of advertisements obtained from the plaintiff. The plaintiff's employment was terminated and he brought a suit for a declaration that he was entitled to commission on renewals which were received after the determination of his employment. Kekewich, J., dismissed the suit and his decision was upheld by the Court of Appeal. Lindley, L. J., said that he could not read the letters as amounting to a contract that the plaintiff was to receive a commission on all advertisements appearing in the paper after he ceased to have anything to do with it. He was to be paid commission in respect of his services and after he had ceased to be in a position to render any services he was not to receive anything. Bowen, L. J., and Kay, L. J., concurred.

Salomon v. Brownfield (3) is a case tried at Nisi Prius by Mathew, J. The defendants were pottery manufacturers who employed the plaintiff to go to Australia and travel for them upon terms of their paying  $7\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. on the net amount of cash in payment of goods orders for which were obtained through him. The plaintiff's services were terminated in 1895 on three months' notice and he sought for a declaration that he was entitled to the commission on all orders obtained from persons originally introduced by him though after the termination of his agency. Mathew, J., took the same view as Lopes, L. J., and gave judgment for the plaintiff but the decision of the Court of Appeal in Boyd v. Mathers (5) was not brought to his notice.

The next case is the case Gerahty v. Baines (4), a case tried by Lord Alverstone, C. J. The plaintiff in that case was an advertising agent and claimed a declaration that he was entitled to a commission of 10 per cent. on all advertisements received, the newspaper belonging to the defendants, from advertisers introduced by the plaintiff, even subsequent to the determination of his employment as the defendant's canvasser. The terms of the contract gave no such specific right, the only reference to renewal orders being that he should have 10 per cent. on all renewal orders of such advertisements so long as they were sent in within two years of the next previous order. A mass of evidence was called to prove custom and the cases of Bilbie v. Hise & Co (2), Boyd v. Mathers (5) and Salomon v. Brownfield (3) were brought to the notice of the Court. The Lord Chief Justice told the Jury that no custom had been established and left to them the question whether there was any agreement between the plaintiff and the defendants that the plaintiff should be entitled to a commission on renewals of advertisements after the expiration of his employment as canvasser, if so, whether it was for any definite time and if so, for what time and on what terms. The Jury found that there was no such agreement between the parties and that the point had never been raised between them. The Lord Chief Justice, agreeing with the Jury, said that, in his opinion, the claim must fail. The plaintiff was the defendant's canvasser and it made no difference that his services were paid for by commission and not by salary. These words have, I think, reference to the language of Lord Cairns in Albert Life Insurance Arbitration, Lawin's case (1). He then continued: "The position of a canvasser was that of an agent who, so long as he was acting for his employers, was daily or weekly soliciting advertisements or renewals," and stated that, in his opinion, there must be a special bargain proved to entitle an advertising agent to recover commission for renewals after the termination of his employment.

The last two cases are the judgments of the learned Judges of the Chancery side, Wilson v. Harper (6) and Levy v. Goldhill & Co. (7). These were cases of independent traders who were able, without interfering with their own business, to introduce customers to the defendants in the two cases. In the one case the language used was 'half profits on receipt of orders. Same applies to repeats on any accounts introduced by you,' in the other case '5 per cent. on all goods supplied to customers introduced by you. We shall be pleased to pay you the said 5 per cent. as long as we do business with those you place on the books.' In Wilson v. Harper (6) the conflicting rulings were brought to the notice of Mr. Justice Neville and he held that the plaintiff, not being an agent, was entitled to recover on the terms of the contract. In the latter case all the former cases, with the exception of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Boyd v. Mathers (5), were brought to the notice of the learned Judge: and he appears to have followed the decision of the Court of Appeal on appeal from the decision of Lopes, L. J., in Bilbee v. Hass & Co. (2). Unfortunately, we have no report of that decision of the Court of Appeal which was only reported in the Times Newspaper. Paterson, J., relies on the reported language of Bowen, L. J., and we do not know whether the learned Lord Justice, distinguished or dissented from his former judgment in Boyd v. Mathers (5). Those are all the cases. In my opinion it may very well be that, where the claimant has to do no work beyond making the first introduction of the customer to a trading firm, he can claim commission on repeat orders but where, as in the language of Cairns, L. C., and the Court of Appeal in Boyd v. Mathers (5), he is paid commission in respect of the services and services are expected to be rendered in respect of the renewals, when he has ceased to be in a position to render the services he cannot claim to receive the commission. I prefer, therefore, to follow the reported case of the Court of Appeal and the earlier decision of this Court and hold that, in the absence of a definite agreement to that effect, the right to receive the commission lapses on dismissal.

In the result, the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs of the defendant throughout.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—In arriving at the terms of the contract between the parties, I am inclined to hold that we ought to be guided by Exhibit F. than Exhibit S. There is, however, no inconsistency between the two. But whether we look to Exhibit F. or Exhibit S. or to both, I agree entirely with my learned brother that the 'Instructions to Agents', Exhibit T., which the plaintiff dishonestly denied having received or looked into, ought also to be considered for the ascertainment of all the terms of the contract between the parties. Considering, then, Exhibits F. S. and T. together I am clear that Article 29 of Exhibit T. governs the right to claim commission. It follows that when the plaintiff ceased to represent the company he lost his right to claim commission on renewals of premia made after he ceased to be the agent. I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in all Courts. Whether if Article 29 of Exhibit T. was not to be incorporated into the contract, the plaintiff's suit should even then fail is a very interesting question. Apart from the English authorities, I am inclined to agree with my learned brother that, where the duty of the agent does not cease with the first introduction of the customer to the principal, commissions could not be claimed on payments made by the customer after the agency ceases and I concur in his observations on the judgment in Civil Revision Petition No. 933 of 1916.

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 10th July 1917.

Mr. Purrasettam Das Tandon, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Kamla Kant Verma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore who felt himself unable to go into the merits of the claim of the plaintiff, holding that in the circumstances the claim was barred by the doctrine of res judicata. We have to see whether that decision was well-founded, and for that purpose it is necessary that we must go into the previous history and the previous litigation. It appears that on the 27th of May 1890 certain persons, Munna Lal, Kamta Prasad, Debi Din and Lalta Prasad, sons of Kashi Din, and Ram, Karan and Bahari Lal, sons of Dat Ram, executed a deed of endowment by which they made over certain property to an idol, Sri Thakur Ram Narainji, in certain villages. Under that deed of endowment the appellant in the present appeal, being the plaintiff in the Court below, was appointed the manager and the other executants and one outsider were appointed Panches. Mutation was duly effected as regards the properties in favour of the idol and there were provisions for the payment of salaries to the Panches. The plaintiff, after the death of Kamta Prasad, became president as well as manager, and in the year 1909 disputes arose and those disputes culminated in an action which was tried in the Court of the District Judge of Cawnpore in which Lalta Prasad and Madhukar Prasad were plaintiffs and the present plaintiff, Ram Karan, was defendant. That suit originated in this way. Lalta Prasad was one of the men entitled to receive an annual salary, the second plaintiff was one of the sons of Munna Lal, and they made an application under section 18 of Act No. XX of 1862 which was an application that they might be allowed to sue, and the question that comes before a Court for decision when an application of that kind is made is, whether there are prima facie grounds for the institution of a suit and whether such suit is likely to enure for benefit of the trust. These two plaintiffs proved themselves to the satisfaction of the Court to be persons interested in the performance of the trust which had been created by the endowment and as such were authorised by the Court to commence the proceedings. The proceedings had for their object the dismissal of Ram Karan from his position as president and manager, and the plaintiffs alleged various acts which they said were improper and which constituted misfeasance and breach of the trust. The first three on which they relied were, first, that, instead of taking Rs. 150 only by way of salary, he had throughout all the years in fact taken Rs. 300 and claimed it as a claim of right; the second matter was that he had omitted to bring into the accounts of the trust the income of certain property which they contended was covered by the clauses in the deed of endowment. The third matter was that they asserted that certain grain pits were the property of the idol and that Ram Karan was setting up a proprietary adverse title to them himself. Now, undoubtedly, Ram Karan was sued in his capacity as a trustee and if he had defended that action throughout without departing from that fiduciary character, that is, taking no pleas other than those which were proper to a trustee, it is possible that might have made a substantial difference in the consideration of the case. But when he was challenged with having done all those three things he put up a defence which is familiarly known as that of confession and avoidance, that is to say, he admitted that he had taken Rs. 300, he admitted that he had excluded the profits of the small portions of property from the accounts of the deed of endowment and he admitted also that he had not brought into credit or schedule amongst the property of the trust the grain pits. That was the confession. The avoidance was an assertion by him that he was right and he stood up and said: 'All that I have done in this matter is correct. I have taken Rs. 300. I have taken the profits of the land and of the grain pits because they are my own. That is why I have done so.' And, therefore, he was setting up in the clearest possible terms a right personal to himself, a right under the deed as regards Rs. 300, a right of private property as regards the small shares in the pittis and again a right of personal property in the grain pits. In the action of Lalta Prasad and Madhuker Prasad, the learned District Judge went into all these three matters and decided each one of them against Ram Karan, the present plaintiff. It was not a decision which Ram Karan allowed to go uncontested by any means, because it is clear, from an examination of the judgment in the case which will be found from R. 5 to R. 15, that he fought each item with persistence. Those were the main three matters which decided the Judge in removing him from his office. That action was decided on the 20th of March 1913. On the 16th of February 1915 Ram Karan commenced the suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore in which he claimed in precise terms exactly the very three things which the Judge in the judgment of 1913 had decided were not his property at all. Now the Court which decided the matter in 1913 was a competent Court to decide these three facts. They were decided, as we have said, after a contest and there were substantial issues in the matter. In the present case which is under appeal they are the three matters alone in issue, and the claim of Ram Karan was in the second action precisely the same as his defence to the first action which had proved unsuccessful, that is to say, in the second action Ram Karan hoped to establish his own personal right to Rs. 300 a year and to the landed property and to the grain pits by exactly the same allegation which he put forward in the defence in the previous suit. Therefore, in our opinion, he comes precisely within the prohibition of the first part of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which forbids a Court to try any issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit. Now, that is not the whole of section 11, and there arises the further consideration as to whether there is an identity of parties in the 1913 suit and the 1915 suit because the section says that the issues must be between the same parties or between the parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit. There is no question that the Court was competent to try the issues which it did, and now we have to look at the record and to see whether it can fairly be said that the action was between the same parties or between the parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title. The first action, as we have said, was between Lalta Prasad and Madhuker Prasad, but a perusal of sections 18 and 14 of Act XX of 1833 shows that those two men were not bringing an action for any personal benefit or personal enrichment but were bringing it for and on behalf of the idol and for and on behalf of the protection of the property of the idol. Ram Karan, as we have said, was sued as trustee and manager, but during the course of the case he assumed a different character from that of trustee and manager and fought on the ground of his own personal rights. As regards the action of 1915, the one now under appeal, Ram Karan is asserting his own personal rights and he is asserting them against Sri Thakur Ram Narainji and the son of the Lalta Prasad and Madhuker Prasad and other persons. Deciding as we do, that in the first action the plaintiffs were merely representatives of the idol and that in that action Ram Karan fought on personal grounds as well as on those of a trustee we have come to the conclusion that the words of the section are satisfied and that all the necessary elements which constitute res judicata obtain in this case, and in that view we affirm the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs and fees on the higher scale.

RESPONDENTS.

Malabar Law—Karnavan, powers of alienation of—Decree-debts, transfer of—Recital, false, in transfer deed, effect of Decree in name of Anandran, whether belongs to tarwad—Presumption—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 6, 7, 8, 3c, scope of.

A decree-debt is moveable property and a karnavan of a Malabar tarwad has full power to alienate all moveable property belonging to the tarwad at his discretion and to realize debts due to the family in any manner he likes and to sell moveables and convert them into money [p. 79, cols. 4 & 5.]

Varanakot Narayanan Namburi v. Varanakot Narayanan Namburi, 2 M. 328 at p. 331; 5 Ind. Jur. 243; 1 Ind. Dec. N. S. 498, followed.

A third person who makes purchases of moveables including decrees and other debts for consideration from the karnavan of a Malabar tarwad is not bound to see to the application of the purchase-money or to make enquiries whether there was necessity for the alienation [p. 79, col. 2.]

A purchaser of property for consideration from a person having power to convey full title to the property is entitled to rely on all the powers vested in his vendor, which could enable that vendor to convey the complete title professed to be conveyed notwithstanding that the vendor mentions in the sale-deed that he derives his right to convey title by reason of facts whose truth or strength can be successfully attacked. False recitals as to under what particular state of facts he obtained his power to convey will not affect the title of the transferee, provided that the transferor has got the power to give an absolute title and professes to convey such absolute title [p. 79, col. 2; p. 80, col. 1.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—There is no presumption that a bond or a decree standing in the name of a junior member of a tarwad belongs to the tarwad. [p. 79, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 200 of 1917, (Appeal Suit No. 145 of 1917, on the file of the District Court), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Kasargod, in Original Suit No. 80 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The Appellate Court erred in law in making a presumption that properties standing in the name of a junior member of the tarwad belong to the tarwad. There is no such presumption of law. The position of the members of a Mitakshara family is different and the analogy cannot be extended to cases of Malabar tarwads. The onus of proof was wrongly thrown on first and second defendants and the finding is incorrect as it proceeds on such erroneous assumption. See Dharnu Shetti v. Dejamma (1) and Govinda Panikher v. Nani (2).

The karnavan acted within his powers in assigning the decree. It was more than five years old and the assignee paid full consideration for it. In the absence of fraud, the purchaser need not be put on any sort of enquiry and cannot be deprived of his acquisition merely because he had notice that the junior members impeached the alienation as being against the interests of the tarwad.

Granted that the karnavan had absolute powers of disposing of the decree, a false recital in his assignment-deed that it belonged to himself will not vitiate the transfer, what title he had, had been conveyed.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents.—On the analogy of the Mitakshara cases, where property stands in the name of an Anandran, it must be presumed that he holds it for the tarwad. In any case, there is a distinct finding on a question of fact that it was tarwad property. That finding was arrived at on an analysis of the evidence adduced by both sides and a mere error in wrongly throwing the onus of proof will not affect that finding.

Whatever may be the karnavan's powers over moveables, he made it appear in the deed of transfer to the second defendant and that the decree debt was his self-acquisition. That is found to be false. The transfer, therefore, conveyed no title to the second defendant. The second defendant purchased something which was not in existence. The tarwad was, therefore, entitled to execute the decree that was really in its favour.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The second defendant is the appellant. The seven plaintiffs are the junior members of a Malabar Brahmin

(1) 38 Ind. Cas. 292; 5 L. W. 253; (1917) M. W. N. 535.

(2) 21 Ind. Cas. 211; 36 M. 301.

SUBRAMANIA PATTAR v. KRISHNA EMBRANDRI.

Illom (tarwad of Brahmins is usually called Illom) of which the first defendant is the karnavan. The first defendant, when he was a junior member in 1906, obtained a simple bond in his name. While still a junior member, he obtained a decree thereon in his own name on 9th July 1910.

Three years afterwards (in 1913) he became the karnavan of the tarwad on the death of the prior karnavan. He treated the bond he obtained in 1906 and the decree thereon which he obtained in 1910 as his self-acquisition and transferred the decree to the second defendant on 8th December 1915, for a consideration of Rs. 650. The second defendant is a Pattar, while the plaintiff and the first defendant are Embrandris. The third defendant is the judgment debtor under the decree.

The plaintiff stated in paragraph 11 of the plaint that "the second defendant lives not far from the Illom of the plaintiff and knew very well that the decree amount really belongs to the plaintiff's tarwad. With this knowledge he fraudulently colluded with the first defendant and accepted the assignment above said subject to all risks." The plaintiff, therefore, prayed for a declaration that the amount under the decree in Original Suit No. 254 of 1910 is really due to the tarwad of the plaintiff and the first defendant and they prayed for other appurtenant reliefs.

The District Munsif found (a) that the amount of the bond of 1906 belonged to the tarwad and, therefore, the decree amount also belonged to the tarwad and not to the first defendant as his self-acquisition; (b) that, as the tarwad had allowed the first defendant to appear as the ostensible private owner of the decree and of the debt due under the bond for nearly ten years before this suit was brought and as the second defendant was a bona fide purchaser for value and a stranger to the tarwad, the tarwad is estopped from contending as against the second defendant that the decree amount belonged to it and from contending that the first defendant had no right to transfer it to the second defendant. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge concurred in the finding of the first Court that the money belonged to the plaintiff's Illom but he held that though the second defendant paid consideration for the assignment and the assignment to him was a real transaction he did not make proper enquiry whether the money belonged to the tarwad or to the first defendant in his personal capacity and, therefore, the Sub-Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit.

In second appeal the appellant's contentions are stated in grounds Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 11 and 15 of the memorandum. These contentions might be shortly stated thus—(a) the lower Appellate Court was wrong in its view that the presumption of law is that the properties standing in the name of a junior member of a tarwad belongs to the tarwad unless the contrary is shown; it, therefore, threw the burden of proof wrongly on the first and second defendants and its finding that the bond and the decree belonged to the tarwad is, therefore, vitiated by this error of law. (b) The karnavan has, under the Malabar Law, full power of disposal over moveables and his having assigned a decree more than five years old for adequate consideration in order to realise the fruits of the decree was in the usual and proper course of management, and it was also within those powers of the karnavan which cannot be controlled by the junior members, and mere notice that the junior members are charging the karnavan with acting against the interests of the tarwad cannot prevent title to moveable (or a decree debt) property sold by the karnavan and within his powers of disposal as karnavan, from vesting in the third person who purchases for consideration, without himself being guilty of any fraud against the tarwad.

So far as the first question as to whether the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the decree amount belongs to the tarwad is concerned, I think it has to be admitted that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in its view that there was a presumption in favour of the tarwad that the bond standing in the name of a junior member belongs to the tarwad. The matter has been fully considered in Govinda Panikker v. Nani (2) and Dharmu Shetti v. Dejamma (1), and it has been held that there is no presumption either way. If there is no presumption either way, the plaintiffs coming into Court are to prove the facts which show that a bond in the name of the junior member is tarwad property. I am myself inclined to hold whatever may be the presumption as regards the bond in the name of a junior member of a Mitakshara family [see as to this Parbati Devi v. Baikuntha Nath Das (3), though even in Mitakshara cases the presumption, in my opinion, in modern days is a very feeble one], that as regards the Malabar tarwad, the presumption should be against the tarwad. The Subordinate Judge had relied only or mainly on the presumption which he erroneously thought should be raised in favour of the tarwad. I should be inclined to set aside that finding and call for a fresh finding. But on the records I see that both the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge have also gone into the evidence on both sides and have arrived at a concurrent finding that the money belonged to the tarwad and the Subordinate Judge has relied on the presumption only as a further support to his finding on the evidence. I, therefore, accept that finding.

Then, we have got the next and more important contention on the appellant's side. The lower Appellate Court seems to have thought that if the decree amount belonged to the tarwad, the plaintiffs were at once entitled to a decree declaring that the alienation by the karnavan to the second defendant was invalid if the purchaser (second defendant) knew that it belonged to the tarwad, or even knew that it was claimed as belonging to the tarwad by the first defendant's Anandravan. I think that such a view is wholly erroneous. As stated in Moore's Malabar Law, page 162, quoting Mr. Justice T. L. Strange, "the karnavan can alienate all moveable property, ancestral or self-acquired, at his discretion." In fact, in the olden days, even a debt contracted by the karnavan was presumed to have been for the use of the family and chargeable on the estate, until the contrary was shown and it was only in Kutti Mannadiyar v. Payanu Muthan (4), that the contrary rule was laid down (in Travancore, if consideration is proved for a bond executed by the karnavan the rule still applies). So far as moveables and properties in the nature of moveables are concerned, I have never heard it disputed that the karnavan has absolute powers over them including the power of realisation of debts due to the family in any manner he likes and of selling moveables and converting them into money. It follows, that a third person who makes purchases of such property for consideration is not bound to see to the application of the purchase money, or to make enquiries whether there was a necessity for the alienation. The rule applies with great force in this case whether the property transferred is a decree more than five years old, no portion of the amount due under which had been realised and where a karnavan sells it for consideration to a third person, the title completely vests in the latter.

It was, however, argued by Mr. Madhavan Nair for the respondent that, as in transferring the decree to the second defendant, the first defendant (transferor) recited in the transfer deed that the decree amount belonged to himself as his self-acquisition, and as that was found against his transfer conveyed no title to the second defendant. The argument is that the second defendant purchased a decree supposed to belong to the first defendant as his self-acquisition and which, therefore, did not exist and not the decree which really existed and which belonged to the tarwad. I think this ingenious contention cannot and ought not to be accepted. A purchaser of a property for consideration from a person having power to convey full title to the property is entitled to rely on all the powers vested in his vendor which could enable that vendor to convey the complete title professed to be conveyed notwithstanding that the vendor mentions in the sale-deed that he derives his right to convey title by reason of facts whose truth or strength can be successfully attacked. Section 7 of the Transfer of Property Act says: "Every person competent to contract and entitled to transferable property or authorised to dispose of transferable property, not his own, is competent to transfer such property either absolutely or conditionally, in the circumstances, to the extent and in the manner allowed and prescribed by any law for the time being in force". Now, if the karnavan, according to the Malabar Law, is authorised to dispose of the tarwad decree-debt absolutely and without condition, I do not see how false recitals as to under what particular state of facts he obtained his power to convey can affect the title of the transferee, provided the transferor has got the power to give an absolute title and professes to convey such absolute title. After section 7 follows another important, section viz, section 8, in the Transfer of Property Act. The latter section says: "Unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, a transfer of property passes forthwith to the transferee all the interest which the transferor is then capable of passing in the property and in the legal incident thereof." This section shows that the test is, what interest the transferor is capable of passing in the property and not under what title he professes to have derived the power which makes him capable of passing such interest in the property. This is not a case of a transfer by a person authorised only under circumstances in their nature variable to dispose of a property. Take the analogous case of an executor who has got full power of realising the testator's property. Because he sells a property of the testator professing to be both the legal and the equitable owner thereof and not merely as empowered in his executor's capacity to convey, it cannot be contended that the purchaser from him does not get a good and complete title. It is only in the case of immoveable property and in the case of a person having only restricted right to transfer such immoveable property that any considerations as to reasonable enquiries, etc., on the part of the purchaser are at all relevant and material under the Transfer of Property Act (see section 38). In the case of moveable property, provided the vendor has got the power to give a good title, and vendee pays consideration, the vendor has absolute power to give such title to the purchaser. The fact that the vendor professes to exercise that right and power, reciting false state of facts cannot affect the vendee.

I might also state that the granting of a declaratory decree is a matter of discretion with the Court. The plaintiffs have not even asked for an injunction in their plaint against the second defendants executing the decree of which he had obtained a transfer, but asked only for a declaration of their own rights. Even on this ground, the lower Appellate Court ought not to have granted the declaratory decree, without directing the plaint to be amended by the addition of proper consequential reliefs irregularly omitted to be asked for.

In the result, I would allow the appeal and restore the decree of the District Munsif. The plaintiffs will pay the costs of the second defendant here and in the lower Appellate Court.

SPENCER, J.—It is argued that there is no cause of action for this suit. The plaintiffs asked for a declaration that a decree-debt assigned by the first defendant, who was the karnavan of their Illom, to 2nd defendant represented money due to the Illom and for leave to execute it. It has been found by both the Courts below that the amount due under the decree belongs to the Illom, and we must accept as correct this finding of fact. But the Courts overlooked the fact that the decree debt is moveable property and that a karnavan of a Malabar tarwad has full power to alienate all moveable property at his discretion.

[See Moore's Malabar Law, 3rd Edition, para 162, and Varanakot Narayanan Namburi v. Varanakot Narayanan Namburi (5)]. It is suggested that he was under the necessity of raising money to meet the expenses of litigation, but whether this was so has not been clearly found. The assignment may be considered to have cast a cloud on the title of the Illom on the finding that the amount belonged to it and, assuming that the first defendant was not acting in their interests, and if so, the plaintiffs might at the discretion of the Court be given a declaration of title which is part of the relief prayed for, in their plaint. Though the first defendant cannot be made accountable in respect of the income of the tarwad, yet he is liable for fraud [see Varanakot Narayanan Namburi v. Varanakot Narayanan Namburi (5)]. The fraud is alleged in paragraph 11 of the plaint, but the facts alleged in that paragraph do not amount to fraud, if, as it appears, the first defendant was acting within his powers. There is no issue or finding on the question of fraud. It is, therefore, unnecessary to call for a finding from the Subordinate Judge on the question whether 1st defendant acted mala fide, in assigning the decree to second defendant, and unnecessary to give the plaintiffs a declaratory decree. I agree that the suit must fail and that the decree of the District Mansif should be restored with costs of second defendant here and in the lower Appellate Court.

JUDGMENT.

Piggott, J.—The matter now before us arises out of the following facts. An appeal had been filed in the Court below by certain persons who are the respondents in First Appeal from Order No. 84 of 1919, now before us. The opposite party, who are the appellants now in this Court, made an application to the Court below asking that the appellants there should be required to furnish security for the costs of the appeal and of the Court of first instance. This application came before the Court below on the 1st of February 1919. It is clear that the present respondents were there represented by a Counsel who was very imperfectly instructed. He made no attempt to contest the application for security, but stated that his clients would furnish security if suitable time were given. For some reason not now apparent, the Court only gave one week and ordered security to be filed by the 8th of February. By that time the Presiding Officer of the Court who had passed the order of the 1st of February had been transferred and the matter came before his successor. The appellants in that Court now entered an appearance by the same Pleader, but some of them at any rate also appeared in person, for we find an affidavit put in sworn to by one of them. In this affidavit, and in the petition which accompanied it, they sought to show cause against the order of February the 1st, 1919. Facts were stated in the affidavit which, if accepted, would certainly amount to sufficient cause against the order requiring security from those appellants. The Court seems to have heard arguments on February the 8th but it passed orders on February the 10th. The order is a very summary one. The learned Subordinate Judge held, in the first place, that he was bound by his predecessor's order of February the 1st, 1919. Even if this were not so, he said that, in his opinion, no sufficient cause was shown for his setting aside that order. He then went on to say that the appellants before him neither deposited the costs or security for the same, nor asked for an extension of time. He, therefore, at once rejected the appeal under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 10, clause (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. On February the 13th the appellants whose appeal had been thus rejected presented an application to the same Court asking for a re-consideration of the order of February the 10th. They protested that they had never understood that the failure of their application for re-consideration of the order of February the 1st would involve the rejection of their appeal, and in this connection they invited the attention of the Court to the fact that the date fixed for hearing the appeal itself had not yet been reached. They now asked for reasonable extension of time within which to furnish the required security. The Court below reviewed its own order of February the 10th, 1919, and allowed the appellants a short extension of time within which to furnish security. Security was furnished within the prescribed period and the Court thereupon ordered the appeal to be re-admitted on to the pending file and to be set down for hearing on the merits. We have before us an appeal from this order re-admitting the appeal, and we also have a petition in revision against the same order presented by way of alternative, in case this Court should hold that no appeal lies. It has not been contested before us that, so far as the extension of time was concerned within which security was to be furnished in the Court below, the Court had jurisdiction under section 148 of the present Code of Civil Procedure to enlarge the time even after the period originally fixed had expired. The difficulty raised is as to the setting aside of the order of February the 10th, 1919. It is contended that the Court which passed that order had become functus officio so far as this matter was concerned, that no provision is to be found in Order XLI, rule 10, or any of the other rules connected therewith, in any way analogous to those of Order XXV, rule 2, clause (2) according to which a Court of first instance which has dismissed a suit for failure to furnish security for costs has authority to set aside that dismissal. Hence, the case for the appellants before us may fairly be stated thus: that the Court below has either misused its power under Order XLVII, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in which case an appeal lies against its order, vide Order XLIII (1) (w) of the Code of Civil Procedure, or it has acted wholly without jurisdiction, in which case the interference of this Court is sought under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A number of matters have been touched upon in argument before us. The case most directly bearing on the point is that of Balwant Singh v. Daulat Singh (1) decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council. This decision has since been commented upon as having been passed upon a very peculiar state of facts and as not being adequate authority for the propositions of law set forth in the head-note to the report in question. It cannot be denied, however, that in the case in question this Court had refused to entertain an application in substance similar to that made to the Court below by the appellants in that Court on February the 18th, 1919, and had refused to do so on the express ground that the order passed by this Court had been one under section 549 of the former Code of Civil Procedure corresponding with Order XLI, rule 10, and that no authority was given to the Court by that section to re-consider its own decision upon cause subsequently shown. Their Lordships made it a distinct matter for complaint that this Court should have taken up this attitude and should for this reason have refused to consider whether the appellant to this Court was not entitled, under the circumstances, to have his appeal restored to the pending file on his furnishing the security which he had in the first instance failed to furnish. They set aside the order of this Court and re-placed it by an order directing his appeal to be restored to the pending file of this Court, subject to reasonable conditions. I find it impossible to say that this is not authority for the proposition that this Court, at any rate, may re-consider, upon cause subsequently shown, an order rejecting an appeal under Order XLI, rule 10, clause (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it does not seem to me that any good reason can be suggested for holding that a power of this nature is inherent in this Court but not in subordinate Courts of Appeal. This decision of the Privy Council was discussed by a Bench of this Court in the case of Firozi Begam v. Abdul Latif Khan (2). In that case the Court below which had rejected an appeal under section 549 of the former Code of Civil Procedure had also rejected an application to re-admit that appeal to its pending file. The one question for decision before this Court was whether an appeal lay against an order rejecting such an application. The learned Judges held, and beyond question they were right in holding, that no appeal lay against such an order. Everything else in the reported judgment is of the nature of obiter dicta. The learned Judges did, however, call attention to the fact that there were no provisions in section 549 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the re-admission of an appeal which had been rejected under that section corresponding with those to be found in section 381 of the former Code and Order XXV, rule 2 of the present Code, which governed the action of Courts of first instance. They suggested that the matter was one for the attention of the Legislature. We find, further, that in the case of Sankaralinga Chetti v. Annamalai Chetti (3), a Bench of the Madras High Court purporting to found their decision upon the views expressed by this Court in Firozi Begam v. Abdul Latif Khan (2), held that no application was entertainable for setting aside an order rejecting an appeal under section 549 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1832).

I feel bound to say that the matter is not to my mind free from difficulty. So far as I am concerned, I am prepared to dispose of the appeal and the application in revision before us on the following very simple grounds. The right of appeal given by Order XLIII, rule 1 (w) against an order granting an application for review under rule 4 of Order XLVII is undoubtedly subject to the conditions laid down by Order XLVII, rule 7. In my opinion, the appeal before us cannot be read so as to come within the four corners of that rule. The only suggestion possible would be that the appellants desired to plead that the Court below had failed to reject the application, although there were not before it sufficient grounds for review (vide the words of Order XLVII, rule 4 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure). I do not think that this suggestion, however ingenious, is at all entertainable. For one thing, the words of the rule are that, "the Court shall reject the application where it appears to it that there is no sufficient ground for a review;" for another thing, it was obviously not intended that the words of this clause should be used so as virtually to nullify the whole of Order XLVII, rule 7 by letting in an appeal upon the mere ground that the discretion conferred upon the Court by Order XLVII, rule 1 had been wrongly exercised. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the First Appeal from Order No. 84 of 1919 now before us is not entertainable as an appeal and should be dismissed on that ground alone. There remains the petition of revision, and I am not prepared to say that I have not felt the force of the arguments by which the learned Counsel for the petitioners in revision, the respondents in the Court below, has sought to show that the order complained of was wholly without jurisdiction. My own impression is, that the Legislature has assumed that an Appellate Court, by reason of its jurisdiction to entertain an appeal even beyond the prescribed period of limitation, supposing that in its opinion sufficient cause were shown under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, could not be prevented by reason of a mere order rejecting a petition of appeal under Order XLI, rule 10 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure from taking up another appeal on the same pleas and against the same decision, if upon full consideration it saw sufficient grounds for doing so. In any case, what we are asked to do is to hold that the learned Judge of the Court below was not entitled to assume a jurisdiction which, according to their Lordships of the Privy Council, was certainly exercisable by this Court which they directed this Court to exercise in their decision in the case of Balwant Singh v. Daulat Singh (1). It may be that the provisions of Order XLVII, rule 1, are wide enough to cover the order complained of, or, as I have suggested, that the Court below may be regarded as simply having re-admitted a petition of appeal by reason of the jurisdiction it would have had to entertain a fresh petition of appeal if presented on the date of its order of re-admission. In any case, I am not prepared to say, under the circumstances, that the order complained of was wholly without jurisdiction, or that this Court is bound to interfere with it in revision; more particularly when I am of opinion that it was a very proper and necessary order in the interests of justice. I think the appellants in the Court below had been treated, up to the 10th of February 1919, in the most summary fashion imaginable. They had been given a week within which to furnish certain security. When they appeared on the last possible date they submitted to the Court substantial reasons why they should not have been required to furnish security at all, and incidentally complained that they had had no such reasonable notice as would have enabled them to instruct Counsel properly on any previous date. The Court brushed aside all their objections, upon the assumption that the presiding Judge was bound to stand by his predecessor's order of February the 1st, 1919. It is quite clear also that the Court below did not, at the time, make any attempt to explain to the appellants before it what their position would be if it merely rejected their petition of February the 1st or to ascertain from them definitely whether, in the event of that application being rejected, they would not be prepared to furnish the required security within reasonable time. It is obvious now that those appellants were so prepared, and the learned Subordinate Judge himself was clearly impressed with the belief that he had acted hastily and without reasonable consideration in rejecting the appeal in the manner in which he did on February the 10th. For these reasons, I do not think that this Court is either obliged in law, or called upon in the interests of justice, to interfere in revision, and on this ground I would also reject the application for revision.

(3) 4 Ind. Cas. 165; 19 M. L. J. 304.

SUNDAR O. HABIB CHICK.

KANHAIYA LAL, J.—In this case an appeal was rejected for failure of the appellants to file security for the costs incurred by the respondents in the Trial Court and for the costs to be incurred by them in the appeal. Subsequently, an application was made to set aside that order. The Court below granted that application and allowed the appellants a week's further time to file the security required. It was open to the Court under Order XLVII, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure to renew or set aside its previous order, if it considered that there was sufficient reason for doing so. Order XLI, rule 10 does not contain any specific provision laying down the method in which an order rejecting an appeal for default of filing the security can be set aside. But the absence of such a provision does not necessarily suggest that a Court is not competent to review its order or modify it, if it thinks that the ends of justice require it or that sufficient reasons exist for its doing so. If the appeal had not been rejected, the Court could have extended the time under section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appeal having been rejected, the Court could still act, in the absence of a specific provision similar to that contained in Order XXV, rule 2 of the Code, in review and I do not think that the Court exceeded its jurisdiction by discharging its previous order and granting an extension of time. In Balwant Singh v. Daulat Singh (1) an order rejecting an appeal for default was set aside by their Lordships of the Privy Council in somewhat similar circumstances and an extension of time was granted. In Firozi Begam v. Abdul Latif Khan (2) it was held that no appeal would lie from an order refusing to re-admit an appeal which had been rejected for failure to furnish the required security for costs. Such an appeal would have been clearly inadmissible under Order XLVII, rule 7, even if the application rejected had been treated as an application for review. An order granting a review is, however, appealable. In Sankaralinga v. Annamalai (3) it was held that no application to set aside an order rejecting an appeal under section 547 of the old Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1884) was entertainable but the question of the applicability of the provisions relating to review does not appear to have been there considered. Here the time originally granted to the appellants was clearly insufficient and the order of the Court below setting aside its previous order is not, in the circumstances, unjustifiable. I see no reason, therefore, to interfere with it and agree in dismissing the appeal and the application for revision with costs.

By THE COURT.—We dismiss the First Appeal from Order No. 84 of 1919 and also the application in Revision No. 81 of 1919 therewith connected, in each case with costs.

SWAMINATHA AYYAR—

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 109, 110, O. XLV, r. 3—Appeal to Privy Council—Leave to appeal—Certificate must show clearly upon what ground it is based.

When a certificate is issued under Order XLV of the Civil Procedure Code it is of the utmost importance that it should shew clearly on its face upon which of the two grounds mentioned in rule 3 of the Order it is based, viz., whether it fulfils the requirements of section 110 of the Code as regards amount or value and nature, or is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council under section 109 (c) of the Code. [p. 86, col 1.]

Where a certificate is granted under section 109 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure, it should appear on its face that the discretion conferred by that section has in fact been exercised [p. 86, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court, (Oldfield and Phillips, JJ.), dated November 14th, 1916, reported as 40 Ind. Cas. 587, modifying a decree of the District Judge, Tanjore, which in turn modified a decree of the Revenue Divisional Officer, Kumbakonam.

FACTS.—The High Court in this case restored the decree of the Trial Judge who had awarded the plaintiff-respondent Rs. 4,560 as rent for three years, which amount had been reduced by the District Judge to Rs. 3,953. There was a further question whether a pattah decreed against the defendants under Madras Act VIII of 1865, which was repeated by Madras Act I of 1908, was still binding upon them.

On this appeal

Mr. DeGruyter, K. C., (with him Mr. Parikh), for the Respondent took a preliminary objection that the appeal was incompetent inasmuch as no proper certificate of appeal had been granted. The only matter in dispute is a sum of Rs. 140 per annum and no substantial question of law is involved. The certificate in this case does not show that the High Court considered the case fell under section 109 (c). Unless the certificate is in proper form the appeal cannot be entertained.

Banarsi Parshad v. Kashi Krishen Narain (1),
Radha Krishen Das v. Rai Krishn Chand (2).

Mr. P. Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellant, submitted that the case fell under section 109 (c).

[SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—You have not got a certificate under that head.]

There is a general question of law of considerable importance involved, viz., whether "decreed" in section 52 (31) of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, covers decrees under the Act which preceded, or, as we contend, is limited to decrees under the Act of 1908 itself. In deciding against us the Madras High Court dissented from two former decisions of their own.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The point is you want special leave].

Yes : the Board can give it me now.

Radha Krishen Das v. Rai Krishn Chand (2).

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—In this case a preliminary objection is taken to the appeal on behalf of the respondent based upon the ground that no proper certificate of appeal has been granted, and that the appeal is consequently incompetent.

The conditions that regulate the granting of certificates for leave to appeal have been clearly stated in the cases referred to by Counsel for the respondent, reported as Banarsi Parshad v. Kashi Krishen Narain (1) and Radha Krishen Das v. Rai Krishn Chand (2). It is not necessary to examine them again for the principle which they establish is plain and cannot be questioned. That principle is this; that as an initial condition to appeal to His Majesty in Council, it is essential that the petitioners should satisfy the Court that the subject-matter of the suit is Rs. 10,000, and in addition that in certain cases there should be added some substantial question of law. This does not cover the whole grounds of appeal, because it is plain that there may be certain cases in which it is impossible to define in money value the exact character of the dispute; there are questions, as, for example, those relating to religious rights and ceremonies, to caste and family rights, or such matters as the reduction of the capital of companies as well as questions of wide public importance in which the subject-matter in dispute cannot be reduced into actual terms of money. Sub-section (c) of section 109 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplates that such a state of things exists, and rule 3 of Order XLV regulates the procedure. It is there provided that the petition for appeal should state the grounds of appeal, and pray for a certificate that either as regards amount or value and nature, the case fulfils the requirements of section 110, or that it is otherwise, i.e., under section 109, sub-section (c), a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council. When any certificate is granted under that Order, it is in their Lordships' opinion of the utmost importance that the certificate should show clearly upon which ground it is based, and they regret to find that the certificate in this case is at least ambiguous. It runs in these terms: "It is hereby certified that, as regards the value of the subject-matter and the nature of the question involved, the case fulfils the requirements of sections 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council."

There is no indication in the certificate of what the nature of the question is that it is thought was involved in the hearing of this appeal, nor is there anything to show that the discretion conferred by section 109 (c) was invoked or was exercised. Their Lordships think it should be brought to the attention of the Indian Courts that these certificates are of great consequence, that they seriously affect the rights of litigant parties, and that they ought to be given in such a form that it is impossible to mistake their meaning upon their face.

Counsel for the appellants has asked that, even though the amount in value in this suit is beneath the proper appealable amount, as it undoubtedly is, his clients should be granted special leave to appeal upon the ground that an important question of law affecting the whole community is raised under the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, a question which has not hitherto been the subject of judicial interpretation. That question was this: section 52, sub-section (3), provides that "pattahs and muchalkas accepted, exchanged or decreed for any revenue year shall remain in force until the commencement of the revenue year for which fresh pattahs or muchalkas are accepted, exchanged or decreed: provided that where a pattah or muchalka has continued in force for more revenue years than one, no fresh pattah or muchalka for the same holding shall take effect until the commencement of the revenue year next succeeding that in which it is tendered, accepted, exchanged or decreed." He desires to contend on behalf of the appellants that "decreed" in that section means decreed under that Act, and that no former decree could have any operation. Their Lordships have considered this contention, but they do not think it of sufficient weight to justify granting special leave to appeal.

They will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs as incompetent, and that special leave to appeal should not be granted.

Landlord and tenant—Acceptance by landlord of reduced rent for long time, whether conclusive to show that stipulation for payment of full rent was not intended to be acted upon.

The fact that the landlord has received rent for a long time at a rate lower than that stipulated for in a kabuliyat, is not conclusive to show that the stipulation in the kabuliyat as to the payment of the full rent by the tenant was never intended to be acted upon, or that there was a waiver of that stipulation. [p. 88, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge, Rangpur, dated the 30th of August 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court at Kurigram, dated the 5th of July 1912.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendranath Ray (with him Babu Atul Chandra Gupta), for the Appellant.—These appeals are on behalf of the defendant and arise out of suits for rent at the kabuliyat rates. The kabuliyats were only for short terms and it was agreed that a large portion of the rent assessed was to be kept in hajat (suspense) and the balance payable as the rent for the term. It was stipulated further that the tenant was to take no objection to the payment of the full rent after the expiry of the term of the lease, when the amount of the hajat would be added to the jama. The plaintiff, however, continued to receive rent at the reduced rate for a long time after the expiry of the terms of the kabuliyats. These present suits of the plaintiff are for realising rent at the full rate on the ground that it was so stipulated for in the kabuliyats. These cases were remanded to the lower Appellate Court for a finding as to whether the stipulations in the kabuliyats to pay the full rent after the expiry of the lease was intended to be acted upon, or whether there was a waiver of the stipulations after the expiry of the lease. See Manindra Chandra Nandi Bahadur v. Durga Sundari Dasya (1). I am bound by the remand order and cannot go behind it. Their Lordships on remand directed the lower Appellate Court to determine whether the kabuliyat was intended to be acted upon. The lower Appellate Court after remand was clearly wrong in thinking that the fact that the kabuliyat was not acted upon for a very long time could be no independent evidence of the intention of the parties. The lower Appellate Court has clearly committed an error of law in thinking that the fact of receipt of rent at the reduced rate for a long time can only be corroborative of other independent evidence. The evidence that since the execution of the kabuliyats the tenants paid rent at a lower rate than that stipulated for in the kabuliyat, is clearly admissible to show that the intention of the parties was that the kabuliyat from the very first was not intended to be acted upon as that there was a waiver by the parties. See Beni Madhub Gorani v. Lalmoti Dassi (2). Then, again, your Lordships will be pleased to see that the lower Appellate Court acted irregularly in not giving me an opportunity of referring to certain documents filed by the plaintiff. These documents were taken away by the plaintiff and were produced in the Appellate Court only when my Pleader had nearly finished his argument.

Sir Rash Behari Ghose (with him Babus D. N. Chackerbutty, Hemendra Nath Sen, Sarat Kumar Mitra and Sarat Chandra De), for the Respondent.—These appeals are concluded by findings of fact. The lower Appellate Court has definitely found that the stipulation in the kabuliyat was intended to be acted upon. The only fault of the plaintiff was that he was too indulgent towards his tenants. Where there is no reliable evidence to prove that the plaintiff ever bound himself to accept a reduced rent, the fact that he did, for some years, accept a reduced rent, is consistent with the reduction having been a mere voluntary and temporary abatement. See Durga Prasad Singh v. Rajendra Narayan Bagchi (3). Refers also to Durga Prasad Singh v. Rajendra Narain Bagchi (4). As regards the second contention of my learned friend, your Lordships will be pleased to refer to the remarks of the lower Appellate Court wherein it remarked that the documents had been filed long before the arguments were finished.

Babu Mohendra Nath Ray replied.

JUDGMENT.—These cases were remanded to the lower Appellate Court and that Court was directed to decide the question whether the stipulation in the kabuliyat to pay the full rent after the expiry of the lease was intended to be acted upon, or whether there was a waiver of the stipulation after the expiry of the lease.

That question has been gone into by the lower Appellate Court and it has come to the finding that it was intended to be acted upon.

FATIMA BIBI v. NUR MUHAMMAD.

It is contended before us on behalf of the defendant-appellant that the learned District Judge in arriving at that finding has proceeded upon the view that the realisation of rents at the reduced rate for a long period of time cannot by itself show that the landlord at the time he accepted the kabuliyats never intended to enforce his right to receive rent at the full rate after the expiration of the term of the lease. This, the learned Pleader for the appellant says, indicates that, in the opinion of the learned Judge, it was not independent evidence on the question of intention. But just in the previous passage, the learned Judge says: "The fact that there had been no realisation or attempt at realisation of the full rent was undoubtedly a piece of evidence having considerable bearing upon the question whether or not the stipulations in the kabuliyat were from the first intended to be acted upon."

It appears, therefore, that what he meant to say was that the fact of receipt of rent at the reduced rate for such a long time was not conclusive. He has referred to certain facts and circumstances, and came to the conclusion that these facts and circumstances, either individually or collectively, do not establish the proposition that the plaintiff when he accepted the kabuliyats never intended to enforce his rights to realise the full rents as reserved in these documents after the expiry of their term." The learned Judge, further, goes on to find as follows:—"On the other hand, there are in these cases more than one circumstance to indicate that the plaintiff, when he accepted the kabuliyats had the full intention to enforce his rights to realise full rents when the term of the kabuliyat would be over." He concludes thus: "On a careful consideration of the facts and circumstances of the case as I have detailed them above, I have no hesitation in holding that the defendant failed to show that the stipulations in the kabuliyats had not been meant to be acted upon, and my finding is that the stipulations were intended to be acted upon at the time the kabuliyats were executed by the defendant's predecessors and accepted by the predecessors of the plaintiff."

These findings are conclusive in second appeal and we are unable to interfere with them.

The next contention raised is that the learned District Judge was wrong in not allowing the appellant's Pleader in the lower Appellate Court any opportunity to refer to certain jama wasil baki papers. It is said that these papers were taken away by the plaintiff and were produced in the Appellate Court only when the appellant's Pleader had nearly finished his argument and that, at the time of argument on his behalf, he had not the opportunity to refer to the papers.

The learned District Judge, however, points out that the jama wasil baki papers in question had been filed long before the arguments were finished, and that the Pleader for the appellant made no mention of those papers although he had been allowed to advance some additional arguments in the midst of the address of the Vakil for the respondent. We think that, in the first place, the appellant's Pleader ought to have asked the respondent to produce these papers before the hearing commenced, if anything really turned on those papers, and, secondly, from what the learned Judge says, these papers were on the record before the arguments were concluded. In these circumstances, we do not think that there was any irregularity in the procedure of the Court which would vitiate the judgment.

The appeals fail and are dismissed with one set of costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Second appeal from the decrees of the Additional District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 23rd January 1918, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Gujranwala, dated the 7th August 1917.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Taj-ul-Din, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, Nur Muhammad Khan, brought a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights, which has been decreed by the Courts below. Hence the second appeal. Musammat Fatima Bibi, the wife, her father Fazal Din, and her mother, Musammat Bego, were impleaded as defendants to the suit. As against the father and the mother, the relief claimed was that an order should be made prohibiting them from interfering with the plaintiff's right to take his wife to his own house. Various defenses were put forward to resist the claim, two of which were,—

(1) That the plaintiff when contracting the marriage had executed an iqarnamah in favour of the parents of the girl agreeing to reside for his whole life with his wife in the house of the parents of the girl.

(2) That the dower fixed being a prompt one the plaintiff was not entitled to the decree claimed without paying up the whole amount of the dower as well as arrears of maintenance allowance.

The Court of first instance decreed the claim in terms of the prayer in the plaint and issued a permanent injunction against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 prohibiting them from restraining defendant No. 1 from living with the plaintiff as his wife. The lower Appellate Court in appeal maintained the decree, but made a slight modification by ordering the plaintiff to pay one fifth of the dower before executing the decree for restitution of conjugal rights. The defendants have come up in second appeal to this Court challenging the decree for restitution of conjugal rights and injunction and praying that, in any case, the decree should be made conditional on the payment of the whole amount of dower and maintenance.

The plea that the iqarnamah executed by the plaintiff is legally binding upon him and that he is not entitled to take away his wife from the house of her parents is repeated in this Court and Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Volume II, 1917 Edition, is relied upon in support of this contention. The subject is discussed at pages 369, 478 80. At page 478, dealing with the subject of conjugal domicile and restitution of conjugal rights, the learned author states the law in these words:—

"The Muhammadan Law lays down distinctly—

(1) that a wife is bound to live with her husband, and to follow him wherever he desires to go ;

(2) that on her refusing to do so without sufficient or valid reason the Court of Justice, on a suit for restitution of conjugal rights by the husband, may order her to live with her husband."

At page 479, however, the learned author says :—

"At the same time, the law recognises the validity of express stipulations entered into at the time of marriage respecting conjugal domicile if it be agreed that the husband shall allow the wife to live always with her parents, he cannot afterwards force her to leave her father's house for his own."

On this later passage great reliance is placed on behalf of the appellants, but we find the following passage immediately after the passage mentioned above:—

"If the wife, however, were once to consent to leave the place of residence agreed upon at the time of marriage, she will be presumed to have waived the right acquired under the express stipulation and to have adopted domicile chosen by the husband."

If there was any force in the contention it has been altogether taken away by the last statement of the law in the book relied upon, because it is admitted before us by Fazal Din that the defendant No. 1, Musammat Fatima Bibi, did leave his house and went to live with the plaintiff at Karkan, the place of his residence, where she gave birth to a second child. Fatima Bibi, therefore, must be taken to have waived the right, if any, acquired under the iqarnamah executed by the plaintiff. It is not, however, clear whether the stipulation as to the permanent residence of the couple in the house of the wife's parents is based on any rule of Muhammadan Law to be found in the text-books on the subject, as the learned author has not quoted any such authority while we find quite a contrary rule stated in Macnaghten's Precedents of Muhammadan Law, Chapter VI, case 8, according to which a condition like the present is illegal and invalid. The question was raised in the Calcutta High Court in the case of Hamid-unnessa Bibi v. Zohiruddin Sheik (1) but was not decided. The learned Judges who decided the case quoted certain passages from Grady's Hidaya, Book 2, Chapter II, page 49, and Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, but left the question undecided. The question again came up before the Calcutta Court in the case of Imam Ali Patwari v. Arfatunnessa (2) and was decided by Justices Stephen and Mullick. Their judgment on the point runs thus, —

"There is some good authority for the statement that the condition that the wife shall be at liberty to live with her parents is void. We may for this refer to Wilson's Digest of Anglo-Muhammadan Law, section 50, Abdur Rahman's Institutes of Musalman Law, Article 207, paragraph 3 and to the decision in the case of Abdul Piroj Khan v. Husseinbi (3). We hold, therefore, that the condition is illegal .....

The subject is also discussed by Tyabji in his Muhammadan Law, Second Edition (1909), at page 109. He has discussed all the authorities mentioned above and has expressed a pious wish in these significant words:—

"The law is quite sufficiently partial to the husband, and it is submitted that the Court should not be astute to enhance the burden on wives."

The opinion expressed by the learned author is quite inconclusive and is opposed to the authorities already quoted.

In this state of authorities, we are not prepared to hold that the stipulation relied upon is legal and can be utilised to defeat the claim of the plaintiff for restitution of conjugal rights. This plea, therefore, fails.

(2) 21 Ind. Cas. 87; 18 C. W. N. 693

The next contention put forward on behalf of the appellant is that the decree of the Court below ought to have provided for the payment of the entire amount of dower and arrears of maintenance, and we are asked to modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court by making the decree for conjugal rights conditional upon the payment of the amounts claimed. It is, however, admitted that the matter entirely depended upon the discretion of the Court. The lower Appellate Court in exercise of its discretion has held that the plaintiff should be ordered to pay only one-fifth part of the dower under the circumstances of this case. We are not prepared to hold that the lower Appellate Court has not properly exercised its discretion. This plea also must fail. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Petitions, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif, Manamadurai, in Small Cause Suits Nos. 180 to 191, 196 to 204, 211 to 217 and 219, 220, 225, 226 and 235 of 1917.

These petitions coming on for hearing on the 1st October 1919 and having stood over for consideration till the 8th of October 1919, the Court (Moore, J.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—These civil revision petitions arise out of a number of Small Cause Suits, which were brought by the petitioner, the Rajah of Ramnad, to recover from his tenants the value of Palmyra trees on their holdings which had been wrongfully cut and appropriated by the tenants. The value of the trees was claimed at the rate of Rs. 3 per tree in one village and Rs. 6 per tree in the other two villages.

In Civil Revision Petition No. 1252 of 1918, the petitioner is the defendant in one of the Small Cause Suits. It was alleged in the plaint that the defendants, who were bound, according to the custom of the village and Zamin and according to law, to pay compensation to the plaintiff for the trees cut, had not done so. The defendants denied having cut the trees and the custom alleged in the plaint and claimed the ownership of the trees. They further contended that the value claimed was excessive. The District Munsif found that the alleged cutting was true and that the value claimed was proper for the trees, viz., Rs. 3.00 and Rs. 6.00 and that the holding consisted of trees which were assessed to Tirwah. On the 3rd point, viz., "whether the alleged usage was true, and what relief was plaintiff entitled to?" the District Munsif held that the proper amount of compensation would "ordinarily" be the capitalised value of the annual Tirwah or twenty-five times the annual Tirwah. The findings on the first two points being in plaintiff's favour, the only question for decision in these petitions is, whether the method of calculating compensation adopted by the lower Court is correct. Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar for the petitioner contended that the method of compensation, viz., the capitalised value of the annual Tirwah, adopted by the District Munsif is erroneous, as the evidence showed that 25 times the Tirwah was charged only when the landholder's permission to cut the trees has been obtained; that prima facie the trees belong to the Zemindar; that the defendants had no right to cut and appropriate the trees, and that if trees are cut without permission the Zemindar is entitled to claim the full value of the trees.

In support of his contention the learned Vakil relied on the decision in Nafar Ohandra Pal Chowdhury v. Ram Lal Pal (1), Mohamed Hamidar Rahman Chowdhury v. Ali Fakir (2) and Bodda Goddeppa v. Maharaja of Vizianagaram (3). On the other hand, the respondent's Vakil argued that the lower Court had overlooked the provisions of section 12 of the Estates Land Act which gives the occupant ryot the right to use, enjoy and cut trees, and that the custom to pay damages if trees were cut without permission had not been made out.

In their written statements the defendants stated that they were only liable to pay Tirwah according to the terms of the pattas for Ayacut trees, so long as they were alive, and that beyond that the plaintiff was not entitled to any other right in respect of the trees. The defendants further denied that there was any custom to pay compensation for trees cut. The principal matter in controversy between the parties at the trial was, whether the custom to pay compensation for trees cut was proved and the evidence was confined to this question. It is urged on behalf of the petitioner that the District Munsif has adopted an arbitrary method of estimating the compensation payable and has given no reasons for it; that having found against the defendants' contention that they had a right to cut and remove the trees and that the prices claimed in the plaint were proper, the suits should have been decreed in full, and that the District

Munsif misunderstood the evidence which shows that 25 years Tirwah is charged only when permission to cut trees was obtained.

These contentions are, I think, well-founded. The lower Court's judgment is far from satisfactory and it is difficult to follow the Munsif's reasoning in paragraphs 7 and 8 of the judgment. The District Munsif begins by saying: "The usage alleged is that damage should be paid for trees cut and there is no express allegation as to the basis on which damage was payable according to usage, though from the fact of the value being claimed as damages it may be inferred that the value of the trees is payable as damage for the trees cut." After some general observations, the District Munsif finds "that the proper method of compensation would ordinarily be the capitalised value of the annual Tirwah, or twenty-five times the Tirwah, which is said to be thirteen annas ten pies per tree." The District Munsif observes, with reference to the documentary evidence, that, although in order to prevent the wasteful cutting of trees the Zamindar may in some instances have levied the value of the tree or a fine, "the records produced do not support an ancient right to that effect." Finally, after referring to the oral evidence, the District Munsif states his conclusion thus:

"The oral evidence of usage shows a great want of uniformity in the usage in the scale of levy and in the principles of the levy of damage..... There is, however, uniformity to a limited extent, namely, that damage of some kind is leviable for cutting without permission and that trees should not be cut without permission. This would go to support no more than the principle of liability for damage as discussed in paragraph 7 above." In the result, the Munsif gave a decree in all the suits for twenty five times the Tirwah as damage. This cannot be accepted as a proper finding based on evidence. It is not clear whether the District Munsif intended to find that a valid custom to levy the full value when trees were cut without permission had not been made out, and that the right which the defendants claimed to cut trees at will without the permission of the landholder was not established. Moreover, the District Munsif has given no reasons for holding that the proper method of compensation is the capitalised value of the Tirwah and there is nothing to show on what grounds he arrived at this conclusion. The monetary value of the claims is small. The question involved in these cases is of considerable importance but it is certainly unfortunate that the plaintiff should have selected a Small Cause Court as the forum for carrying on litigation of this kind. I must accordingly call for findings from the lower Court on the evidence on record, in the light of the above observations, on the following points:—

(1) Whether there is valid custom entitling the landholder to claim compensation for Palmyra trees cut by the defendants without the permission of the landholder?

(2) If so, what is the compensation payable by the defendants?

Findings will be submitted within 6 (six) weeks and 7 (seven) days are allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the Principal District Munsif of Manamadurai submitted the following

FINDINGS—I have to give findings on the following two issues:—

I. Whether there is a valid custom entitling the landholder to claim compensation for Palmyra trees cut by the defendants without the permission of the landholder? and

II. If so, what is the compensation payable to the defendants?

2. Issue No. I:—

I have heard Mr. T. C. Srinivasa Ayyangar, Pleader for plaintiff, the Rajah, at great length. I have approached the question in the light of the observations contained in the judgment of High Court. I would find the issue in the negative.

3. The Ramnad Zamindari is an extensive one with innumerable Palmyra trees on the holdings of tenants. There must have been many cases of illicit cutting of Palmyra trees by the tenants. No instance where the Rajah sued the tenants in the Civil Court pleading a custom of the kind now relied on was brought to my notice by Mr. T. C. Srinivasa Ayyangar. No judgment of any Court where such a custom was affirmed, was referred to by the Pleader.

4. Again, none of the documents filed by plaintiffs as showing that tenants either asked for permission to cut the trees or paid the price of the trees after cutting them, refer to the suit villages. It was admitted that none of these documents refer even to the Sayalkudi Division which contains 70 or 80 villages including the suit villages. It was admitted that they related to villages in the Masitta Kurichi Division. That, however, is in the Kamuthi Taluk wherein, however, the Sayalkudi Division also is situate. In the plaint, paragraph No. 6, the custom was said to obtain in the suit village and Zamin; and yet no document pertaining to the suit villages or the Sayalkudi Division has been filed to support the alleged custom.

5. Mr. T. C. Srinivasa Ayyangar said that the earliest document bearing on this part of the case was Exhibit F 8. That takes me only to May 1906 when the Madras Estates Land Bill of 1905 had been introduced with its clause No. 11, corresponding to section 12 of the Act, and it refers only to a Margosa tree. The same remark applies to Exhibits F 9, F 10, F 11, and F 12, and F 13, F 17 and F 26. I do not exclude these documents from consideration on these grounds: all that I say is that these facts affect to some extent their probative value on the issue which I have to determine. Exhibit F no doubt refers to Palmyras, but it dates only from 1914, very near the date of dispute between the parties.

6. As regards the oral evidence for plaintiff on this point, it is interested; that for the defence contradicts it, and, in all the circumstances, I would decline to accept it.

7. Taking all the facts and circumstances into consideration, I find the issue in the negative. Mr. T. C. Srinivasa Aiyangar said that as these were only Small Cause Suits, the evidence was rather meagre, and that if the plaintiff had filed original suits much more evidence would have been forthcoming. That no doubt may or may not be a fact. But that is absolutely no reason for finding a custom of the kind pleaded has been made out on the evidence on record.

8. Issue No. II requires no finding in view of my finding on Issue No. 1. However, I may add that if I had found Issue No. 1 for plaintiff, I would have found the compensation payable by the defendants was the value of the trees cut and such value was the amount claimed by the plaintiff in each suit. I would accept the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses on the point of value substantially. It is not the case of the defendants that by custom they need pay only 25 year's Tirwah when they cut trees without permission: in the written statement it was said only the value claimed by plaintiff is excessive. It is manifest, therefore, that if Issue No 1 should be found for plaintiff, he should have the market-value of the trees cut.

These petitions, under orders of this Court (Oldfield, J.), dated 7th of February 1920, came on for final hearing on the 20th day of February 1920, after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar (Advocate General), for the Petitioners in O. R. Nos. 164 to 196 of 1918 and for Respondent in C. R. P. No. 1252 of 1918.—The landlord is prima facie entitled to the trees and the tenants appropriating them without the landlord's permission are liable to pay their full value. See Nafar Ohandra Pal Chowdhury v. Ram Lal Pal (1), Mohamed Hamidar Rahman Chowdhury v. Ali Fakir (2) and Bodda Goddeppa v. Maharaja of Vizianagaram (3).

Section 12 of the Madras Estates Land Act gives the tenant only the right to cut down the trees and not to appropriate them. This position was laid down by the Calcutta High Court under the corresponding section 23 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. See Nafar Ohandra Pal Chowdhury v. Ram Lal Pal (1), Mohamed Hamidar Rahman Chowdhury v. Ali Fakir (2), and Meyoa Lall Ghose v. Gobinda Sunder Sinha Chowdhury (4). In those cases a distinction is drawn between the right to cut and the right to appropriate.

The pattahs are only trees pattahs and not for land held for agricultural purposes. The remuneration paid to the landlord is not rent and section 12 of the Act has no application. The rent also is not fixed. It varies with the number of trees. His position is only that of a licensee. The so-called muchilikas are only agreements for payment of tax for the trees. See Murugappa Chettiar v. Ramanathan Chettiar (5).

RAJAH OF RAMNAD v. KAMITH RAYUTHAN.

Mr. K. P. Padmanaba Pillay, for the Respondents in C. R. P. Nos. 164 to 196 of 1918 and Petitioners in C. R. P. No. 1252 of 1918.—The case is governed by section 12 of the Estates Land Act. The sections should not be narrowly construed. The right to "cut, use and enjoy" trees includes the right to appropriate. The decisions under the Bengal Tenancy Act do not apply to the present cases, assuming that they are sound. Under the old Madras Rent Act tenants were not allowed to cut down trees. The new Act has given them the right to cut and the inference cannot be drawn that the right was restricted to the mere cutting.

The muchilikas, Exhibit E series, are not merely for the trees. They are not in the nature of mere licenses. They are executed for the land with the trees thereon. The fact that the rent varies with the number of trees does not alter the situation. The occupany tenant pays rent for the land with the trees thereon.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—These are 33 connected petitions filed in revision, the petitioner in all the cases being the Raja of Ramnad. The counter-petitioners are tenants of lands on which trees were and are standing. The suits were brought on the Small Cause Side for compensation for value of trees cut from their respective holdings by the tenants. The tenants denied the cutting of the trees; denied that they were legally liable to give compensation for cutting trees on their holdings, and also disputed the correctness of the amounts claimed as damages. So far as the fact of their having cut down trees and the correct values of the trees so felled are concerned, we, as usual, do not interfere with the findings.

The remaining questions for considerations are, (1) whether the District Munsif was right in allowing as damages not the value of the trees cut but only 25 times the Tirwah payable, and (2) whether plaintiff (petitioner) is legally entitled to claim damages at all; in other words, whether the tenants have got absolute right to deal with the trees in any manner without being liable for any damages for so dealing. So far as the first question is concerned, I might at once say that if the tenants are legally liable for damages, they ought to have been made to pay the market-value of the trees and not twenty five times the Tirwah. But on the second point, I am of opinion that the defendants are not liable for any damages at all. Section 12 of the Madras Estates Land Act says: (I shall quote only the portion which is necessary) "subject to any rights which by custom or by contract in writing executed by the ryot before the passing of this Act are reserved to the land-holders every occupany ryot, shall have the right to use, enjoy and cut down all trees now in his holding." I might at once state here that, in pursuance of an order made by a learned Judge of this Court remanding these suits for a finding on the question whether there was any custom entitling the landholder to claim compensation for Palmyra trees cut by the tenants without the permission of the landholder, the District Munsif has submitted a finding that no such custom has been made out. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar (Advocate-General), however, argued that section 12 gives the tenant the right only to cut down the trees in his holding and not to appropriate them. He relies on certain decisions based on the words of section 23 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which (he argues) is to the same effect as our section 12. That section (23) says: "When a ryot has the right of occupany in respect of any land, he may use the land in any manner, etc, but shall not be entitled to cut down trees in contravention of any local custom." Construing this section, the Calcutta High Court, in the decisions reported in Nagar Chandra Pal Chowdhury v. Ram Lal Pal (1), Mohamed Hamidar Rahman Chowdhury v. Ali Fakir (2) and Meyoa Lall Ghose v. Gobinda Sunder Sinha Chowdhury (4), had made a distinction between the right to cut down the trees and the right to appropriate the trees after they are cut down. In their commentary on the Bengal Tenancy

BAJAH OF RANNAD V. KAMITH RAYUTHAN.

Act the authors (Finucane and Ameer Ali) state at page 156: "The correctness of the view involved in this extremely technical differentiation" (that is, the differentiation made in the above cases) "is very much open to question. It is probably quite against the intentions of the framers of this Act who deliberately altered the old law on this point as, under it, a ryot had no right to cut down trees." Under the Madras Rent Recovery Act also I remember to have held that, in the absence of a custom, a tenant had no right to cut down trees or to appropriate them to his own use, and that the trees cut down or which had fallen down in his holding by natural causes belonged to the landholder. But I am clear that the Estates Land Act intended to change the ordinary rule of law which governs the relations between an ordinary landlord and his tenant and intended to give the tenants under the Estates Land Act the right to use, enjoy and cut trees in their holdings and by using the expressions "cut down" and "use" intended to include the right to appropriate the trees so cut down.

Lastly, it was argued that the defendants are not ryots holding lands for agricultural purposes, but that they are merely persons who have been allowed to enjoy the produce of the trees on payment of some remuneration to the landholder which remuneration does not fall within the definition of "rent" in the Estates Land Act and that, therefore, section 12 has no application at all. The muchilikas, Exhibit E series, executed by the tenants do not, in my opinion, support this contention. They are all ordinary muchilikas of the kind usually executed by ryots holding land under the Zemindar. The only special feature of these muchilikas is that the fixed rent payable by the ryot who holds the land calculated on the area of the land (which is described as Rekai Panja) is increased by an amount varying with the number and size of the trees standing on the holding. Under the definition in clause (1) of section 3 of the Act, agriculture includes horticulture, and the fact that the rent for the land varies with the number of trees standing thereon does not make the ryot a mere licensee enjoying the produce of the trees under the landlord. He is the occupancy ryot of the land itself with the trees thereon, though paying varying rents according to the number of trees existing on the land. (We were told in the course of the argument that the assessment, was varied once in six years, according to the number of trees at the time of the periodical settlement). Reliance was, however, placed on the decision in Murugappa Chettiar v. Ramanathan Chettiar (5) for the contention that these were not muchilikas for the land held by an occupancy ryot but that these are agreements for payment of rari or tax payable in respect of the trees held on tree pattahs. We have not before us the muchilika executed in that case and if, on a consideration of the terms of that muchilika, it was held that it was an agreement by a licensee to pay Tirwah for enjoying the produce of trees without any Kudiwaram right in him in the land on which the trees stood, I accept, (if I may say so with respect) the correctness of that decision. But, as I said, I am satisfied in this case that the land itself on which the trees stand is held on pattah though the rent payable for that land varied with the number of trees standing on it, owing to a certain amount (varying according to the number of trees) being added to the invariable rent based on the extent of the land. Therefore, the Estates Land Act does apply to the relationship of landlord and tenant in this case. In this view, the petitioner, Zemindar, ought to have been thankful for the amounts awarded to him by the lower Court as he had no right to even those amounts and all these petitions seeking to obtain even more than was awarded to him must be dismissed; and I would accordingly dismiss them with costs. There will be no order as to costs in Civil Revision Petition No. 180, in which the guardian of the respondent has already been supplied with funds to defend the petition. In the remaining 32 cases, Pleader's fee of Rs. 8 in each case will be allowed.

SPENCER, J.—I agree. Section 12 of the Madras Estates Land Act gives every occupancy ryot a right to use, enjoy and cut down all trees existing in his holding at the time of the passing of the Act subject to such rights as were reserved to the land-holder at the time of the passing of the Act.

As regards trees planted after the Act, the section gives the ryot an absolute right to use, enjoy and cut down the trees notwithstanding any contract or custom to the contrary. The word 'enjoy' in this section is appropriate to the taking by ryots of the produce of fruit bearing trees. The word 'use', in my opinion, implies something more than 'enjoy'. There is nothing in the section to suggest any limit to the use to which the trees may be put and, therefore, it seems to include the use of the timber of timber trees.

As regards trees planted before the passing of the Act, whether the trees in suit are of that description or not, the finding of the lower Court is against the Zemindar on the point of custom; and as regards trees planted after the Act, no question of custom or contract arises. Arguments based on the analogy of the Bengal Tenancy Act are not of much help to us in deciding questions as to the respective rights of landlords and tenants in the Madras Presidency, as the Bengal Tenancy Act is differently worded, and contains a sentence in section 23 in these words: "But (the ryot) shall not be entitled to cut down trees in contravention of any local custom", thus placing the burden on the ryot to prove his right to cut. The section does not speak of the enjoyment or use of the trees but only restricts the use of the land in any manner which would materially impair the value of the land. That clause corresponds to section 11 of the Madras Estates Land Act. The cases quoted from Calcutta also are of little help in deciding the question before us. Meyoa Lall Ghose v. Gobinda Sunder Sinha Chowdhury (4) is a decision based purely on the words of section 23 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Mohamed Hamidur Rahaman Chowdhury v. Ali Fakir (2) is a case which ended in a finding being called for on the point to whom the trees cut belonged. Nafar Chandra Pal Chowdhury v. Ram Lal Pal (1) is a decision the soundness of which has been doubted. The suggestion that section 12 of the Madras Estates Land Act does not apply to this case was put forward on the assumption that the pattis in the suits were purely tree pattis and not pattis for land. But a reference to the muchlikas on the record shows that this is not the case. I agree with my learned brother both on the general question as to the effect of section 12 of the Madras Estates Land Act and as to the order to be passed in particular cases.

This petition is in a manner connected with the petitions just now disposed of by us. In this case petitioner is the tenant while the Raja is the respondent. For the reasons given in our judgment in the connected petitions, we set aside the District Munsif's decree and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. There will be no order as to costs in the lower Court, but the respondent will pay petitioner's costs in this Court. Vakil's fee Rs. 10.

As regards trees planted after the Act, the section gives the ryot an absolute right to use, enjoy and cut down the trees notwithstanding any contract or custom to the contrary. The word 'enjoy' in this section is appropriate to the taking by ryots of the produce of fruit bearing trees. The word 'use', in my opinion, implies something more than 'enjoy'. There is nothing in the section to suggest any limit to the use to which the trees may be put and, therefore, it seems to include the use of the timber of timber trees.

As regards trees planted before the passing of the Act, whether the trees in suit are of that description or not, the finding of the lower Court is against the Zemindar on the point of custom; and as regards trees planted after the Act, no question of custom or contract arises. Arguments based on the analogy of the Bengal Tenancy Act are not of much help to us in deciding questions as to the respective rights of landlords and tenants in the Madras Presidency, as the Bengal Tenancy Act is differently worded, and contains a sentence in section 23 in these words: "But (the ryot) shall not be entitled to cut down trees in contravention of any local custom", thus placing the burden on the ryot to prove his right to cut. The section does not speak of the enjoyment or use of the trees but only restricts the use of the land in any manner which would materially impair the value of the land. That clause corresponds to section 11 of the Madras Estates Land Act. The cases quoted from Calcutta also are of little help in deciding the question before us. Meyoa Lall Ghose v. Gobinda Sunder Sinha Chowdhury (4) is a decision based purely on the words of section 23 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Mohamed Hamidur Rahaman Chowdhury v. Ali Fakir (2) is a case which ended in a finding being called for on the point to whom the trees cut belonged. Nafar Chandra Pal Chowdhury v. Ram Lal Pal (1) is a decision the soundness of which has been doubted. The suggestion that section 12 of the Madras Estates Land Act does not apply to this case was put forward on the assumption that the pattahs in the suits were purely tree pattahs and not pattahs for land. But a reference to the muchalikas on the record shows that this is not the case. I agree with my learned brother both on the general question as to the effect of section 12 of the Madras Estates Land Act and as to the order to be passed in particular cases.

In a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff was the exclusive owner of a plot of land and for ejectment of the defendant therefrom, the plaintiff relied upon a deed of gift which was unregistered and did not bear any signature purporting to be that of the executant, but in the place reserved for the signature there existed a line which, it was alleged, was his mark, though it was not described as such in the deed, and the question was whether a presumption could be raised as to the genuineness of the deed as to render it admissible in evidence:

but it could not be presumed that the scribe had authority from the executant to sign his name on the document, and that, in these circumstances, the deed was inadmissible, and the fact that the deed was referred to in another deed, equally inadmissible, was of no avail. [p. 97, col. 4; p. 98, col. 1.]

A finding of fact that a deed is admissible in evidence arrived at by an Appellate Court without adequate proof being offered to show its genuineness is not final or conclusive, and the High Court will, in second appeal, interfere if such finding has prejudiced the trial of the appeal. JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to muafi plot No 1268 situate in Qasba Bisauli. The allegation of the plaintiff was that he was the exclusive owner of that plot and that the defendant wrongfully got himself recorded as the owner of a half share therein in June 1917. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was the exclusive owner of the said muafi plot and that the defendant had no right to it. He also sued for the ejectment of the defendant from the same. The defendant pleaded that the plot in question belonged to Kunj Behari from whom it devolved on his three sons, Hira Lal, Duli Chand and Umed Rai; that Umed Rai died childless, and that he, as the son and legal representative of Duli Chand, was entitled to a half share.

The plaintiff relied in support of his exclusive title on the deed of gift, purporting to have been executed by Pran Sukh in favour of Sri Kishen Das and Duli Chand on the 10th of August 1853. His statement was that Pran Sukh was the owner of a large plot, of which a portion was now in dispute and had planted a grove thereon and that he made a gift of the grove in favour of Sri Kishen Das and Duli Chand on the 10th of August 1853. The deed of gift was produced but it is unregistered. It does not bear any signature purporting to be that of the executant. In the place reserved for the signature of the executant a line exists, which is pointed out as the mark said to have been made by Pran Sukh. The Court of first instance examined the evidence adduced by the parties and the entries which existed from the time of the earliest Settlement in the revenue papers and came to the conclusion that, in view of the said entries, the document could not be presumed to be genuine. It further said that no presumption could be raised in favour of the genuineness of that document because the document did not purport to bear the signature of Pran Sukh and did not even mention the name of the scribe. It did not, therefore, go into the other issues raised in the case and dismissed the claim. The lower Appellate Court, however, raised a presumption in favour of the genuineness of the said deed of gift, supporting its view on three grounds. The first was that the document was referred to in an agreement executed by Tirmal, Kunj Behari Lal and Duli Chand on the 18th of July 1853. That document is also unregistered and no direct evidence was produced to prove its genuineness. The Court of first instance had refused to presume that it was genuine. The lower Appellate Court presumed it to be genuine and treated it as corroborative evidence of the deed of gift under which the plaintiff based his title. The second piece of evidence on which the Court below relied in support of a presumption being raised in favour of the genuineness of the alleged deed of gift was the testimony of Sri Kishen Das himself who gave evidence corroborating the said deed of gift. Sri Kishen Das did not, however, identify the document as having been executed by Pran Sukh or prove the alleged signature or mark of the executant. The third piece of evidence on which the lower Appellate Court also relied was the entry made at the time of the last Settlement when Sri Kishen Das was recorded as the owner of a half share of the grove in question, which, he claimed, had been allotted to him by partition. The reasons given by the Court of first instance for refusing to raise a presumption in favour of the genuineness of the document do not appear to have been adequately considered by the lower Appellate Court. The presumption in favour of a document of this nature, which does not purport to bear the signature or mark of the executant or the name of the scribe, ought to be cautiously made. Section 90 of the Evidence Act permits the presumption to be raised in favour of the signature and every other part of such document which purports to be in the handwriting of any particular person being in that person's handwriting. But this document does not purport to bear the signature of Pran Sukh. The line drawn below the place left for the signature is not described as a mark made by Pran Sukh, and, as observed in Shen Nandan Ahir v. Ram Lagan Singh (1) and Gokul Singh v. Sahab Singh (2), the utmost the Court could do was to have presumed that the signature was in the handwriting of the scribe, but it could not have presumed that the scribe had an authority from the executant to sign his name on the document. The reference to the document in another deed, the admissibility of which is equally open to question, is of no avail, because the latter document, similarly, does not bear the name of the scribe or purport to bear the signature of the executant or his mark. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff respondent urges that the lower Appellate Court has arrived at a definite finding of fact based on the evidence adduced in the case in favour of the plaintiff's title, but if the deed of gift itself has been improperly admitted in evidence, no adequate proof having been offered to show its genuineness, the finding at which the lower Appellate Court has arrived cannot be considered as final or conclusive. Section 167 of the Evidence Act provides that the improper admission or rejection of evidence shall not be ground of itself for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case, if it shall appear to the Court before which such objection is raised that, independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision, or that if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have varied the decision, but the mere fact that the learned Subordinate Judge refers to the evidence of Sri Kishen Das and the entry made at the time of the last Settlement and has relied on them as corroborative evidence in proof of the deed of gift, does not show that his conclusion is based on such corroborative evidence independently of the deed of gift. The admission of the alleged deed of gift and of the agreement said to have been executed by Tirumal, Kunj Behari Lal and Datt Chand which were not duly proved, has unquestionably prejudiced the trial of the appeal, and the proper course in the circumstances seems to be that the case should go back to the lower Appellate Court for re-trial on the issues raised before it after the exclusion of the documents before mentioned. We accordingly direct that the appeal be re-stated under its original number and re-heard after the exclusion of the said documents. The costs of this appeal will abide the event.

A suit for a declaration that an adoption is invalid is a representative suit, which the nearest reversioner is entitled to bring on behalf of the whole body of reversioners, born or unborn, within the period prescribed in Article 18 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act [p. 94, col. 1.]

Time begins to run against the whole body of reversioners from the time that the adoption comes to the knowledge of the next reversioner and fraud or inaction on his part would not give a fresh starting point to the other reversioners or stop time running which had begun to run against them all [p. 95, cols. 1 & 2.]

nearest reversioner did not bring the suit wantonly within six years of the adoption because he was bribed to consent to the adoption and not to contest it. Time, therefore, would not run against the general body of reversioners.

Messrs V. Ramesam and K. N. Kumarasami Aiyar, for the Respondents.—A suit to declare an adoption invalid is a representative suit. See Ohallagundla Varamma v. Madala Gopaladasayya (1). The limitation for it under Article 118 of the Limitation Act is only six years from the date when the next reversioner knew of the adoption. Time runs against all the reversioners. If the next reversioner's act in not suing was fraudulent, any other reversioner could have sued within time. The fraud does not stop time running or give a new cause of action to the next reversioner.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that this suit was barred under Article 118 of the Indian Limitation Act, IX of 1908. It is now settled by the Full Bench decision in Ohallagundla Varamma v. Madala Gopaladasayya (1) that a suit for a declaration that an adoption is invalid is a representative suit, which the nearest reversioner is entitled to bring on behalf of the whole body of reversioners, born and unborn, within the period prescribed in the Article.

Time begins to run from the time the adoption becomes known to the plaintiff, and here the adoption came to the knowledge of the next reversioners as soon as it took place in 1902. Therefore, time began to run against the whole body of reversioners from that date, and the present suit not having been brought within six years is barred. It is said that the nearest reversioner did not bring the suit because he had been bribed to give his consent to the adoption. That might have been a good reason for allowing another reversioner to sue within the prescribed period, if there had been one able and willing to do so. It did not prevent the next reversioner from suing himself if so minded, or prevent the whole body of reversioners being barred if no suit was brought within the prescribed period. The fact that the plaintiff was born after the alleged adoption and before the suit had become barred under Article 118 did not give him any fresh cause of action or stop time running which had begun to run against the whole body of reversioners from the date of the adoption. To hold otherwise would be opposed to the express provisions of section 9. All that Coutts-Trotters, J., as we understand him, intended to lay down in the Full Bench case in Ohallagundla Varamma v. Madala Gopaladasayya (1) was, that a decree against the next reversioner obtained by fraud or collusion would not be binding on the other reversioners. These observations do not support Mr. Narayana-murthi's contention that time would not run under the Article against the general body of reversioners, if the nearest reversioner abstained from suing from interested motives. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

SARASUTI TEWARIN v. NANDAN.

First appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 10th of April 1917.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. N. Upadhyaya, for the Appellant.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by one Musammot Nandan, the mother of a deceased Hindu, Shishmal Prasad, who died on the 9th of July 1912. She brought a suit originally against the two widows of her deceased son, namely, Musammot Sarasuti and Musammot Ramjota, and she claimed her maintenance as the mother of the deceased Musammot Sarasuti practically did not contest her claim except as to the amount which was demanded. Musammot Ramjota, on the other hand, pleaded that a son had been born to her after the death of her husband whose name was Brij Kishore and that, under the Hindu Law, Brij Kishore, was the owner of the entire estate and that she was not liable, and that if she were in possession it was on behalf of the infant son who was the real owner of the estate. It may be noted here that on the death of Shishmal Prasad the names of the two widows were entered each against half of the estate and, according to the judgment of the Court below, the elder widow, Musammot Sarasuti, is in possession of one half and the other widow is in possession of the other half. After Musammot Ramjota's defence had been filed Brij Kishore was added as a party and the plaintiff amended her plaint by an addition to paragraph 6 in which she says: "If in the opinion of the Court Brij Kishore be declared to be the son and heir of Shishmal Prasad and the possession of Musammot Ramjota as the guardian of Brij Kishore, minor, be proved over the property of Shishmal Prasad, deceased, then the plaintiff is entitled to get maintenance and a house for her residence from defendant No. 3." The Court below went into the question of whether Brij Kishore was or was not the son of Shishmal Prasad. Musammot Sarasuti strongly denied the allegation. The issue was one really between the two defendants and the Court held in favour of Brij Kishore. It passed a decree for maintenance allowance at the rate of Rs. 144 a year against the defendants. The decree goes on to say: "that the amount shall be payable by Brij Kishore, defendant, in two equal instalments, i. e., Rs. 72 on 1st January and Rs. 72 on the 1st July of every calendar year. In case of default of payment the amount shall be recoverable by the sale of the property left by Shishmal Prasad in possession of any of the defendants. None of the defendants shall be personally liable for the amount. The plaintiff shall also be entitled to reside as of right in the house situated in Mauza Bisbanpura." The rest of the plaintiff's claim in respect of her ornaments was dismissed. The only person who has appealed against this decree is Musammot Sarasuti. The only plea that she raises on appeal is, that the finding of the Court below that Brij Kishore who is the posthumous son of Shishmal Prasad, is wrong and it asks this Court on appeal to declare that he is not his son and grant such other relief as the Court may deem fit. It seems to us that the appeal must practically fail for the simple reason that, in our opinion, the decision of the issue between the defendants as to whether Brij Kishore was the son of Shishmal Prasad or not was quite unnecessary, and it is impossible for us on appeal to grant her the declaration that she seeks. It comes to this that the heirs of Shishmal Prasad and certain persons claiming to be the heirs of Shishmal Prasad are disputing among themselves; half the estate is in the possession of one widow and the other half is in the possession of the other widow either for herself or on behalf of Brij Kishore. The Court below has given the plaintiff her relief. It was quite unnecessary to go into the point about the parentage of Brij Kishore. It was simple and easy for the Court to say that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for maintenance as against all the defendants among whom one at least must be a legal heir. The disputing parties being in possession each of one half of the estate the Court could easily have gone on to say that it would make the sum due payable by the parties in proportion to the share of estate in the possession of each party and in case of default the decree could easily have gone on to say that the amount due would be a charge upon the estate and be recoverable by the sale of the estate. We do not think it was necessary to declare that the amount was payable by Brij Kishore.

TIRATH RAM v. KAHAN DEVI.

We think that the proper decree which the Court below ought to have passed was, that the amount should be payable by any one or more of the defendants who is in possession of the estate in proportion to the extent of the estate in his or her possession, and on the dates fixed by the Court below. This, in our opinion, is the only modification of the decree which is necessary, because the decree of the Court below distinctly lays down that in default of payment the amount shall be recoverable by the sale of the property left by the deceased in possession of any defendant and none of the defendants is personally liable for the amount. We, therefore, modify the decree of the Court below to this extent. The words "Brij Kishore in two equal instalments, i. e., Rs. 72 on the 1st of January and Rs. 72 on the 1st of July on every calendar year" be struck out and in lieu thereof shall be entered the words "the amount shall be payable by any one or more of defendants on the 1st of January and 1st of July of each calendar year in proportion to the extent of the estate of Snishmal Prasad in his or her possession." The rest of the decree will stand good. The appeal practically fails. In the circumstances of the case, we follow the good example set by the Court below and make each party pay his own costs, as it is evident that this litigation has been brought with a view to testing an issue which does not arise in the case itself.

Mr. Harbajan Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—This was a suit by a sister for the possession of the property of her childless brother on the death of the latter's widow. The facts of the case, which are either admitted or found, are as follows:—

One Nanak Chand had two sons, Jai Ram and Ram Chand. Jai Ram had a daughter, Musammāt Kahan Devi, plaintiff in the suit, and a son Harnam Das, deceased, whose property is in dispute. Harnam Das' widow was Musammāt Ind Kaur. Ram Chand had no son. He, therefore, appointed Tirath Ram, defendant, his daughter's son, as his heir. The parties belong to the caste of Khatris. The property in dispute was a house and certain moveables valued at Rs. 1,000. On the death of Harnam Das, Musammāt Ind Kaur admittedly got possession of the house and is said to have taken possession also of some moveable property valued as above-mentioned. In her lifetime Musammāt Ind Kaur executed a Will in favour of the defendant Tirath Ram. On the death of Musammāt Ind Kaur, the plaintiff, Musammāt Kahan Devi, according to the finding of the lower Appellate Court, took possession of the house from which she was subsequently dispossessed by Tirath Ram, defendant. This gave rise to the present suit. The defendant claimed title to succeed as collateral on the ground of his being the adopted son of Ram Chand, the uncle of Harnam Das, as well as under the Will of Musammot Ind Kaur, the widow. The plaintiff contested the validity of the adoption and the Will both on facts and in law, and claimed to succeed to the property of Harnam Das on the ground of her being his sister and lawful heir. She also claimed right to recover possession of the property in dispute from the defendant on the ground of her possessory title of which she had been recently deprived by Tirath Ram. The adoption of Tirath Ram is found to have been made out by evidence, and its validity has also been found to be established according to custom. The authorities quoted by the Courts below fully support the decision on the question of the validity of the adoption. It has, however, been held that, inasmuch as the adoption was not in the Dattaka form, Tirath Ram was not entitled to succeed collaterally. The rule on the subject is thus stated in Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, 8th Edition, page 73, paragraph 49:—

"Nor, on the other hand, does the heir acquire a right to succeed to the collateral relatives of the person who appoints him, where no formal adoption has taken place, inasmuch as relationship established between him and the appointer is a purely personal one."

The Will by Ind Kaur has been found to confer no title on the defendant, as the widow had no power to make such a Will. As to the plaintiff's right to succeed as the sister of Harnam Das in the absence of any other heir the Court held that, according to law, it was not established. On this last finding the suit was bound to fail, but the lower Appellate Court held as follows:—

"But plaintiff's suit is based not merely on her claim to succeed as an heir but on the ground of possession. Abdul Hamid v. Sarbuland Khan (1) is cited as an authority to show that she is entitled to possession of the property as she was in possession of the property before she was dispossessed, unless defendant proves his better title. Defendant's own witnesses admit that plaintiff was in possession before she was forcibly dispossessed, and she is, I think, therefore, entitled to possession of the house as decreed by the lower Court, defendant not having proved his better title."

Her allegation that Musammot Ind Kaur, widow of deceased Harnam Das, had left moveable property of the value of Rs. 1,000 was held not to have been established by evidence. She was, therefore, given a decree for possession of the house only. The defendant, Tirath Ram, has come up in second appeal to this Court, and the respondent, Kahan Devi, has filed cross-objections against the order of the lower Appellate Court as to costs.

Mr. Tek Chand, the learned Vakil for the appellant, has contested the decision of the lower Appellate Court both on the questions of law and fact. He has argued that his client was entitled to succeed collaterally as the parties belonged to the high caste of Khatris. He has also contended that Musammot Ind Kaur had full right according to law to make a valid Will in favour of the defendant appellant. In order to make the ground clear for the decision of various questions argued before us, it may be mentioned that, whatever might have been the position taken up in the Courts below, it has been frankly admitted in this Court by the learned Vakils who have argued the case before us that the parties are governed by their personal law of the Mitakshara School. According to that law it cannot be said that the adoption of the defendant not being in accordance with the Dattaka form he is entitled to succeed collaterally as the adopted son of Ram Chand. Jivan Mal v. Jamna Das (2) fully supports the decision of the lower Appellate Court on this point. The decision of the lower Appellate Court as to the power of Musammot Ind Kaur to execute the Will is also correct. An attempt was made to argue that, inasmuch as there was no reversionary heir, Musammot Ind Kaur had acquired an absolute right in the property of Harnam Das and as such was entitled to make the Will in favour of Tirath Ram, Alla Dittah v. Gauhra (3) is relied upon in support of this contention. The head note of the case runs thus :—

"S., the last male proprietor of the land in suit, died childless, leaving a widow, who succeeded to his land. On her death her brother's son (defendant) obtained possession and claimed to hold it under a Will in his favour by the widow. Plaintiffs, the proprietors of the patti, sued for possession claiming to be entitled to the property in the absence of collaterals of S., and that the Will in favour of defendant was invalid: Held, that the onus of proving a right of succession by custom lay upon the plaintiffs and they had failed to discharge that onus, and that the entry in the village waib-ul-az, restricting a widow's power of alienation, was only inserted in the interests of collaterals and had no effect, where there were none."

At the end of the judgment the learned Judges who decided the case, made the following pertinent observation :—

"Mr. Pestonji urges that the widow's estate is always a limited one. Quite so, but it is only limited for the benefit of reversioners. Where there are none, she is to all intents and purposes an absolute owner. Counsel referred us also to Wazira v. Mangal (4), but we cannot find anything there which assists his contention. The fifth proposition laid down therein by the Financial Commissioner is against him. To sum up, we hold that the onus was upon the plaintiffs and they have not discharged it."

That was a case in which the parties relied upon custom and the plaintiffs failed to establish the custom relied upon by them. The decision in that case, therefore, cannot have any bearing upon the present case.

The rule of Hindu Law as to the powers of a Hindu widow are thus stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavalry Venkata Narrainapak (5) :—

"It is not merely for the protection of the material interests of her husband's relations that the fetter on the widow's power is imposed. Numberless authorities, from Manu downwards, may be cited to show that, according to the principles of Hindu Law, the proper state of every woman is one of tutelage; that they always require protection and are never fit for independence. Sir Thomas Strange (see Strange on Hindu Law, Volume I, page 242) cites the authority of Manu for the proposition that, if a woman has no other controller or protector, the King should control or protect her. Again, all the authorities concur in showing that, according to the principles of Hindu Law, the life of a widow is to be one of ascetic privation (2 Colebrooke's Digest, 459). Hence, probably, it gave her a power of disposition for religious, which it denied to her for other purposes. These principles do not seem to be consistent with the doctrine that, on the failure of heirs, a widow becomes completely emancipated; perfectly uncontrolled in the disposal of her property, and free to squander her inherited wealth for the purposes of selfish enjoyment... Their Lordships are of opinion that the restrictions on a Hindu widow's power of alienation are inseparable from her estate, and that their existence does not depend on that of heirs capable of taking on her death."

In the case of Panlharinath Vishvanath v. Goind Shivram (6) this passage from the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council is quoted at page 71 of the report and discussed with reference to the facts of that case. In our opinion, having regard to this rule of law, it must be held that the Will executed by Musammatt Ind Kaur conferred no title on Tirath Ram.

The decision of the lower Appellate Court on the question of the plaintiff's right to succeed as the sister of Harnam Das also, in our opinion, is correct. In Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 714, paragraph 534, the rule is thus stated :—

"As regards the provinces which follow the Mitakshara, both principle and authority seem also to exclude the sister."

The learned Vakil for respondent has, however, relied upon the head-note in the case of Nanak Gir v. Musammatt Kishor Kaur (7) and has argued that under Hindu Law sisters can succeed as bandhus. A reference to the judgment in the case shows that it was never intended to lay down the rule so broadly as it is stated in the head-note. In that case there was a competition between an alleged chela and the sister of the last holder of the property in dispute. It was found as a fact that the defendant Nanak Gir was a total stranger and had failed to prove that he was a chela and as such entitled to the possession of the property. Having regard to the special circumstances of that case, it was held that sisters had a right to succeed as against a total stranger.

The general rule of law is laid down in the case of Shambhu Nath v. Musammatt Ralli (8). It was never intended to depart from the general rule as stated by Mayne in the paragraph above referred to. In the decision of this Court in the case of Shambhu Nath v. Musammatt Ralli (8) the law on the subject is thus stated:—

"The whole subject is ably discussed in Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage, 8th Edition, pages 724-753, where it is pointed out that as regards the provinces which follow the Mitakshara School both principle and authority seem to exclude the daughter (sic sister)."

The head-note in Nanak Gir v. Musammatt Kishan Kaur (7) being inaccurate cannot, therefore, help the plaintiff. She is, therefore, not entitled to succeed against the defendant who cannot be said to be a total stranger being the daughter's son of Ram Chand, the uncle of Haroon Das.

The only question that now remains to be decided is, whether the decision of the lower Appellate Court granting a decree to the plaintiff on the ground of possession can be maintained. In this connection two questions have been argued on behalf of the defendant appellant, namely:—

(1) that the plaintiff had never obtained possession of the nature and kind which, according to rulings, would entitle her to a decree on the alleged possessory title,

(2) that the defendant has a better title as against the plaintiff, being a bandhu under the Mitakshara Law.

As regards the first question we have examined the record and the result of our investigation is that we find that the plaintiff gave no evidence as regards her possession after the death of Musammatt Ind Kaur. It appears that on the widow's death there was a scramble for possession. The plaintiff tried to acquire possession by putting her lock, the defendant also put his lock on the door of the house. The learned District Judge has based his judgment upon the evidence of two of the defendant's witnesses, namely, Har Dayal and Sher Muhammad. We have scrutinized their evidence carefully and we find that it is not sufficient to establish plaintiff's peaceful and exclusive possession. Nothing beyond the putting of a lock by the plaintiff is proved by this evidence; on the other hand, the evidence of these witnesses goes to show that, in spite of the lock of the plaintiff, the defendant had succeeded in getting possession. The ruling in Abdul Hamid v. Sarbuland Khan (1) has been relied upon by the learned District Judge in support of his view that the plaintiff could be given a decree for possession on the basis of her possessory title. This was not a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. In a suit on possessory title a plaintiff ought to prove more than what is necessary for him to do in his suit under the Specific Relief Act. In the head note in the case above cited the rule of law on the subject is thus stated:—

"Possession in law being a substantive right or interest which exists and has legal incidents and advantages apart from the true owner's title, a person in possession of land without title has an interest in the property which is good against all the world except the true owner. Therefore, where a plaintiff has been forcibly dispossessed of immovable property by a person having no title, he can sue for possession simply on the strength of the possession which he had before he was dispossessed, provided he sues within the twelve years' period allowed by Article 142 of the Limitation Act. In such a suit, unless defendant proves a title, plaintiff should succeed without being asked to prove his own title to ownership, and even if the defendant proves that he has no such title."

On the facts disclosed in evidence on the record, in our opinion, the conclusion drawn by the lower Appellate Court as to the possession of the plaintiff is not justified.

On the second question Mr. Tek Chand has argued that the defendant, independently of his alleged right as the adopted son of Ram Chand or as a legatee under the Will of Musammatt Ind Kaur, has a better title as against the plaintiff as the daughter's son of Ram Chand inasmuch as he is according to the authorities a bandhu of Harnam Das, deceased. In support of this contention he has relied upon Mulla's Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, pages 58 and 59, where in the order of succession among bandhus at No. 7 father's father's son's daughter's son is mentioned as a bandhu. Now the defendant comes within this description. Harnam Das' father was Jai Ram, Jai Ram's father was Nanak Chand. Ram Chand was the son of Nanak Chand. The defendant is the daughter's son of Ram Chand. Therefore, he comes within the description 'father's father's son's daughter's son.' Thus the defendant has a better title than the plaintiff. The ruling in Abdul Hamid v. Sarbuland Khan (1) instead of being against the defendant rather supports his claim, as he has succeeded in showing a better title than the plaintiff within the meaning of the rule laid down in that case.

In our opinion, therefore, the decision of the lower Appellate Court granting the plaintiff a decree for possession on the ground of her recent possession cannot be supported. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and dismiss the suit of the plaintiff with costs in all Courts. The objection of the plaintiff necessarily fails and is dismissed with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL SUIT No 128 OF 1920.

June 4, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ghose.

E. H. DUCASSE—PLAINTIFF

versus

E. M. D. COHEN—DEFENDANT.

Calcutta High Court Original Side Rules, Ch. XIII,

r. 49—Originating summons—Indenture of lease, construction of—Procedure.

By an Indenture of Lease certain premises were demised to plaintiff for 5 years on certain terms and conditions, one of which was that plaintiff would not assign the premises without the consent of the defendant, but that such consent should not be unreasonably withheld provided plaintiff remained responsible under the lease. Plaintiff applied to defendant for his consent to assign his interest for the residue of the term mentioned to a Limited Company, but defendant refused. Plaintiff then applied to the High Court on an originating summons for the determination of the question whether, upon the true construction of the Indenture, he was entitled to assign the remainder of the term under the lease without the consent of the defendant. Defendant objected to the determination of the question on the ground that the plaintiff should proceed by means of a regular suit:

Held, that, under Chapter XIII, rule 9 of the Rules of the High Court, the procedure adopted by the plaintiff was correct, and that, on a proper construction of the Indenture, plaintiff was entitled to assign the remainder of the term of the lease without the consent of the defendant [p. 106, col. 2; p. 107, col. 2.]

Mr. B. L. Mitter, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. T. Ameer Ali, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This originating summons was taken out by the plaintiff E. H. Ducasse for the determination of the following questions, namely, whether, upon the true construction of the Indenture of lease mentioned in the plaint herein, relating to premises No. 4, Madge Lane, in the town of Calcutta, commonly known as the Grand Opera House, and in the circumstances mentioned in the plaint, the plaintiff is entitled to assign the remainder of the term under the said lease to the Bijou Limited without the consent of the defendant E. M. D. Cohen, and whether the defendant should not pay the costs of and incidental to these proceedings.

It appears that by an Indenture of Lease, dated 2nd March 1917, the premises known as the Grand Opera House were demised to the plaintiff for a period of five years, commencing from the 1st April 1917, on certain terms and conditions mentioned in the said lease.

Among other conditions it was provided by the said Indenture that the plaintiff would not assign, underlet or otherwise dispose of the said Grand Opera House and the said premises or part with the possession thereof or any part thereof, without the consent of the defendant, but that such consent should not be unreasonably withheld provided the plaintiff remained responsible in terms of the said Indenture.

The plaintiff complains that he applied to the defendant sometime in August 1918 for his consent to his assigning his interest in the said Indenture for the residue of the term mentioned therein to the Bijou Limited but the defendant, although repeatedly requested by the plaintiff to give his consent to the said assignment, has refused to do so. This refusal was finally given on the 5th of January 1920, and the plaintiff characterises this refusal as capricious and without any valid reason whatsoever on the part of the defendant.

The correspondence which passed between the parties shows that the plaintiff applied for the defendant's consent on the 2nd August 1918. On the 8th August 1918, the defendant replied saying that there was an outstanding dispute about a chandelier in the Grand Opera House, and, unless and until that dispute was settled, the question of the assignment of the lease could not be gone into. The dispute as regards the chandelier was settled on or about the 17th January 1920. On the 2nd January 1920 Messrs. Watkins and Co., acting on behalf of the Bijou Limited, wrote to the defendant saying that he had been repeatedly requested to give his consent to the assignment of the residue of the term of the lease to the Bijou Limited, but that the defendant had not formally granted his consent to the proposed assignment. In these circumstances, they notified to the defendant to the effect that they, on behalf of their client, namely, the Bijou Limited, proposed to take a formal assignment from the plaintiff on 6th January 1920 and asked the defendant to state definitely on or before that date, whether he consented to the assignment or not. On the 5th January 1920, Messrs. Leslie and Hinde, on behalf of the defendant, stated that their client refused to consent to the assignment referred to above. Messrs. Leslie and Hinde stated their client's objections in these terms:—"The objection of our client to the assignment to a Limited Company is a perfectly reasonable and valid one, and any attempt to carry out such assignment will be looked upon as a breach of covenant with a consequent right to our client to put an end to the lease. Our client has agreed with Mr. Galstaun to sell the property to him subject to certain conditions being complied with, and subject to your client's lease. It is possible that the purchaser will not have the same objection to the assignment that our client has."

The plaintiff thereupon came to this Court on the 21st January 1920, with his present plaint against the defendant and applied on an originating summons for the determination of the questions hereinbefore referred. The application came on before me on the 6th February 1920. Learned Counsel who then appeared for the defendant objected to my determining the questions raised on an originating summons, and argued that the plaintiff should be directed to proceed by means of a regular suit. He further argued that, even if the Court should be of opinion that this matter could be proceeded with on an originating summons, the defendant ought to be given an opportunity to file a written statement herein. I was of opinion that this was a fit and proper case to be proceeded with on an originating summons. But inasmuch as the defendant wanted to file a written statement, I saw no objection to such a course and accordingly granted an adjournment. The defendant has now filed his written statement. In his written statement, the defendant states that the plaintiff has no cause of action as against him, and that, even if he had any, these proceedings by way of originating summons are wholly misconceived.

I think the procedure which has been adopted by the plaintiff in the present instance is entirely correct. Under the Rules of this Court (see Chapter XIII, rule 9) any person claiming to be interested under a deed or other written instrument may apply by originating summons for the determination of any question of construction arising under the instrument and for a declaration of the rights of the persons interested. The corresponding rule in England is Rules of Supreme Court, Order LIV<sup>a</sup>, rule 1. Among points dealt with from time to time under the last mentioned rule, have been questions as to whether an effective notice to determine a lease had been given [Viola's Lease, In re, Humphrey v. Stenbury (1)] whether a licensee to assign had been unreasonably withheld [Young v. Ashley Gardens Properties Limited (2), Spark's Lease, In re, Berger v. Jenkinson (3) and Evans v. Levy (4).] Whether upon the true construction of a covenant in a lease the costs of new drainage works were payable by the tenant [Farlow v. Stevenson (5)] and whether letters which had passed between parties amounted to an agreement for the renewal of a lease [Bossert v. Jones (6)] and the like. Of course, it is not the proper mode of procedure when the litigation involves anything beyond questions of construction, or where the questions of construction will not necessarily put an end to the litigation [see Lewis v. Green (7)]. The procedure adopted in this case was also, it may be noticed, adopted in the recent case of Mills v. Cannon Brewery Company Limited (8). I do not doubt, therefore, as I have said already, the correctness of the procedure in this case.

GURDAS MAL SINGH v. ISHAR DAS.

The only question that now arises is, whether, in the circumstances of the present case, the defendant was justified in withholding his consent to the assignment of the residue of the term under the said indenture of lease to the Bijou Limited. The onus of proof is on the plaintiff. I understand that the defendant's objection was that he did not like that the residue of the terms should be assigned to a Limited Company. In my opinion, the objection is not sustainable. It has been held that the word 'person' in a covenant against assignment includes a Corporation, and a Limited Company is capable of being "a respectable and responsible person" within the meaning of such a covenant. [See Willmott v. London Road Car Company (9)]. As to what is an "arbitrary" or "unreasonable" refusal, the cases of Treloar v. Bigge (10), Governors of Bridewell

Hospital v. Fawcner (11), Barrow v. Isaacs (12) and Quinton v. Horne (13) indicate that the expressions when used in a clause such as the one under consideration mean "without fair, solid and substantial cause."

On the evidence before me, I am of opinion that the defendant's refusal in the present case was unreasonable and capricious. I do not propose to again go through the correspondence, it is only necessary to point out that there was an express clause in the lease by which the liability of the plaintiff would remain undiminished in the event of an assignment. The only question now is the question of costs. In the view of the matter which I have taken, there is no escape from the conclusion that the defendant must pay the costs of this application. Therefore, the order is that, on a proper construction of the Indenture of Lease mentioned in the plaint, and in the circumstances mentioned therein, the plaintiff is entitled to assign the remainder of the term of the said lease to the Bijou Limited without the consent of the defendant, and that the defendant should pay the costs of and incidental to this application.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2865 OF 1916.

Mr. Justice Wilberforce.

GURDAS MAL SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

ISHAR DAS AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—
RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Hundi, sub on—

GURDAS MAL SINGH v. ISHAR DAS.

Hundi inadmissible in evidence—Plaintiff, whether can fall back on original cause of action.

The language of section 91 of the Evidence Act is uncompromising, and whenever the terms of a contract are reduced to writing, and that writing is, for any reason, inadmissible in evidence, the promisee must lose his remedy [p. 100, col. 1.]

Where a hundi is executed in consideration of a loan and it is found that the hundi being insufficiently stamped is inadmissible in evidence, the debtor cannot fall back upon the original transaction and sue the debtor on the basis of the loan. [p. 108, col. 2; p. 100, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 17th June 1916, varying that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 9th March 1916.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellant.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case sued to recover on three hundis, two for Rs. 500, each and the third for Rs. 1,000. He has been given a decree in respect of the hundi for Rs. 1,000 and the suit has been dismissed in respect of the claim on the other two hundis.

In this second appeal we are concerned with that portion of the suit which is based upon the hundi for Rs. 500, dated the 1st August 1913.

The plaintiff's plaint was to the effect that on the 1st August 1913 the defendants had borrowed Rs. 500 from him and had given him a hundi payable after two months, that on the 31st December 1913 a fresh hundi was executed and the old hundi returned to the defendants. The fresh hundi was, however, insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff urged that, if the hundi were to be held inadmissible by reason of that defect, his suit should be considered to be brought on the original cause of action, viz., the oral loan of the 1st August 1913, upon which the first hundi of that date was based.

The Court below has held that, inasmuch as the oral contract of loan was embodied in the hundi dated the 1st August 1913, the plaintiff had no cause of action independent of that hundi. It has followed the view which has consistently been held by this Court, notably in Bakhshi Ram Labhaya v. Kaka Ram (1), that the plaintiff cannot base any claim on the original hundi.

Before us all the authorities on the subject noted in the margin (see below*) have been reviewed. They include the classic ruling Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (2), which has been followed or distinguished or dissented from by the various High Courts. The principle laid down in that case is that, when a cause of action for money is once complete in itself, and the debtor gives a bill or note to the creditor for payment of the money at a future time, the creditor, if the bill or note is not paid at maturity, may always, as a rule, sue for the original consideration; and a distinction was drawn between a loan and a deposit, a distinction which is emphasized in Pramatha Nath Sandal v. Dwarka Nath (3). But with all deference we are unable to see any difference in principle between a deposit and a loan, for if a loan implies a promise of re-payment, equally also, in our opinion, does a deposit imply such a promise of re-payment.

For the appellant great reliance is placed upon the Allahabad ruling which is reported as Bai Nath Das v. Salig Ram (4), wherein it was held that when a promissory-note is handed to a creditor in payment of his claim and the promissory-note, by reason of its inadequate stamp, turns out to be waste paper, the creditor is at liberty to fall back upon an action for money had and received, the basis of which action is not the contract reduced to the form of a promissory-note, but the doctrine of equity that the person who has received a sum of money from another for a consideration which wholly fails must return the money to the payer. If this view be correct, then it appears to us that section 91 of the Evidence Act is, to all intents and purposes, abrogated. Almost all written contracts must necessarily be preceded by oral contracts, and it is no argument against the applicability of section 91 of the Evidence Act to any particular transaction that, had the contract not been reduced to writing, a suit upon the oral contract would have been competent. The language of section 91 of the Evidence Act appears to us to be uncompromising, and we must hold that, if the terms of any contract have been reduced to writing and that writing is, for any reason, inadmissible, the promisee must lose his money. Similarly, (to take the case of a mortgage), if the mortgage is an oral transaction, the mortgagee may maintain a suit to recover his money, but if the mortgage has been reduced to writing and that writing is, for any reason, inadmissible, the mortgagee may not prove the debt aliunde and must bear his loss. It may seem unreasonable that by reason of the laches of the debtor the creditor should lose his money, but this arises from a duty imposed upon individuals by the Legislature to co-operate with Government in securing payment of Government's dues.

In all these cases, except that reported as Baij Nath Das v. Salig Ram (4), the question to be decided has been taken to be, "has the creditor a complete cause of action independently of the document which is inadmissible?" In this case the loan of Rs. 500, and the execution of the hundi were simultaneous transactions, and the contract for re-payment was obviously embodied in the hundi, but as that hundi is inadmissible in evidence, the contract cannot be proved aliunde. Consequently, the appeal must fail.

It has been urged that the District Judge was wrong in assuming that the hundi of the 1st August 1913 was under-stamped, and in view of the provisions of section 118 (f) of the Negotiable Instruments Act the presumption was in favour of the admissibility of the document, provided that the plaintiff could prove that it had been lost. His allegation, however, was that the hundi had been returned to the defendants, and that allegation was denied by the defendants. The plaintiff did not lead evidence on the point, so that it was not proved that the document had been lost. Moreover, the point is negligible, because the claim for relief was clearly based upon the oral contract which preceded the execution of the hundi.

For the reasons given above, we hold that no evidence could be given, other than the hundi, of that transaction, and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The suit referred to in O. THENNUTTI KALLINGAL v. POCKER.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. O. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellant:—The Subordinate Judge misunderstood the scope of rule 98 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code. The Court is not concerned only with the question of actual possession at date of the summary order. What plaintiff has to prove is the right to present possession. That is more than actual possession. If the opposite party proves a subsisting title, the plaintiffs' possession at date of order is of no avail. Where the decree-holder sues and does not prove title, the defendant with only a possessory title is entitled to succeed.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondents.—Compare the language of rule 103 with rule 63. In the former, the right to present possession has to be proved, but in the latter the right to the property itself has to be established. The rule 103 is only restricted to the question of actual possession at date of the summary order.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff resisted the execution of a decree for possession of the suit lands, and, having had an order made against him under Order XXI, rule 98, instituted the present suit under rule 103 "to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property", failing which the right would have been lost under the terms of the rule. The plaintiff, who based his case both on possession and on title, alleged that the conveyance, executed by him in 1899, in favour of the 1st defendant never took effect, and that, if it did, he had acquired a title by adverse possession before the date of the order against him under rule 98. The District Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that the title passed to the 1st defendant by the conveyance of 1899. The Subordinate Judge allowed the appeal and decreed the suit, holding that the plaintiff, having, as he found, been in possession at the date of the order under rule 98, could not be ousted in execution of a decree to which he was not a party, and that, under the rule, the Court was concerned with possession only.

The view that, in a suit of this kind, the Court has merely to ascertain whether the plaintiff was in possession at the date of the order against him under rule 98 is based on a misconception of the scope of the rule. If he was, then the Court ought not to have passed the summary order against him under rule 98 but ought to have dismissed the decree holder's application against him under rule 99. The effect of the order having been made under rule 98 was to oblige him to sue under rule 103 on pain of losing his rights, whereas if the application had been dismissed under rule 98, the decree-holder would have had to institute the suit under the like penalty. The suit referred to in the rule, by whichever party instituted, is a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property. In a suit by the decree-holder if it were shown that the defendant was in possession at the date of the order under rule 99, the decree holder could only succeed by proving his title, because a person in the actual possession has a possessory title against the world and can only be dispossessed by the true owner, and those claiming under him. So, too, in the present suit, if it be found that the plaintiff was in possession at the date of the summary order against him under rule 98 he is entitled to succeed by virtue of that possession unless the defendant (decree-holder) proves a subsisting title carrying with it the right to present possession.

The object of these provisions is to secure the speedy settlement of questions of title raised in execution, as explained by the Privy Council in Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (1), with reference to the similar procedure prescribed with regard to claim petitions, and this is effected by requiring the unsuccessful party in the summary proceedings to file a suit within the year to establish his right on pain of losing it.

In support of the Subordinate Judge's view reliance has been placed on the fact that the suit referred to in rule 103 is a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property, whereas the suit referred to in rule 63 is a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute. This does not show that a suit under rule 103 is concerned only with the question of actual possession at the date of the summary order. The suit is to establish the right which the plaintiff claims to the present possession of the property and this right may be established without showing that the plaintiff was in actual possession at the date of the summary order against him. Decree-holders and auction-purchasers against whom an order has been made under rule 99 are never in possession at the date of the summary order and yet they are allowed and even required to maintain the suit, and the scope of the suit must be the same whether the order against the unsuccessful party in the summary proceedings was made under rules 98, 99 or 101. Nabodwipendra Mookerjee v. Madhu Sudan Mandal (2), the only authority we have been referred to, is in accordance with this view. The Subordinate Judge has not recorded any clear finding as to whether the plaintiff has established the right which he claims to the present possession, and the decree must be reversed and the appeal remanded to the District Judge to enable him to do so in the light of the above observations. Costs to abide.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (2), O. Where a suit is brought by certain persons in a representative capacity under Order I, rule 8 of the Civil Procedure Code, the persons on whose behalf the suit is brought are not parties to it, and if, during the pendency of an appeal in such a suit, the suit having been decreed, some of these persons die, it is not necessary to bring their legal representatives on the record, and failure to do so does not involve the abatement of the appeal. [p. 113, col 2.]

An order declaring the abatement of an appeal on the ground that the legal representatives of certain deceased respondents have not been brought on the record is a decree and is appealable as such. [p. 113, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 20th December 1915, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Hissar, dated the 1st April 1912.

Mr. Nanak Chand, Pandit, for the Appellants.

Bakshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of Mr. Inam Ali, District Judge of Hissar, dated the 20th December 1915, declaring the appeal of Udmi and others (defendants-appellants), v. Hira and others (plaintiffs-respondents) to have abated under Order XXII, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure. A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondents to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that the order appealed against, not being a decree, is not open to an appeal. In order to decide this preliminary objection it is necessary to give the facts giving rise to the appeal before the learned District Judge in which the order appealed against was made:—

In the village Sisai Bhola the majority of the biswadars are Jats. There are some Brahman biswadars also, who own and possess some of the land. The suit out of which the appeal before the District Judge arose was instituted by the Jat biswadars on the allegations that they alone, as the real founders of the village, were entitled to the income of shamilat lands and that Brahman biswadars had no right in the said income. It was stated that this allegation was borne out by the entry made at the first Settlement of 1863, but that at the Settlement of 1891-1892 a vague entry was made to the effect that the profit and loss of the income was shared by the biswadars in proportion to khewat shares. This the plaintiffs alleged went to show that the Brahmans also had been sharing the income as biswadars.

UDMI V. HIRA.

The relief claimed in the plaint, shortly put, was that it may be declared that they alone had the right to the income and that the Brahman biswadars had no concern with it. In the heading of the plaint the names of 393 persons are mentioned, who are described as "akwam i-jatan saknai Mauza Sisai Bhola, Tahsil Hansi, muddian". In the array of defendants the names of 53 persons are mentioned with the description "Brahmanan saknai Mauza Sisai Bhola, Tahsil Hansi. muddaalahim." The date of the presentation of the plaint is mentioned as the 15th of January 1912. It was signed by six of the persons described as plaintiffs—namely, Harasi, Dhari, plaintiff; Maman, son of Malke, plaintiff; Jagram, plaintiff; Ujagar and Sonda, plaintiff. The verification of the plaint is also signed by these six persons. Along with the plaint a petition was presented under Order I, rule 8, of the Code of Civil Procedure by the six persons, who had signed the plaint which contained the following statement and prayer:—

"In the suit mentioned in the heading there are 393 plaintiffs belonging to the Jat tribe, and there are 53 defendants belonging to the Brahman tribe. On behalf of the plaintiffs Hira, Maman, Mehri, Jagram, Ujagar and Sonda, Lambardars of the deh, institute the suit (muddian ki tarofee, etc., etc., etc., numberdarni deh dawa karte hain). It is, therefore, prayed that permission be granted to Hira, etc., Lambardars, applicants in accordance with Order I, rule 8, of the Code of Civil Procedure to institute the suit and prosecute it in the place of the entire body of the Jat proprietors of the village Sisai Bhola. The defendants are also numerous. It is accordingly prayed that UDMI, son of Sheo Ram, and Mutsaddi, son of Data Ram, defendants, be permitted to defend the suit on behalf of the entire body of the defendants and notice be given to the parties to the suit by proclamation."

This permission was granted by the Court on the 16th January 1912 in the terms of the petition presented by the six plaintiffs mentioned above. Accordingly, the suit was registered on this date, namely, the 16th January 1912. Notifications, as contemplated by the law, were issued. No objections were raised and apparently the entire body of the Jats accepted the six plaintiffs as the proper persons to institute and prosecute the suit in the interest of all the Jats. On the 8th of February 1912 a written statement was filed on behalf of some of the defendants and while pleas impugning the claim on the merits were raised no objection appears to have been raised as to the right of the six plaintiffs to institute the suit on behalf of the entire body of Jats. Another written statement was filed by one of the defendants, Bansi Dhar, in which also no question as to the array of parties was raised. Thus though originally the names of 393 plaintiffs were entered in the heading of the plaint the suit was registered as a suit filed by six of the plaintiffs whose signatures are to be found at the foot of the plaint.

The Court of first instance passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs in the following terms.—

"It is, therefore, ordered that a decree for declaration of rights to the effect that the Jats (the plaintiffs) alone are entitled to the income accruing from malba, other samilat and miscellaneous kind of abadi and Gorah deh land, and that they alone are co-sharers in this income and that the defendants, i.e., the Brahman biswadars have no concern with it, be passed in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants".

The parties were ordered to bear their own costs.

Although the suit was treated as having been instituted by the six plaintiffs alone yet, curiously enough, the names of the 393 persons originally mentioned in the heading of the plaint were entered in the heading of the judgment of the first Court, and the same mistake was repeated in the heading of the decree. The defendants appealed to the lower Appellate Court and in the list of parties given in the heading of the memorandum of appeal the names of 52 defendants appellants were mentioned, and in the list of respondents the names of all the 393 persons were given. On the date of hearing it was discovered that three of the respondents, namely, Sisa, Ballu and Daya, had died. Their legal representatives were not brought on the record within the period of limitation, namely, six months from the dates of their deaths. Applications had been made beyond time for substitution of names and had been granted ex parte. The Court held.

UDMI v. HIRA.

that out of the plaintiffs-respondents (Jats) all having common interest in this litigation, Sisa died on the 6th June 1912, Ballu died on the 18th July 1912 and Daya died on the 19th September 1912, and that applications for substitution of their legal representatives were made long after the period of six months fixed and made the following order:—

"Hence the appeal had abated (vide Harlu v. Lala (1). I cannot proceed with this appeal which had abated under the law (vide Order XXI, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure)."

On the appeal being called for hearing in this Court the preliminary objection mentioned above was raised. The decision in the Full Bench ruling Niranjan Nath v. Afzal Hussain (2) was relied upon in support of this objection. In our opinion the decision instead of supporting the contention of the learned Vakil for the respondent goes to show clearly that, so far as the facts of this case are concerned, the order impugned is clearly a decree and is open to an appeal. The following passage, to be found at page 405*, of the judgment deals with the precise question which arises on the facts of this case:—

"When there are two or more plaintiffs, and one of them dies and the right to sue does not survive to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone and no application to bring the legal representative on the record is made within six months Order XXI, rule 3 lays down that the suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned. What is the effect of this partial abatement on the suit of the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs? If the suit is of such a nature that it cannot proceed in the absence of the deceased's legal representative the partial abatement will result in the total abatement or dismissal of the suit. Whether the final decision is called an abatement or a dismissal, qua the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs, it is manifest that it falls within the definition of term 'decree' and is appealable as such."

From the order of the lower Appellate Court it is manifest that the Court declared the appeal to have abated on the ground that the plaintiffs in whose favour the decree stood had a common interest in the litigation. Apparently, the Court intended to adjudicate that, inasmuch as the interest of all the plaintiffs was common and the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiffs had not been brought on the record within time, the whole appeal had abated. Hence in terms of the ruling "whether the final decision is called an abatement or dismissal * * * * it falls within the definition of the term 'decree' and is appealable as such.

We accordingly hold that the preliminary objection has no force and must be overruled.

As regards the merits of the appeal we feel no difficulty in giving our decision. The three respondents who have been found by the lower Appellate Court to have died were not among the six plaintiffs who had instituted the suit in accordance with the order of the Court made under Order I, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. They were among the persons on behalf of whom these six plaintiffs had sued. Therefore, in fact and in law they were not parties to the suit and their names had unnecessarily been mentioned in the array of the respondents. It was, therefore, not necessary for the further progress of the appeal to bring on the record their legal representatives. If it was not necessary to bring their legal representatives on the record the appeal cannot be said to have abated. This view is clearly supported by the decision of a Division Bench in Ram Dyal v. Mohammad Raju Shah (3). It is not necessary for us, therefore, to give any further reasoning in support of the view we have taken, for the precise question which arises for decision before us arose before the Division Bench and was fully dealt with and decided by the learned Judges. Following the decision of the Division Bench, we hold that the order passed by the lower Appellate Court was erroneous. We, therefore, set it aside and remand the case under Order XL, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure with the direction that the appeal be re-placed on its original number in the register of pending

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant:—The appellant undertook to be liable for any decree that may be passed against all the four defendants. The exoneration of some of them by the plaintiff prejudices the surety as he is deprived of his own remedy against all the four defendant co-parceners. Section 139 of the Contract Act applies.

The exoneration of some of them does not affect his liability. The plaintiff has not done any act inconsistent with any right of the surety.

JUDGMENT.

C. M. A. No. 103 of 1919.

We think appellant in this case is entitled to discharge of his security in accordance with the provisions of section 139 of the Indian Contract Act. In his surety-bond, he contracts to be liable for any decree which the Court may pass against the defendants in the suit, who were four in number.
Plaintiff, subsequently, with the leave of the Court, exonerated defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and proceeded with the suit against defendant
No. 1 alone and obtained a decree against him.

This materially alters the position of affairs from the surety's point of view. At the time he became surety there were four persons (equal co-parceners in family property, as we are told) against all of whom he would have his own remedy, if he had to pay anything under the decree. The effect of the act of the Court and decree-holder, is to destroy his remedy against three of these.

We think the principle of section 139 governs the case; and that the surety must be held to be discharged.

The order of the lower Court must, therefore, be set aside with costs in both Courts.

C. M. A. No. 102 of 1919.

This follows Civil Miscellaneous Appeal
No. 103 of 1919. The order of the lower Court is set aside and the execution petition dismissed with costs in both Courts.

The mere fact that a portion of a grove has become denuded of trees is not sufficient to deprive the land of its character of a grove, so as to give the Zemindar the right of re-entry in respect of the land as a whole, or in respect of any portion of it, or to a declaration that the land is no longer grove land. [p. 116, cols 1 & 2.]

The wajib-ul-arz of a village referred to a certain grove as standing on a different footing from other groves, and laid down that the grove-holder was to enjoy the full benefit of the grove, but that when the grove became denuded of trees the Zemindar should have the right to occupy and bring the land under his own cultivation, and this was followed by the words "and no tenant has any right without the consent of the Zemindar to plant a grove or scattered trees":

First appeal from order of the Additional Judge, Shahjahanpur, dated the 12th September 1919.

Mr. Lakshmi Narayan, for the Appellant.

Dr K. N. Katju and Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this suit are the Zemindars of a certain village. The defendant is a tenant of the village and is in possession of two plots of land constituting a grove or groves. It is not clearly stated anywhere whether the two plots of land are contiguous, but from the pleadings and the manner in which evidence was adduced it would seem that they must be; at any rate, it will be convenient to speak of the "defendant's grove." It is alleged in the plaint that, at the time of the Settlement in 1301 Fask, there were 323 trees standing in the grove and that now there are only 103 scattered trees. The plaintiffs, relying on their rights as proprietors of the land and on the provisions of the wajib ul-arz prepared at Settlement, claimed that the defendant's grove, or at least some unspecified portion of the same, had become denuded of trees and had lost the character of a grove. They sought relief by way of a declaration and also by way of an injunction restraining the defendant from planting new trees in the grove, coupled with an order directing him to remove a number of trees alleged in the plaint to have been planted between a year and six months prior to the institution of the suit. The suit was resisted on a variety of grounds. The Court of first instance found that the land in suit, considered as a whole, had not lost its character of a grove, so that no right of re entry had come into existence in favour of the plaintiffs Zemindars, either in respect of the land as a whole or in respect of any portion of it. The learned Munsif went on to criticise the form of the reliefs claimed and held that, in any case, the plaintiffs were not entitled to relief by way of declaration, because if any right of re-entry had accrued to them they should have defined the area in respect of which that right had accrued and claimed possession over the same, and not a mere declaration. On the question of the injunction the Trial Court interpreted the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz in favour of the defendant and held that he had a right to continue planting new trees within the limits of the grove as defined in the Settlement papers. There were one or two other issues fixed which were not tried out, but the first Court dismissed the suit substantially upon these findings. In appeal the learned Additional Subordinate Judge has not discussed some of the points taken by the Court of first instance. He has not thought it necessary to consider whether the claim for relief by way of a declaration was in fact maintainable. He seems to have limited his consideration to the plaintiffs' claim for an injunction placing an interpretation upon the terms of the wajib-ul-arz different from that adopted by the first Court, he has held that the defendant has no right to plant new trees without the permission of the plaintiffs. Upon this finding he has remanded the suit for final disposal to the Court of first instance. In appeal before us there has been some argument on the questions discussed in the first Court's judgment which have not been touched upon in appeal.

CHOKHEY LAL V. BEHARI LAL.

The learned Munsif was, in our opinion, clearly justified in his finding that, on the admission contained in the plaint itself, the land in suit still retains its character of a grove, so that no right of re-entry had come into existence in favour of the plaintiffs, either in respect of the land as a whole or in respect of any portion of it. There is also great force in the reasons given by the learned Munsif for his finding that, in no event, were the plaintiffs entitled to maintain a suit for a mere declaration, and those reasons have not been dissented from by the lower Appellate Court. There remains, however, the question whether the plaintiffs are or are not entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from planting new trees. The point must be determined with reference to the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz and to the evidence on the record as to the previous conduct of the parties, that is to say, the rights hitherto exercised by the grove-holder. The Trial Court laid no small stress on the fact that in the period of 30 years or so between two Settlements, a very large number of new trees, 147 at least according to the learned Munsif, must have been planted by the grove-holder. It has also been shown to us that the re-planting of the grove on which the defendant has now embarked is on a considerable scale. According to the evidence, there are 2 or 3 hundred young trees at present standing in the grove over and above the 109 old trees referred to in the plaint. There was much controversy as to the age of these newly planted trees, but we do not think that anything substantially turns upon it. We are content to accept the finding of the lower Appellate Court that this re-planting of trees in the grove was at least started some four years prior to the institution of the suit. As to the terms of the wajib-ul-arz the essential points are the following: There is, first of all, a clear reference to these two groves as held by a "raiya", the predecessor-in-title of the present defendant, and as standing on a wholly different footing from the groves of proprietors of which a detail is also given. It is clearly laid down that the grove-holder is to enjoy the full benefit of the grove, including the fruit and the right to remove the timber. Then comes a provision that when the grove becomes denuded of trees the Zemindars shall have a right to occupy and to bring it under their own cultivation. This is followed by the crucial words which we are asked to interpret. Rendered as literally as possible, the words are as follows, "and no tenant (riaya) has any right without the consent of Zemindars to plant a grove or scattered trees." The case for the plaintiffs-respondents is that these words refer to all riayas in the village, including the holder of the two particular groves which are mentioned just before this sentence, and that they amount to a prohibition of the planting of new trees within the grove in suit, either to re-place the old ones as those fall down or under any other circumstances, unless the consent of the Zemindars is obtained. The Trial Court regarded these words as wholly independent of the provisions immediately preceding about the two specified groves belonging to the defendant's ancestor. It treated them as merely containing a general statement that, in future, tenants of the village would not have any right either to plant a new grove or to plant individual trees, as, for instance, on the boundaries of their fields, or on the waste lands of the village, without previously obtaining the consent of the Zemindars. The lower Appellate Court seems to have thought it sufficient to hold that the words "aur kisi riaya ko" are perfectly general and are sufficient to include the predecessor-in-title of the defendant. This is a fair remark enough, if the attention of the Court is to be limited to these words alone; but it is certainly difficult to apply the words immediately following to the case of the existing grove-holder whose rights have just previously been defined. We had to put it to the learned Counsel for the respondents whether he wished us to apply this particular sentence to the facts of the present case on the ground that the defendant had been planting scattered trees, or on the ground that the defendant had been planting a grove. The former alternative he very properly abandoned. It seems, indeed, quite impossible to apply the words "lagane darakht mutafarriqa" to the facts disclosed by the evidence as to what the defendant has been doing within the boundaries of his own grove. The contention, therefore, is that the defendant has transgressed a provision of the wajib ul arz by virtually planting a grove. We think that this contention is almost as difficult to adopt as the other. The defendant has presumably waited until a considerable number of the trees in the grove had reached an age at which they were no longer valuable as fruit-bearing trees, but were likely to yield a profit either as timber or as firewood. He has then begun to plant a large number of trees to re-place those which have thus been lost. The expression "lagane bagh," as it appears in the wajib-ul-arz certainly seems to us to refer to the planting of a new grove. It is quite true that there is no word like "jadid" in the sentence in question, but when one comes to read the context the meaning does seem to be that, apart from the rights of the existing groveholder which have been just specified, no tenant in the village is recognised as having a right to plant a grove, that is to say, in effect to plant a new grove, without the consent of the proprietors.

Something has been said to us about the rights of the parties under the general law. So far as decided cases go, the tendency has been to limit the decision by the provisions of the wajib ul arz and to assume that the grove holder possesses all rights in respect of his grove which are not excluded by those provisions. At any rate, we think that, if it had been intended to prevent this groveholder from keeping up the character of the grove by the planting of new trees, something explicit would have been said on the subject in the wajib ul arz, and in this connection, the evidence relied upon by the first Court as to the practice of planting new trees which had apparently been going on without question for the entire interval between two Settlements becomes of considerable significance. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has said that the terms of this wajib ul arz are very similar to those of another wajib-ul-arz which a learned Judge of this Court was called upon to interpret in another case. There is, no doubt, a certain similarity but, as a matter of fact, the judgment under appeal is an illustration of the danger of attempting to interpret a document in one case by the interpretation which may have been put upon a differently worded document in some other case. We think the wording of the wajib-ul-arz which has to be considered in the present case is distinguishable in the most crucial point from that of the wajib-ul-arz referred to in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. In our opinion, therefore, the decision of the Court of first instance was correct. The plaintiffs were entitled to no relief and the order of remand passed by the lower Appellate Court is unsustainable. We allow this appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, and restore the decree of the Court of first instance, with costs throughout in favour of the defendant.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (5)— Execution of decree—Application for copy of decree, whether step-in-aid of execution.

An application by a decree-holder for a copy of the decree is not an application to the Court "to take some step-in-aid of execution" within the meaning of Article 182 (5) of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

Appeal against the order of the District Court, South Malabar, dated the 24th January 1919, in Appeal Suit No. 634 of 1918, preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Chowghat, dated the 24th September 1918, in Execution Petition No. 1302 of 1918, in Original Suit No. 828 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The first step to take proceedings in execution is to obtain copy of the decree. The application for copy of the decree is a 'step in-aid of execution' and is a fresh starting point for limitation, KATAPRATH KATAKKE v. VALUVAKKAT KISHAKKE.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondent.—There is no connection between securing copy of a decree and its subsequent use for execution proceedings. In granting the copy there is no step taken in aid of execution. The copy may be applied for also for the party's satisfaction.

JUDGMENT.—The only question is, whether a decree-holder can plead his application for copy of decree as an application to the Court "to take some step-in-aid of execution." We agree with the District Judge that it cannot be so treated. There is no necessary connection between obtaining a copy and utilising it for the purpose of execution, and we do not think that it can be said that the Court in granting the copy takes any step-in-aid of execution. This appeal is dismissed.

Malabar Law—Alienation by karnavan unquestioned by tawazhi members—Attaladakam heirs, right of, to sue for recovery of alienated properties.

An attaladakam heir who succeeds to the properties of a tawazhi only when there are no members left and to properties which have not been disposed of by the last members cannot question an alienation made by the karnavan which was not impeached by the tawazhi members [p. 120, col. 2]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 299 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Talliparamba, in Original Suit No. 820 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. O. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellants:—The plaintiffs, the attaladakam heirs, could question the karnavan's alienation. Alienation by the karnavan without necessity is ab initio void and the alienee is only a trespasser who could be ousted by any proper heir to the estate. The other members of the tawazhi could recover the alienated property without first setting aside the alienation. Under the Limitation Law it is not necessary for junior members of a tarwad or Hindu reversioners to set aside alienations by the karnavan or the widow before suing to recover the property. In a case falling under section 144, the person in possession must be deemed to be a trespasser and the alienation must be deemed to be non-existent. As, under English law, the right to avoid transactions of this nature descends to the heirs.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondents.—Attaladakam heirs are a kind of residuary heirs. They only succeed in the absence of tawazhi members and to undisposed of properties. Where the tawazhi members did, by no act of theirs, object to the alienation, it is not open to the attaladakam heirs to question it. The karnavan represents the tarwad and has large disposing powers. The right of the other members is limited and it is only they that can question the karnavan's act where it was not for a necessary purpose.

The analogy of sections 91 and 144 of the Limitation Act does not fit in. It cannot be said that an improper alienation is no alienation at all. Nor can any deductions be made from the position and rights of Hindu reversioners.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—In this appeal the question of law is as to the right of attaladakam heirs to dispute certain alienations made by the karnavan of a tawazhi who owned the property in dispute when the other surviving member of the tawazhi living at the time did not revoke it by any unequivocal act of his during the lifetime of the karnavan or after his death. There is no express authority on the point, but it seems to me all the same that it does not admit of any substantial doubt. In this case there were two members of the tawazhi to which this property belonged.

KATAPRATH KATAKKE V. VALUVAKAT KISHAKKE.

and the karnavan for the time being made gifts of some of the properties to his children. The other member of the tawazhi at the time was one Paikoya. He did not, during the lifetime of the karnavan, take any steps to question these gifts except as regards one item of property which is not in dispute and with respect to which, before his death, he had instituted a suit and obtained a decree declaring that the alienation of the item of the family property was invalid. But he did not take any steps to get the rest of the property from the donees.

It was contended by Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar, the appellants' learned Vakil, that the attaladakam heirs, that is, the tarwad which would succeed to the property on the death of the last surviving member of the tawazhi, were entitled to recover the property from the alienees. The plaintiffs are called attaladakam heirs, although it appears that their right to succeed to the property on the death of its last surviving member is provided for by a karar which was executed when the tarwad became divided into several tawazhis. I don't think it makes any difference whether the right of the plaintiffs is based on the karar or on the general law which gives the tarwad the right of succession to the property of a tawazhi which has become extinct. The main argument of Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar is that the alienation by a karnavan of a Malabar tarwad or tawazhi without such necessity as is recognised by the law is ab initio void and the alienee is in the position of a trespasser. The right of the remaining members of the tarwad to the property, according to this contention, is not in any way affected by alienation and they can recover the property without seeking to set aside the alienation. His argument is founded on the decisions on the question of limitation whether it is necessary for a junior member of a tarwad or of a reversioner under the ordinary Hindu Law to have a deed of alienation executed by the karnavan or a limited owner like a widow cancelled and set aside within the period of limitation provided by Article 91. There used to be a conflict of decisions on this subject, but it has been ultimately ruled by the Privy Council in Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi

Debi (1) that it is unnecessary to have the alienation cancelled and set aside in such cases. Their Lordships say that, by instituting a suit for possession, a reversionary heir sufficiently elects to avoid the transaction and it is not necessary for him to have the deed set aside by any act previous to the institution of the suit. And we have also been referred to several decisions of this Court in which similar language is used in respect of alienation by the karnavan of a Malabar tarwad; Mandoth Veetil Ohappan v. Puthanpurayil Ranu (2) and Unni v. Kunchi Amma (3). But these decisions on the question of limitation do not really conclude a point of this nature. The main basis of the argument is that, if a case falls under Article 144 of the Limitation Act, then we must take it that the person in possession is a mere trespasser and, although he may profess to claim possession under a deed executed by a person who, in proper circumstances, would be entitled to convey the property, yet he has no title to the property and we must treat the case as if the alienation had ever been made. It is difficult to see how any such proposition can be derived from the cases to which we have been referred. It would be an extreme proposition of the law to lay down that an improper alienation by a limited owner or by a person in the position of a karnavan of a tarwad must be treated for all purposes as if it had never taken place. It is quite clear that there may be persons in adverse possession of a property to whom Article 144 of the Limitation Act is applicable, but who cannot be properly treated as mere trespassers. However that may be, the question before us is, are persons like the plaintiffs in the present case entitled to question and avoid alienations made by the karnavan of a Malabar tarwad? There can be no doubt that only the remaining members of the tarwad whose property has been wrongfully alienated by the karnavan can question such an alienation. The karnavan of a tarwad under the Malabar Law is the only person who can deal with the properties of the tarwad in circumstances recognised by the law, and the other members have no rights in the property in the sense of their being entitled to a share in the property or to be able to ask for partition. Their rights consist in being maintained by the karnavan out of the income of the family property and to see that the karnavan, does not injure the family property by dealing with it in an improper way. If the junior members did not chose to question the alienation made by the karnavan, it is impossible to conceive on what principle their right would descend to a person like an attaladakam heir. It cannot be disputed that the karnavan and the junior member all together might make a gift of the entire family property if they so chose and, if the karnavan makes such a gift and the other members of the family affirm it, the result would be the same. There is no provision of law which lays down that they must affirm it by some positive act of theirs and, so far as I can see, it would, be sufficient if they did not, by any unequivocal act, call in question the alienation. In this case we have been asked by Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar to say that it was alleged in the plaint that the Pakoya in fact had elected in his lifetime to avoid the transaction in question, but we do not think that there is any such definite allegation. All that is stated in paragraph 3 of the plaint is, that "the deceased Pakoya also had taken objection to the said demises." That is not a statement that he had, by any clear, unambiguous act, made a declaration supposing that a mere declaration would be sufficient that he would not be bound by the alienation made by the karnavan Ali Kunbi. In the plaint in the suit in respect of the item of property not in question in this litigation, there occurs a statement to this effect, "other documents also appear to have been executed for the benefit of the wife and children and other reliefs will be sought in respect of them." There is nothing in this statement which would enable us to identify any of the properties involved in the suit and in other respects also the statement cannot be said to be at all clear or unambiguous.

A number of English authorities have been cited before us by Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar in order to establish that the right to avoid a transaction of this nature descends to the heirs and legal representatives. But these cases can be of no help to us. They are cases which relate to the right to recover damages on similar remedies with respect to torts and it will be totally unsafe to draw any analogy between those cases and a case like the present arising under of the peculiar institution of the Malabar Law. Even the cases relating to the rights of a reversioner to avoid transactions of this kind under the ordinary Hindu Law do not furnish an exact analogy, because the position of the junior members of the tawad is in some respects weaker than that of the reversioners under the ordinary Hindu Law. A Hindu widow has merely a limited estate and her powers of alienation and management of the property are more limited than those of a Malabar karnavan. An attaladakam heir succeeds to the properties of a tawashi only when there are no members of the tawashi left and, of course, only to properties which were not disposed of by the last members of the tawashi. I must hold in this case that the property in dispute was disposed of by the last members of the tawashi and there was nothing left for the plaintiffs to succeed to. This Second Appeal (Second Appeal No. 1373 of 1918) is dismissed with costs. The other Second Appeals Nos. 1374, 1375 and 1376 of 1918 follow.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 4th May 1917.

Messrs. K. N. Katju and Badri Narain, for the Appellants.

Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The present litigation has been before this Court once before in First Appeal No. 205 of 1913. The facts which have given rise to the present litigation are to be found set out in Mata Prasad v. Ram Charan Sahu (1). We will re-state the facts. Two brothers, Baij Nath and Jagarnath, were members of a joint Hindu family. Baij Nath obtained a simple money-decree against one Ram Jas on the 17th of June 1878. In 1881 under a deed of partition between the brothers Jagarnath also got a half share in the said decree. Both the brothers applied for execution of the said decree and in execution attached 16 annas of Mauza Karma on the 20th of September 1884. On the 29th of July 1887 Ram Jas executed a deed of simple mortgage in respect of an eight-anna share in Mauza Karma to the defendants first party. In the meantime, both Jagarnath and Baij Nath died. On the 10th of January 1898 Ram Jas executed a sale deed in respect of a nine annas six pies share in the village for the sum of Rs. 9,471 in favour of Musammatt Sheolagna, the widow of Jagarnath. Jagarnath also left three sons, Ram Charan, Tirbeni, and Ganri Shankar, who are the plaintiffs in the present suit.

Out of the consideration for the sale-deed Rs. 127 were paid in cash, the balance was left with the vendee to pay off the amount of the decree of the 29th of July 1887 held by the sons of Jagarnath and Baij Nath, and also the amount of another decree held by the sons of Baij Nath only. Mutation of names was effected in favour of Musammatt Sheolagna. Thereupon the defendants first party, i.e., the mortgagees brought a suit on the basis of a mortgage of the 29th of July 1887 impleading Thakur Das, the heir of Ram Jas, the original mortgagor, and also Musammatt Sheolagna, the purchaser of the nine annas six pies share. Musammatt Sheolagna defended the suit. Among other pleas, she pleaded that she was not the owner of the sale-deed, dated the 10th of January 1898, that her sons, namely, Ram Charan, Tirbeni and Ganri Shankar, were the real owners, and, that they were necessary parties. The mortgagees would not admit that the sons were the real owners. They contended that Musammatt Sheolagna was the real owner of the property. An issue was framed on the point and the learned Subordinate Judge held that Musammatt Sheolagna was the real owner, and, finding on the other issues in favour of the plaintiffs mortgagees, passed a decree in their favour on the 2nd of June 1898. In execution of that decree a six annas share in Mauza Karma was sold and purchased by the decree-holders. That six-annas admittedly included four-annas out of the share purchased by Musammatt Sheolagna. Possession was formally delivered to the decree-holders auction-purchasers on the 14th of April 1900. On the 16th of December 1911 the three sons, Ram Charan, Tirbeni and Ganri Shankar, started the present litigation suing for possession of the four-annas share in Mauza Karma against defendant's first party on the ground that they were the real purchasers of the party under the sale deed of the 10th of January 1898, and that the decree obtained against Musammatt Sheolagna was collusive and not binding on them. The Subordinate Judge held that Musammatt Sheolagna was the real owner, that even if she was the benamidar the decree against her was binding upon the real owners, i.e., the present plaintiffs. On appeal the Additional District Judge reversed the findings on both the issues and remanded the case for trial on the merits. The mortgagee decree-holders auction-purchasers appealed to this Court and this Court upheld the decision of the Additional District Judge by its judgment which is to be found in Mata Prasad v. Ram Charan Sahu (1). By that decision it was finally decided between the parties to the present litigation that the present plaintiffs, the sons of Musammat Sheolagna, were the real owners, that Musammat Sheolagna was not a benamidar for her sons and that the decision in the former litigation did not operate as res judicata. The case went back to the Subordinate Judge for decision on its merits. The learned Subordinate Judge held on the facts as now established that the plaintiffs were entitled to possession but he held that as the defendants first party, if relegated to a fresh regular suit, would be unable to enforce their mortgage against the sons of Musammat Sheolagna on account of the rule of limitation, it would be hard lines on them if the plaintiffs were given possession without being forced to pay what is due to the defendants first party on their mortgage. It accordingly gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession conditional on payment of a certain sum of money within a certain time. In default their suit was to stand dismissed. On appeal the lower Appellate Court modified the decree only as to the amount of money that was to be paid. Both parties have come into this Court in second appeal. The plaintiffs urge that they are entitled to an unconditional decree for possession. The defendants first party plead that they are entitled to recover a greater sum from the plaintiffs than the Court below has allowed. They seek for a modification of the decree of the Court below but only as to the amount of money to be paid by the plaintiffs.

Briefly stated, the facts are as follows: The mortgagees brought a suit for sale against the original mortgagor and against one Musammat Sheolagna, the ostensible transferee of the property. Musammat Sheolagna when impleaded came forward and stated to the Court that she was not the real owner and that her sons were the real owners and that they ought to be impleaded. The mortgagees, for some reason best known to themselves, which we have not been able to fathom, resisted the attempt to bring the sons of Musammat Sheolagna into the case as defendants. One would have thought that they would have hailed the impleading of these persons with joy as it would finally have decided the matter completely as between them and everybody who had an interest or claimed to have an interest in the property, but they objected tooth and nail and succeeded in keeping them out of the suit. They got a decision behind the backs of the sons that the mother was the owner. On the findings in the present case the mother was not the owner but the sons were. They put to sale the right, title and interest of Musammat Sheolagna which was nil and they purchased, that right, title and interest at an auction sale. They then applied for possession and it was formally granted to them on the 14th of April 1900 and they succeeded in ousting the real owners of the property who had not been made parties to the mortgage-suit at all. The real owners have come into Court and have asked to be reinstated in possession, the lawful possession which they had on the 14th of April 1900 and with which the mortgagees decree-holders auction purchasers, had no right to interfere. One would have thought prima facie on these facts that the plaintiffs were clearly entitled to be re-placed into lawful possession of the property to which they clearly were entitled on the 14th of April 1900. The only ground on which the Court below has given a conditional decree is that if the opposite party were relegated to their proper remedy by a regular suit that suit would be barred by time. In our opinion, this is quite an insufficient ground for granting a conditional decree, specially on the facts of the present case. It is no body's fault but that of the mortgagee decree holders that the present plaintiffs were not impleaded in the former litigation. They are in the position of persons who wrongfully ousted the plaintiffs and who, on the 14th of April 1900, were not legally entitled to possession at all as against these plaintiffs. The lower Court has placed reliance upon two decisions of this Court to be found reported as Hajra Bibi v. Shiam Narain (2) and Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (3). The facts of these two cases differ considerably from the facts of the case now before us. In Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (3) the mortgagee obtained his decree and purchased the property and when he came to apply for possession was resisted and failed to get possession. He then brought a suit in the alternative to recover either his money or possession of the property. This Court held that he was entitled to one of the two. In the case reported as Hajra Bibi v. Shiam Narain (2) the purchaser was not the mortgagee decree-holder but a third party. In neither of these two cases was any question of limitation raised. In the case reported as Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (3) it could not have arisen at all. In the case reported as Hajra Bibi v. Shiam Narain (2) it is impossible to say from the report whether or not the point of limitation could have been raised, but it clearly was not raised. There is no mention of the word 'limitation' to be found either in the statement of facts or in the judgment. On behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants our attention has been called to the Full Bench decision of this Court reported as Hargu Lal Singh v. Gobind Rai (4) and Madan Lal v. Bhagwan Lal (5). In each of these cases the mortgagee auction-purchaser brought a suit simply for possession. This Court on both occasions held that his claim for possession could not lie and that the suit was to stand dismissed. To a considerable extent it seems to us that the two decisions in Hajra Bibi v. Shiam Narain (2) and Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (3) clash with the Full Bench rulings, because in each of these cases it has been held that the plaintiffs therein were entitled either to recover their money or to recover possession of the property, whereas in the Full Bench case decision it was distinctly held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to possession at all. Be that as it may, the facts of the present case do differ from the facts of those four cases. Here we have it that the mortgagee auction-purchaser has gone one step further and has ousted from possession persons who were lawfully entitled to possession on the day of the ouster. Further, we have it admitted before us very clearly and distinctly that his claim (when the present suit was brought) under his mortgage against the present plaintiffs was time-barred and that he could not have recovered on it. The lower Courts, therefore, have allowed the wrongful possession obtained by the defendants to operate in their favour so as to enable them to give the plaintiffs a decree conditional on payment of what is now a time-barred debt so far as the present plaintiffs are concerned. There is no denying the fact that the ouster of the plaintiffs was an unlawful ouster. It had come about under the colour of a decree and an auction sale. That does not make it any the more legal specially when we see that these mortgagees auction purchasers fought tooth and nail to prevent the present plaintiffs being impleaded in the former litigation. Furthermore, the person whom they did implead and whose rights they purchased has been found to have no title whatsoever in the property. The act of the auction-purchasers, therefore, has been equivalent to that of a mortgagee actually ousting his mortgagor although his mortgage was only a simple one and then pleading in defence that the persons lawfully entitled to possession cannot get possession until his money is paid. In other words, he seeks to call in aid for his defence in the present suit his own wrongful act. The plaintiffs, in our opinion, are clearly on the facts entitled to be replaced in the position in which they were on the 14th of April 1900, leaving it to the opposite party to seek and pursue any remedy which they may have according to law. The mere fact that his remedy may now be time-barred is no good ground for giving the plaintiffs a conditional decree for possession on re payment of money. We, therefore, allow Appeal No. 84 of 1918 and we grant to the plaintiffs an unconditional decree for possession of the property. The plaintiffs will have their costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

The period of limitation prescribed by Article 181 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, is confined to applications under the Civil Procedure Code, and does not apply to an application under section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act made by the Official Receiver. No period of limitation is prescribed for such an application which may be made at any time during the pendency of insolvency proceedings.

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Tanjore, dated the 3rd November 1919, in A. No. 15 of 1917, in I. No. 17 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs V. Ramasam and K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The application by the Official Receiver was barred under Article 181 of the Limitation Act. It should have been dismissed. To a similar proceeding in the case reported as Sambasiva Mudaliar v. Panchanada Pillai (1) this Court applied Article 178 of the old Limitation Act of 1877.

Mr. A. V. Visvanatha Sastri, for the Respondents.—Article 181 of the Limitation Act applies only to applications under the Civil Procedure Code, and not to one under a self-contained, special enactment like the Insolvency Act. See Janaki v. Kesavalu (2), Gnanamuthu Upadesi v. Vana Koilpillai Nalan (3), Rahmat Karim v. Abdul Karim (4), Baimanekbai v. Manekji Kavasji (5), Ali Ahmad v. Naziran Bibi (6) and Oonnell v. Himalaya Bank Limited (7).

In Sambasiva Mudaliar v. Panchanada Pillai (1) these decisions were not dissented from, but it was held that the application itself was under the Civil Procedure Code.

JUDGMENT.—It has been argued before us that the learned District Judge was wrong in holding that the application by the Official Receiver under section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act was not barred by limitation, and that, in reality, it was so barred under Article 181 of the Limitation Act. We think the District Judge's conclusion is right though upon a ground different from what he has taken. We are of opinion that that Article does not apply to an application like the present one. It has been held more than once in this Court that Article 178 of the Limitation Act of 1877, which corresponds to Article 181 of the present Act, applied only to applications under the Civil Procedure Code. See Janaki v. Kesavalu (2) and Gnanamuthu Upadesi v. Vana Koilpillai Nalan (3). This view has also been accepted by the other High Court. See Rahmat Karim v. Abdul Karim (4), Oonnell v. Himalaya Bank Limited (7), Ali Ahmad v. Naziran Bibi (6) and Baimanekbai v. Manekji Kavasji (5).

Our attention was drawn to the ruling in Sambasiva Mudaliar v. Panchanada Pillai (1) but in that case the learned Judges did not dissent from the earlier decisions but came to the conclusion that the application there was in reality one under the Code of Civil Procedure, to which Article 178 applied. That case is thus not an authority against the view we are following.

The application we are dealing with is clearly one under the Insolvency Act and not one under the Code, though the procedure prescribed by the Code has to be adopted in its disposal. It is thus an application to which no limitation applies and one which may be made at any time during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings.

In this view, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.— These two appeals are brought under the Letters Patent from a decision of a single Judge of this Court. They arise out of two suits, which were tried together by consent of all the parties, the facts in each being similar and the defendant being the same in each. The suits were instituted by the respondents to set aside certain decrees obtained against them by the appellant on the ground that they were obtained by fraud. The material facts, shortly stated, are as follows: the appellant sued the respondents to recover certain sums due under two hand-notes executed in his favour by the respondents, respectively. In each case, he recovered by an ex parte decree the amount claimed. In execution of the decree so obtained, the jotes of the respondents were attached and eventually sold. After attachment and before sale, the respondents applied under Order IX, rule 13, to set aside the decree on the ground that the summons was not duly served. It was the respondent's case at the hearing of that application and it is their case in the present suits, that no service of summons had taken place at all, and that the appellant, in collusion with the Court-peon, got a false report of service of summons filed. The question, therefore, for determination in the application under Order IX, rule 13 was whether the fraud then, as now alleged by the respondents, was, in fact, perpetrated, or whether, as the appellant contended, the summons was, in fact, served upon the respondents. At the hearing of the application, the respondents themselves gave evidence, four witnesses in all being called on their behalf. The appellant called three witnesses, including himself and the peon, whose honesty had been attacked. The learned Subordinate Judge after hearing the evidence found that the appellant had proved satisfactorily that the summons was duly served and dismissed the application with costs. If the summons was, in fact, served, as the learned Subordinate Judge found, it follows that the fraud alleged by the respondents resulting in the non-service of the summons was found not to have taken place. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge was, in my opinion, the judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction directly upon the point raised in the present suits and is, in the words of Sir William DeGray, in the Duchess of Kingston's case (1), "as a plea, a bar, or as evidence, conclusive between the same parties, upon the same matter, directly in question in another Court."

It is true that a decree can be set aside on the ground of fraud but, if the question has already been agitated between the same parties and decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction, the matter is res judicata and cannot again be re-opened between the same parties in a subsequent suit. The learned Judge, from whose decision these appeals are brought, considered that the case was governed by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khagendra Nath Mahata v. Pran Nath Roy (2) and that the allegations made in the plaint in these suits were within the words of Lord Robertson, who delivered their Lordships' judgment in that case, "plainly an attack not on the regularity or sufficiency of the service or proceedings but on the whole suit as a fraud from beginning to end."

With great respect to the learned Judge, I am unable to apply the principle upon which that judgment was based to the facts of the present case. In that case the defendants had obtained an ex parte decree against the plaintiff, which he sought to have set aside on the ground of fraud. It is true that the plaintiff alleged that service of summons had not been duly made, and that the defendants had caused false returns of service of process to be made. It is also true that he had applied under section 108 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, to have the decree set aside on the ground of non-service of summons and had failed, and had that been his only ground for impeaching the decree, I venture to think that their Lordships' decision would have borne a different complexion. It was proved, however, that in the suit, which resulted in the decree impeached, the defendants, in order to keep the plaintiff out of the way and prevent him from knowing what was going on, had induced his wife and other relations to institute proceedings to have the plaintiff declared a lunatic and by means of various threats had caused him to leave his home and stay elsewhere in secrecy, and in such circumstances the plaintiff was unable to take proper steps to defend the suit. It is clear that these allegations, as pointed out in their Lordships' judgment, were an attack not merely on the regularity or sufficiency of the service, but on the whole suit as a fraud from beginning to end. These were matters, which were not enquired into in the proceedings under section 108, and no decision had been come to on them. Even assuming the service of summons to have been regular, there still remained the other question to be determined, upon which the decree could be set aside as fraudulently obtained. In the present case, the only fraud alleged is that in connection with the service of summons and this question had been determined in the proceedings under Order IX, rule 13. It was further alleged in the plaint that the hand notes sued upon were not genuine and did not bear the signatures or thumb impressions of the respondents. It is not competent to the respondents, having failed in the original suite, to re-open by a subsequent action the very questions which were decided. The hand notes were produced and proved by the appellant in the original suite and were accepted as genuine by the learned Judge. It is true that the suits were determined ex parte, but this is no reason why the respondents should be allowed again to re-open the matters there determined. See South American and Mexican Company, In re, Bank of England, Ex parte (3).

It was lastly contended that as the decrees were also attacked on the ground that they were obtained by perjured evidence, a fresh suit will lie. There has been some conflict of opinion in the decisions both in England and in this country upon this question, but the better view seems to be that an action is not maintainable upon that ground. So far as this Court is concerned, the question has been decided in more than one case against the contention of the respondents, I need only refer to the case of Ram Narain Lall Shaw v. Tooki Sao (4) in which the learned Judge, from whose decision this appeal is brought, took part. It was there decided that a suit to set aside an ex parte decree, not on the ground that the plaintiff was prevented by any fraud on the part of the defendant from placing his case before the Court, but on the ground that the defendant procured the decree by putting forward perjured evidence in his favour is not maintainable. To the same effect is the decision in Kirpa-sindhu Panigrahi v. Nandu Ohiran Panigrahi (5) where it was observed: "if notice had not been served or if the defendants were prevented by the plaintiff from appearances, there would be some extrinsic collateral act, but where the notice has been duly served and the plaintiff has owing to his own fault failed to appear and place his case before the Court, there is not such extrinsic collateral act. The whole case is before the Court, which has decided it on the pleadings and on the evidence, and whether the case was a false one or not,

Plaintiff, who was one of several judgment-debtors, got an assignment of the decree in the name of his agent, who was to be paid a certain commission for executing the decree against the other judgment-debtors. The agent realised moneys in execution but refused to pay them over to his principal. In a suit by the latter for recovery of the amounts :

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Ramnad at Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 753 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, in Original Suit No. 4 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant :—The contract here is one of agency and the defendant is certainly accountable to the plaintiff. The defendant having realized moneys, though under an illegal contract, there is no reason why he should retain it. Tenant v. Elliott (1), see also Bhola Nath v. Mul Chand (2).

The purchase of a decree by a judgment-debtor is not illegal. Order XXI, rule 16 only prohibits execution. The right of the judgment-debtor who has obtained the transfer to sue his co-debtors in contribution is not lost. See Anant Vinayak v. Nagappa Subraya (3). Here the defendant had realized moneys in execution without objection. The Court did not refuse execution. The point is that the defendant having got the moneys cannot, under his contract withhold them from his principal, the plaintiff. The case would be different if the plaintiff should compel the defendant to execute the decree or sue him for damages for failure to execute.

Mr. B. Bashyam Iyengar, for the Respondent :—Under Order XXI, rule 16, Civil Procedure Code the decree was not executable. It contains a distinct prohibition. The moneys having been realized in contravention of a statutory provision, plaintiff, who was a party to this illegal business, cannot claim any benefit under an illegal contract. The Court would have refused to execute the decree if it was brought to its knowledge that the defendant was only a benamindar.

The contract is also in violation of the provisions of section 23 of the Contract Act. The agency in favour of the defendant was created by the plaintiff to deceive the Court. Both the agency and the contract are unenforceable under the section. See Sykes v. Beadon (4), Booth v. Hodgson (5) and Battersby v. Smyth (6). See also Gowami Shri Purushotamji Maharaj v. Robb (7).

PALANIAPPA CHETTIAR v. CHOCKALINGAM CHETTIAR.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The plaintiff's suit has been dismissed on the ground that, according to section 23 of the Contract Act, the agreement on which the suit is based as contained in Exhibit A is illegal and that, therefore, the plaintiff cannot recover the money which the defendant had collected under certain decrees. The plaintiff himself is the judgment debtor under those decrees and he apparently asked the defendant to take an assignment of the decree on his behalf and to execute the decree against the other judgment-debtors and the defendant realised in execution certain assets. By Exhibit A, it is provided that the defendant will submit accounts to the plaintiff of the amount spent in collecting the money and of the amount realised and, after deducting a commission of 20 per cent, to pay over the balance to the plaintiff.

Order XXI, rule 16 says that "where a decree for the payment of money against two or more persons has been transferred to one of them, it shall not be executed against the others." It is not contended that on such transfer, the liability under the decree becomes altogether discharged but that the decree shall not be enforced in execution. It is open to the judgment-debtor who has obtained a transfer of the decree to sue his co-debtor upon it for contribution as held in Anant Vinayak v. Nagappa Subraya (3). In this case the judgment debtors did not raise any objection to execution on the strength of Order XXI rule 16. The defendant must be taken to be an agent of the plaintiff for the actual realisation of the money. But it is argued on behalf of the respondent that it was the duty of the Court to refuse execution and the Court would have done so if it was brought to its notice that the defendant was merely an agent or benamindar of the plaintiff who was one of the judgment debtors. Having regard to the language of Order XXI, rule 16, we may proceed on the assumption that if the facts were known to the executing Court, it would have been bound to reject the application for execution.

Then, it is contended that if the Court were now to help the plaintiffs in recovering the moneys realised by the defendant by means of the execution of the decree in spite of the prohibition of the law, that would be a violation of the rule laid down in section 23 of the Contract Act. Mr. Bashyam Iyengar, in support of the judgment of the lower Court has referred us to a number of rulings of the English Courts. The English authority on which much emphasis was laid down was the case of Sykes v. Beadon (4). There Jessel, M. R., upheld the proposition that a Court of Law or Equity will not lend its assistance in any way towards carrying out an illegal contract, therefore, such a contract cannot be enforced by one party to it against the other, either directly by asking the Court to carry it into effect, or indirectly by claiming damages or compensation for breach of it. The case before us does not fall within the proposition laid down in Sykes v. Beadon (4). In the first place, the purchase of a decree by one of the judgment-debtors is not illegal and, next, this case comes within the class of cases mentioned in the judgment of the Master of the Rolls: "but in cases where the contract is actually at an end or is put an end to, the Court will interfere to prevent those, who have, under the illegal contract, obtained money belonging to other persons on the representation that the contract was legal, from keeping that money." If the plaintiff in the present suit were suing the defendant to enforce the contract and to compel him to execute the decree against the co-judgment-debtors or to recover damages for having failed to do so, in that case, it would be asking the Court to carry out an illegal contract. But that is not the case here. The same answer is to be given to the cases in Booth v. Hodgson (5) and Battersby v. Smyth (6). On the other hand, this case, in my opinion, is governed by the class of cases of which Bridger v. Savage (8) is a leading example. There the plaintiff had employed the defendant for a commission to make bets for him on horses. The defendant accordingly made such bets, and he received the winnings from the persons with whom he had so betted. In an action by the plaintiff for the amount which the defendant had so received, it was held that 8 and 9 Vic. C. 109, section 18, which makes null and void all contracts by way of wagering, did not apply to the contract between plaintiff and defendant and that, therefore, notwithstanding that Statute, the plaintiff was entitled to recover in respect of the bets which had been so paid to the defendant. The learned Judges, of the Court of Appeal point out that the principle is that, "a person who has received money from another under an illegal contract cannot be allowed to retain it," to quote the language of Eyre, C.J., in Terent v. Elliott (1) Bowen, L.J., observed as follows: "If the person who has betted pays his bet he does nothing wrong, he only waives a benefit which the Statute has given to him, and confers a good title to the money on the person to whom he pays it. Therefore, when the bet is paid the transaction is completed and when it is paid to an agent, it cannot be contended that it is not a good payment for his principal. If not, how monstrous it would be that the agent who has received the money which belonged to his principal and which he received for his principal, and only on that account should be allowed to say that the payment was bad and void. The truth is that the contract under which he received the money for his principal is not affected by the collateral contract under which the money was paid to him." It seems to me that these observations apply to the present case. I may also point out that in Bridger v. Savage (8) which was argued by eminent Counsel on both sides, Sykes v. Beadon (4) was not cited at all as establishing a contrary proposition nor the cases in Terms Reports cited by the respondent. So far as the Indian Courts are concerned, there are two decisions directly against the contention of the plaintiff Bhola Nath v. Mul Ohand (2), Nagendrabala Dass v. Guru Doyal Mukerji (9). In the former decision Chief Justice Stanley takes the law as quite settled on the authority of the English decisions. On the other hand, we have been referred to a decision of the Bombay High Court in Gowami Shri Purushotamji Maharaj v. Robb (7). But as I read the case, it does not lay down anything different from the law enunciated in Bridger v. Savage (5). All that it lays down is that a suit could not be sustained for levying a cess prohibited by law.

(8) (1885) 15 Q. B. D. 363; 54 L. J. Q. B. 464; 53 L. T. 129; 33 W. R. 891; 49 J. P. 725.

PALANIYA CHETTIAR v. CHOCKADINGAM CHETTIAR.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the judgments of the lower Courts are wrong. I must reverse them and remand the case to the Court of first instance for disposal on the other issues. Costs will abide the result. The Court-fees paid on the Second Appeal memorandum and in the appeal in the lower Appellate Court, will be refunded to the appellant.

OLDFIELD, J.—If it were necessary to consider whether section 23 of the Contract Act was applicable to the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, I should have no difficulty in holding that the plaintiff's object, which he has unlawfully accomplished, was to defeat the provisions of Order XXI, rule 16. It is not disputed that the defendant entered into the contract with full knowledge of the circumstances and of the character of the plaintiff's intention in making it. That, however, is not enough to justify the defendant in repudiating the liability for what he realised on plaintiff's behalf. His agency to execute the decrees was, it should be remembered, in itself innocent. His knowledge that the execution of the decrees on plaintiff's behalf might defeat Order XXI, rule 16 will no more make his agency guilty than did the similar knowledge of the brokers referred to in Bhola Nath v. Mul Ohand (2) that they were encouraged in wagering transactions. See also Nagendrabala Dass v. Guru Doyal Mukerji (9). Mr. Bashyam Aiyangar, for the respondent, has put the case in this way. The creation of an agency by the plaintiff was part of the machinery, by which he intended to deceive the Court and thus to secure the successful execution of his unlawful design. That, he contends, is enough to bring the agency and the contract by which it was created, within the principle of section 23 and to make the latter unenforceable. He cited, to support this, Bent v. Holgson (5), Battersby v. Smyth (6) and Sykes v. Beadon (4) besides Indian cases of less importance. It does not seem to me that these authorities go to the length which he requires. In them the relation between the parties was not merely the means employed to carry out the unlawful transaction, but it was the transaction itself. In the three English cases, the material fact was that something was done by a number of persons which, according to law, either could not be done by that number of persons without some formality being complied with, or could not be done by that number of persons at all. It was the association which was in fact the unlawful element and which made the transaction unlawful. Here there is nothing of that sort, because the contract by which the parties were associated, here one of agency, was not in itself unlawful and was not what made the whole transaction unlawful since the unlawfulness would have been the same, had plaintiff succeeded in carrying through his execution himself without ever employing the defendant at all.

For these reasons, I agree with my learned brother and concur in the order proposed by him.

ALAGAPPA CHETTY—PLAINTIFF—

versus

ALAGAPPA CHETTIAR AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hundi, invalid—Endorser, whether estopped from denying validity—Paper Currency Act (11 of 1910), s. 26.

Inasmuch as by virtue of section 26 of the Paper Currency Act, a hundi made payable to bearer on demand is invalid, the endorser of such a hundi is not estopped from denying its validity on this ground as against his endorsee.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Sivagunga, in Appeal Suit No. 74 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Sivagunga, in Original Suit No. 123 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. O. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant—The second defendant was the person who made an endorsement of an invalid document. It does not lie in his mouth to plead its invalidity. He is estopped. See Arunachalam Chettiar v. Narayanan Chettiar (1).

Mr. K. Bhashyam Aiyangar (with him Mr. Malim Sahib), for the Respondents.—The document is expressly declared invalid by Statute and there can be no estoppel against a statutory injunction. The observations in Arunachalam Chettiar v. Narayanan Chettiar (1) are obiter. To favour the theory of estoppel would be to nullify the provisions of the Paper Currency Act.

JUDGMENT.—The suit in which this second appeal has arisen was instituted by the endorsee of a hundi in order to enforce the payment of the hundi. The case is pressed only against the second defendant who is the endorser. The hundi itself is not forthcoming but the defendant in his written statement admitted that such a hundi had been issued, but that it was made payable to bearer on demand and as such it was an invalid document by virtue of section 26 of the Paper Currency Act. That section is absolutely clear and there can be no doubt that it applies to a hundi of this character. The point is settled by a ruling of this Court in Chioambaram Chettiar v. Ayyasami Thevan (2). But it was argued by Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, that the endorser is estopped from denying the validity of his instrument. The authority for the proposition is an observation of one of the learned Judges in Arunachalam Chettiar v. Narayanan Chettiar (1). That observation is purely by way of obiter and no authority is cited in support of the proposition. It is well established that there can be no estoppel against a clear injunction of a statute. If we were to accept the contention of the appellant, we should be virtually abrogating section 26 of the Paper Currency Act which prohibits altogether the issue of any document like this except in the case set out in the proviso.

Under rule 5 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code an Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to grant a stay of execution of a decree of a subordinate Court unless it has seisin of an appeal against such decree. Where no appeal has been preferred, the Court which passed the decree alone has power to grant a stay, on sufficient cause being shown, during the time provided by law for presenting an appeal. The practice of scratching out or attempting to obliterate a previous order already passed by him in his judicial capacity, is conduct which no Judge ought, under any circumstance whatever, to permit himself to adopt. If he makes up his mind to cancel an order, the proper way to do so is by writing or dictating a fresh order stating that the previous order is cancelled and giving the reasons for such cancellation [p. 132, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. P. L. Banerji (with him Mr. B. E. O'Connor), for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble T. B. Sapru, Messrs. Kamla Kant Varma and Saila Nath Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal, which arises out of two applications made to the execution Court, raises several questions. We propose to deal only, so far as the decision of the case goes, with one point of law, which in our view is fatal to the appeal. Two applications were made to the Court below on the 27th of October 1919 to set aside a sale, or, in other words, to declare that a sale which had been only held provisionally had become void in the events which had happened. There is a difficulty about the application under Order XXI, rule 90. It is clear that the reason why two applications were made was that a difficulty was felt by the applicant and it was desirable to have an alternative or second string to his bow. The application under Order XXI, rule 90, i.e., the application 112C, breaks down by reason of the fact that no irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale was alleged or proved and no attempt was made to prove any loss resulting therefrom and it is plain law and covered by authority, namely, Shirin Begam v. Agha Ali Khan (1), that it is necessary for the applicant to make that position good. The other application, which is the substantial one and which has formed the subject of argument before us, we have treated as an application under section 47 arising out of the execution of the decree, being in substance an application to declare the sale void and of no effect. For the purpose of the point of law to be decided, it is not necessary to set out the whole of the history of this matter. It is sufficient to say that the applicant, Lala Parshotam Saran, purchased the interest of the judgment-debtor in the property in question subject to a heavy liability under a mortgage-decree which had been obtained by Hargoolal, the decree holder, in 1917, and in January 1917 the decree-holder made an application for sale. After considerable delay objections were taken by the judgment-debtor or his successor and were heard and disposed of on or about the 12th of September and an application was made by Parshotam Saran ex parte to this High Court, which forms the subject of our decision. At that time there no appeal had been filed against the order dismissing the objections. Indeed, there could be none, because the High Court was closed except for vacation business and it was, therefore, necessary that application should be made to the vacation Judge. The vacation Judge was informed by affidavit that no appeal had been filed and that it was proposed to file an appeal at the earliest possible moment, namely, at the commencement of the next sittings of the Court. In view of the fact that security had been filed by the applicant, the vacation Judge entertained the application and granted a stay of the sale. The sale had been fixed for the next day and it was not possible for the order of the High Court to reach the Court below in time to stop the sale. Arrangements were made by which the Court below was informed by telegram of the order which the High Court had made that day. The Court being in a obvious difficulty made, what turns out to have been, a very sensible order. Having no order of the High Court before it, it refused to stop the sale, but made an order that if it should turn out that the sale had been properly stayed by the High Court, it would have to be cancelled. In the face of an order like that, both parties, of course, would proceed with the sale at their own risk; that is to say, the decree-holder and the purchaser might say to themselves, this is not good enough, and consent to the sale being cancelled and a fresh date fixed. On the other hand, the judgment-debtor might, if the sale took place and he had reason to complain of its results, apply to the Court to make some order confirming that which it had provisionally made, namely, that the sale should be void. On the 27th of October an application was made ex parte to the Subordinate Judge asking for such an order to be passed, namely, the sale be declared void, and the learned Judge appears to have made an order to that effect, but at the instance of the other party, also ex parte, subsequently cancelled. It is not necessary to deal with the legal effect of this particular proceeding, but it is desirable to point out to the learned Judge that whether he was functus officio or not, and could cancel the order which he had made on the 27th of October, if he made up his mind to do so, the proper way to do so would be by writing or dictating a fresh order stating that his previous order was cancelled and giving the reasons for such cancellation. The practice of scratching out or attempting to obliterate a previous order already passed by him in his judicial capacity, is conduct which no Judge ought, under any circumstance whatever, to permit himself to do. It is obviously in the highest degree inconvenient and might, under certain circumstances, be much worse than inconvenient, and we do not hesitate to direct the learned Judge to take notice of this observation and on no account to permit himself to do anything of that kind with an order of the Court again. Passing from that, the next important step was that an appeal, towards the end of October, was filed in the High Court, when the High Court was open for the purpose. The auction-purchaser was not made a party to that appeal and he was compelled to apply to the High Court to be made a party. An order to that effect was made. The hearing of the appeal was expedited and on the 19th of December 1919 the appeal was dismissed on the merits and the order of stay granted by the vacation Judge on the 19th of September was discharged. We may here, in passing, observe that the learned Judge of the Court below has taken an erroneous view of the effect of a discharge of this kind. Assuming the stay order to have been properly obtained and granted within the jurisdiction of the Court, it is good as far as it goes and as long as it lasts, until it is discharged; and a proper order duly made according to law, if it is subsequently discharged for good reasons, cannot be treated as of no effect. Great point was made by the respondents before us, and properly made, of the terms in which that appeal was dismissed. The Bench of two Judges who heard that appeal, formed the opinion that the appeal and, therefore, necessarily, the application made for a stay in connection with the appeal, was a mere attempt by Parshotam Saran to delay the sale and to obstruct the execution of the decree without good cause; and it has been urged before us that, that being so, the order obtained ex parte on the 19th of September from the vacation Judge, must be taken to have been obtained malafide and that the result of that is that the present applicant cannot set up that order in his own favour for the purpose of having the sale invalidated. We agree that if that is made out, the result contended for by the respondents would necessarily follow. An applicant to any Court for an order in his own favour ex parte, if he acts with want of bona fides, cannot subsequently set up an order so obtained in his own favour, and if we were in a position to decide that point finally to-day, it would be a complete answer to the application of Parshotam Saran. It is, however, true, as pointed out by the applicants' Counsel, that in making the application he filed security which was afterwards found sufficient. We, therefore, come to no conclusion upon this question of fact. We are left with the question whether the order staying the sale, of the 19th of September, was a good order or a bad one. If it was a good order there was no sale. If it was a bad order there was nothing to render the sale invalid. The question whether it was a good order or a bad one depends upon the question whether the vacation Judge had power to make such an order, no appeal being, at that time, before the Appellate Court. We agree that Chapter I, rule 3 of our own High Court Rules enables a vacation Judge to exercise the appellate jurisdiction vested in the Court in any matter connected with or arising out of the execution of a decree which he considers urgent, and that that would clearly authorise him to grant a stay of execution of a decree in respect of which an appeal was pending in the Appellate Court. Whether it would enable him to admit an appeal for the purpose of granting a stay is another question upon which we give no opinion and which will have to be decided when the matter arises. The vacation Judge on this occasion was not asked to admit any appeal. No appeal was preferred before him. No order was made accelerating the admission of the appeal. All that happened was an undertaking on affidavit that an appeal would be filed at the commencement of the next sittings of the High Court. In our view, the interpretation to be put upon Order XLI, rule 5, which is the material provision in the Code of Civil Procedure in this matter, is that an

Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to grant a stay of execution in a matter of which it is not already seized in appeal. The matter has been strongly argued on behalf of the appellant on the terms of clause (1) of rule 5, and if clause (1) stood alone, there would be a good deal to be said for the contention, but the provisions in clause (2) which empowers the Court which passed the decree to grant a stay on sufficient cause being shown during the time provided by law for presenting an appeal, make it quite clear that that Court and that Court alone has jurisdiction during the period before the appeal was presented, and we think that this is the proper interpretation of rule 5 as a whole. We are confirmed in this view by such authority as appears to exist upon the subject. In an unnamed ruling reported as Weekly Reporter, Miscellaneous Rulings, Volume VI, page 15 [Bhugwan Ohunder Ghose, In re (2)], a Court of two Judges held that the High Court could not under a provision of the law corresponding to the present Order XLI, rule 6, direct a lower Court to take security in execution of a decree when no appeal had been preferred to the Appellate Court against such decree. In 1904 a two Judge Bench in Calcutta, reported in the case of Bhagwat Raikoor v. Sheo Golam Sahu (3), took the view that it is the Court which has seisin of the appeal which is competent to stay the carrying out of the order appealed against pending the hearing of the appeal, and that it was not competent to an Appellate Court to stay proceedings in the execution of a decree of a Subordinate Court merely because an appeal had been preferred against an order of the lower Court refusing to set aside the decree. In that case there was no appeal pending to the Appellate Court against the decree itself. By implication a strong Bench of five Judges in Calcutta took the same view in the case of Balvishen Sahu v. Khugnu (4). That Court held that the Court which has seisin of the appeal can make an order staying proceedings pending the hearing. It is plain from the referring order which caused that Bench to be constituted that they took the view that such an order could not be made unless the Court had seisin of the appeal. We, therefore, come to the conclusion that the order in this case which Parshotam Saran obtained in his own favour, was made without jurisdiction and could have no legal effect in nullifying the sale which took place on the 20th of September. It is, perhaps, superfluous to point out that ex parte orders are always obtained at the risk of the party applying for them. By reason of the fact that it is impossible for the Court dealing with such applications to take a complete view of the whole matter, that there is nobody on the other side to point out difficulties or objections, and that the tribunal is bound more or less to follow the lead of the person making the application it necessarily follows that it is impossible for the applicant, if he makes a mistake, either of omission or commission, so that it afterwards turns out that the order which he has obtained, is an imperfect one, to correct such mistake and have it put right in the same way in which orders may be amended or corrected when they have been passed in the presence of the parties and the mistake is a common one to both sides. On this ground alone the appeal fails and the application was rightly dismissed, though, as appears by what we have said, not upon the grounds upon which the learned Judge dealt with the matter in his judgment. Both the respondents, the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser, must have their costs of this appeal on the higher scale.

Where in execution of a decree attached property is made over to a person for safe custody and production in Court on his executing a bond with sureties, it is not open to the decree-holder, on failure of the production of the property, to enforce the bond against the sureties; his remedy is to get the bond assigned by the Judge to himself and sue upon it. [p. 135, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Temporary District Munsif, Gudur, at Nellore, dated the 7th May 1919, in Execution Petition No. 506 of 1919, in Small Cause Suit No. 218 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, and K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.—The appellant's proper remedy was to enforce the bond in execution against the sureties. Both clauses (b) and (c) of section 145, Civil Procedure Code, apply. Here the sureties have made themselves liable to produce the cattle and the clause prescribes the remedy by means of execution. As the sureties have failed to fulfil the conditions imposed on them, clause (c) of the section applies.

The respondents were not represented.

JUDGMENT.—Certain cattle were attached in execution of a decree in favour of the appellant and the swin, in accordance with the Civil Rules of Practice under the rule of the High Court and Order XXI, rule 43, Civil Procedure Code, made over the cattle to a villager for safe custody and production in Court for which he executed a bond with two sureties. The appellant applied in execution to enforce the bond against the respondent sureties on their failure to have the cattle produced in accordance with the bond. The question is whether the bond could be enforced in this way under section 145.

It is argued that clause (b) of section 145 applies. It says: "Where any person has become liable as surety for the restitution of any property taken in execution of a decree," then the decree may be executed against him to the same extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable in the manner provided in the Code for the execution of decrees. This clause is prima facie intended for cases in which restitution is sought against the person who has taken the property in execution of the decree and restitution is to be made by such a person. Here it would be stretching the language of the Code too far to say that the sureties took the property in execution of the decree. We agree, therefore, with the interpretation put on this clause by Mr Justice Sadasiva Aiyar in Konimreddi Subbaredli v. Kollipara Veerayya Tata (1).

It is also argued that clause (c) applies. That says: that the surety-bond can be executed against the person who has made himself liable for the payment of any money, or for the fulfilment of any condition imposed on any person, under an order of the Court in any suit or in any proceeding consequent thereon. Here there was no order of the Court under which any money was to be paid by any person or which required him to fulfil any condition imposed on him. Order XXI, rule 43 empowers the Amin of the Court entrusted with the warrant of attachment to make over cattle or moveable property of a like nature to the custody of a villager on his executing a bond. The act, therefore, is that of the Amin done under the authority conferred on him by law. The Court could not be said to have passed any order in this case under which the bond was taken. The Court had not the terms of the bond before it, the Court knew nothing about it, until the Amin's return was made. We must, therefore, hold that clause (c) also does not apply. The only remedy open to the appellant (decree holder) is to get the bond assigned by the Judge to himself and to sue upon it as pointed out in the case above mentioned. The petition is dismissed. No costs.

Where a widow surrenders her interest in her husband's estate in favour of a co-widow, such surrender has not the effect of accelerating the succession of the male reversioners of the deceased. [p. 137, col. 1.]

Article 14 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies to a case where a reversioner is entitled to property on the deaths of more female heirs than one inheriting jointly, and limitation in such a case begins to run from the date of the death of the last surviving female heir. [p. 138, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 799 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Madanapalli, in Original Suit No. 366 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. P. Somasundram and B. Somaya, for the Appellant.—The suit is not barred. The lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that there was any acceleration of succession of the reversioners. Any agreement between the co-widows by which one surrendered her rights to the other will not have that effect as the reversioner was no party to the agreement. The cause of action for the reversioner's claim arose on the death of the junior widow, the releasor. On the death of the senior widow who had a kind of stridhanam estate in her husband's property the junior widow became her heir. Her interest lasted only till her death in 1914 and it was only then that the reversioner's right of inheritance opened. See Second Appeal No 356 of 1914 (unreported).

Mr L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Respondent.—The surrender by the junior widow accelerated the reversioner's rights. In Bidnamma v Venkataramappa (1) it was held that one widow might absolutely surrender her right and interest to the co-widow so as to let in the husband's heirs immediately after that other's death.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant in this second appeal. He is the purchaser from the reversioner to the estate of one Gurappa. Gurappa died in 1883 leaving two widows as his heirs. The younger widow, on receipt of Rs. 30, gave up all her rights (about six months after her husband's death) in favour of the elder widow under the deed, Exhibit B. I agree with the lower Appellate Court on the construction of Exhibit B that she thereby gave up her whole life-interest in her husband's estate, whether the interest might have extended beyond the lifetime of the elder widow or whether it would have come to an end during the lifetime of the elder widow. The elder widow died in 1902 and the younger widow in 1914, and the present suit was brought by the purchaser from the male reversioner in 1916. The learned District Judge dismissed the suit on the preliminary ground of limitation. His argument was that by the junior widow giving up her right of survivorship (if she happened to survive the senior widow) the senior widow not only represented the whole widow's estate during her own lifetime but that, on her death, the fact that the junior widow was still living was no obstacle to present reversioners from coming in, the junior widow's relinquishment having accelerated the succession of the male reversioner and such acceleration took place in 1902 and the suit was brought in 1916 the plaintiff was barred under Article 144 of the Limitation Act.

It was argued before us, in the first place, by the appellant's learned Vakil that the senior widow, on her death, owned a sort of stridhanam estate in her husband's property which was inherited by her own heirs that the junior widow was the heir to that stridhanam estate (which, however lasted only till the junior widow died in 1914), and that the reversioner became entitled to inherit the whole of the husband's estate only afterwards and reliance was placed on the decision in Second Appeal No. 356 of 1918 Pappammal v. Venkataswami Naicker (unreported). As the question of the right of a widow who had parted with her rights to her co widow to inherit the rights again on the death of the co-widow is said to be under consideration before another Bench of this Court, and as I feel doubts as to an estate surrendered by a widow to a co widow constituting in some sense or to any extent the property of the surrenderee held by her in a different capacity from that of the widow of her husband, I shall not deal with this question further in this case, it not being necessary for the purpose of deciding this second appeal to express a final opinion on that question.

The next point is, whether there was this acceleration of the right of the male reversioner on the death of the elder widow. Acceleration by surrender to the next male reversioner (which, I take it, means a surrender known to and accepted by him) is, no doubt, known to the law. Acceleration caused by the Statute law declaring that a widow contracting a second marriage shall be deemed to have died can also be understood, but acceleration of the right of a male reversioner by transactions between two or more joint female heirs cannot, in my opinion, be continued by them without the knowledge or consent of the reversioner. Article 141 of the Limitation Act, though it uses the word "female" in the singular, clearly covers a case where the Hindu reversioner is entitled to the property on the deaths of more than one female heir inheriting jointly. And when the last column speaks of "when the female dies" it clearly means in such a case "after the death of all the female co-heirs." That a male reversioner's right should be accelerated by agreements to which he is not a party is to me a very startling proposition, and even though there may be more startling propositions and anomalous rules in the modern Hindu Law, I do not see why I should extend such anomalies unless I am bound by clear authorities and precedents to do so. Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar relied upon a passage in Ridnamma v. Venkataramappu (1). That was a case in which the appellant alone was heard, the respondent being absent. The appellants' Counsel had evidently argued that there might be an agreement between co-widows so as to let in the next heirs of the husband immediately upon the death of the widow who died first. The learned Judge of the Bench remarked upon this argument: "We are not prepared to say that they might not enter into such an agreement as would bind each to an absolute surrender of all interest in the other's share so as to let in the next heirs of the husband immediately upon the death of that other. But there is no such agreement in this case." Thus the learned Judges finally stated that the argument had no relevancy to the facts of that case, though they began by saying that they were not prepared to say that there might not be something in the argument. This is a very weak foundation for the contention that an agreement by which the succession of the reversioner can be accelerated might be made behind his back. Further, the acceleration can effect, if at all, only the half share, which belonged to the elder widow who died first (and the right to enjoy which half share by survivorship was abandoned by the younger widow) and could not apply to the share of the younger widow who conveyed her rights to the widow who died first because that share was not surrendered to any reversioner and surrender which accelerates is surrender to the succeeding reversioner and not a surrender to a co-widow.

In the result, I would set aside the judgment of the District Judge who proceeded upon the sole ground of limitation and would remand the appeal to him for disposal, on the other questions arising in the case.

The memorandum of objections filed in that Court will also be considered along with the appeal. The Court fee paid on the memorandum of the second appeal will be refunded to the appellant. The respondent should pay the appellant the other costs of this second appeal.

NAPIER, J.—I entirely agree.

Under the Hindu Law property acquired by a reversioner by inheritance from a collateral is not joint family property, and in respect of such property the inheritor possesses an absolute power of disposal, and his sons and grandsons do not acquire any right in that property by birth so as to enable them to impeach a transfer thereof. [p. 138, col. 2.]

A mortgage by a Hindu father cannot validly affect the joint family estate unless it is made for family necessity or for the family benefit, or to pay an antecedent debt, either binding per se on the family by reason of its having been taken for family purposes, or binding in consequence of the pious obligation on the sons, where it exists, to pay the same if not tainted with immorality. [p. 139, col. 2; p. 140, col. 1.]

Although, during the lifetime of a father there is no pious obligation on his son to pay his debts, there is nevertheless a contingent obligation on him to pay which he cannot repudiate unless he shows that the debt was taken for immoral purposes: so that if the joint family property has passed out of the family to pay off such an antecedent debt either under a conveyance executed by the father or under a sale held in execution of a decree for the father's debt, the son cannot recover back the property unless he can show that the obligation arising out of the antecedent debt was of a character which he was not in any contingency liable to discharge. Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated 12th April 1919.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Babus Lisheshwar Nath Srivastava and Eishambhar Nath Srivastava for Respondents, Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, and, 8.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the sons and grandsons of Sarsuti Singh to set aside a sale of certain property, effected by Sarsuti Singh in favour of Ram Sarup and Musimmat Hansa on the 18th April 1907. The property sold comprised a 2 annas 8 pies share in the village Tikra. The consideration specified in the sale deed was Rs. 11,952 9-0, out of which Rs. 971-5 6 were paid before the Sub-Registrar and the balance was credited towards certain prior debts stated to have been due to Ram Prasad, the father of Ram Sarup and the husband of Musimmat Hansa.

It is not disputed that the plaintiffs lived jointly with Sarsuti Singh. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that the property sold by Sarsuti Singh was the ancestral property of the family, that Sarsuti Singh was addicted to smoking ganja and charas and immoral habits and that he had sold the disputed property for a fictitious consideration of Rs. 11,952-90 without any family necessity to satisfy his own unlawful needs. The defence was that a 1 anna 4-pies share in the village Tikra had been inherited by Saranti Singh from his uncle, Daljit Singh, on the death of his widow, Musammam Ram Kuar, that Saranti Singh had a right to sell the same, and that the sale of the remaining property was also valid because it was effected to pay antecedent debts due by Saranti Singh which had been incurred for the benefit of the family and to meet the expenses of the marriage of Jang Bahadur Singh, one of the plaintiffs. The Court below dismissed the claim.

The first question for consideration is whether a 1-anna 4-pies share of the village Tikra is the joint family property of the plaintiffs and Saranti Singh. It appears that Daljit Singh, the uncle of Saranti Singh, was the owner of a 4-annas share in the village Tikra. He died leaving a widow, Musammam Ram Kuar. On the 16th June 1888 Musammam Ram Kuar sold that 4 annas share to Suphal Singh for Rs. 5,000. Saranti Singh and Bisban Singh, two of the reversionary heirs of Daljit Singh, filed a suit for a declaration that the sale was void as against them and did not bind their reversionary interest (Exhibit 16). The suit was decreed on the 28th October 1889 (Exhibit 17). On the 2nd August 1890 Saranti Singh and Bisban Singh sold the decree for costs awarded to them in the above suit to Tajuddin Ahmad, father of Sajjad Husain, (Exhibit 27). In lieu of the costs so due Suphal Singh sold the life-interest of Musammam Ram Kuar, which was still in his possession, to Sajjad Husain (Exhibit 25) and the latter in turn sold his rights to Saranti Singh and Bisban Singh (Exhibit 28).

On the death of Musammam Ram Kuar her life interest ceased and the reversionary interest became absolute. Saranti Singh thus became the owner of a 1-anna 4-pies share in the village Tikra by inheritance from Daljit Singh. He held another 1-anna 4-pies share in the same village by ancestral right.

The plaintiffs contend that the expenses incurred by Saranti Singh and Bisban Singh in the suit brought by them to impeach the sale effected by Musammam Ram Kuar were paid from joint family funds, that the 1-anna 4-pies share obtained by Saranti Singh on the death of Musammam Ram Kuar must, therefore, be regarded as joint family property and that Saranti Singh had in his lifetime treated it as such. The plaintiffs' own witness, Bisban Singh, however, admits that Sajjad Husain, Pleader, paid the Court-fee stamp and all other expenses connected with that suit from his own pocket and reimbursed himself after that suit was decreed by getting the decree for costs awarded to Saranti Singh and Bisban Singh sold to his father, Tajuddin. There is no reliable evidence to show that any portion of the expenses of that litigation had been met from the income of the joint family property. There is similarly no reliable evidence to prove that Saranti Singh treated the 1-anna 4-pies share inherited by him from Daljit Singh on the death of his widow, Musammam Ram Kuar, as part of the joint family estate. It is suggested by some of the witnesses produced by the plaintiffs that the accounts of the income derived from the ancestral property and of that derived from the said 1-anna 4-pies share used to be kept together, but no account-books have been produced and Saranti Singh has not been examined to account for their non-production. In the sale-deed executed by Saranti Singh in favour of Ram Sarup and Musammam Hasea the 1-anna 4-pies in question was described by the vendor as the share which he had inherited from Daljit Singh as distinguished from the share which was his ancestral property. The Court below was, therefore, justified in refusing to treat the said 1-anna 4-pies share as joint family property. In regard to that share Saranti Singh possessed an absolute power of disposal; and, as observed in Hardwar v. Ram Milan (1), the sons and grandsons of Saranti Singh could not have acquired any rights therein by birth so as to enable them to impeach the transfer.

The next question is, whether the sale of the remaining 1-anna 4-pies share, which was the ancestral property of the family, was effected for family necessity or for illegal and immoral purposes. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants concedes that he is unable to sustain the contention that the sale was effected for illegal or immoral purposes, or that the debts for the payment of which the sale was made had been so contracted. In Sahu Ram Ohandra v. Bhup Singh (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council discussed the general principles governing the transfer of property under the Mitakshara Law and the exceptions attached thereto. The first principle, they observed, was that as members of a joint family, a father and his sons and grandsons were co-parceners in the ownership of the family property and that such property could not be the subject of a gift, sale, or mortgage by one co-parcener except with the consent, express or implied, of all the other co-parceners. The other principle was that in his capacity as head and manager of the family the father had certain powers with reference to the joint family property to effect or dispose of it for purposes denominated necessary purposes, for the reason that where an estate or family necessity existed, the necessity existed on the co-parceners as a whole, and it was proper to imply a consent of all of them to that act of the one which such necessity demanded. To these two general principles an exception, they pointed out, had been made to cover the case of a mortgage or sale by the father in consideration of an antecedent debt, that exception being largely necessitated by the need of protecting the rights of third persons, say, the purchasers of the property who had taken their title for onerous consideration and in good faith. They proceed to explain how that exception affected the question of onus and said that where the mortgagee himself, with whom the transaction took place, was setting up a charge in his favour made by one whose title to alienate he necessarily knew to be limited and qualified, he might, to quote the language of Knight Bruce, L. J., in Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooes Munraj Koonweroo (3), "be expected to allege and prove facts presumably better known to him than to the infant heir, namely, those facts which embodied the representations made to him of the alleged needs of the estate and the motives influencing his immediate loan;" but where a joint family property had been sold out and out, or where a decree in execution of the mortgage had been obtained against the property and in enforcement thereof rights had sprung up with regard to the joint family estate, those rights could not be defeated by the members of the joint family simply questioning the transaction entered into by its head. They referred to the decision of Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (4) where Sir James Colvile, adverting to the case of Girdhar Lal v. Kantoo Lal (5) observed: "That case is undoubtedly an authority for these propositions:—First, that where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family, either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted; and, secondly, that the purchasers at an execution sale, being strangers to the suit, if they have not notice that the debts were so contracted, are not bound to make enquiry beyond what appears on the face of the proceedings." The presumption of law, according to them, in such cases was prima facie to support the charge, and the onus of disproving it rested on the sons.

No such presumption arises where the mortgagee of a Hindu father seeks to enforce his mortgage against his sons. Such a mortgage cannot validly affect the joint family estate unless it is made for family necessity, or for the family benefit, or to pay an antecedent debt, either binding per se on the family by reason of its having been taken for family purposes or binding in consequence of the pious obligation on the sons, where it exists, to pay the same, if not tainted with immorality. In order to exclude cases amounting to a plain and, what might be, a deliberate breach of trust, as, for instance, where a father makes a mortgage in one month without family necessity and makes a fresh mortgage in another month to re-pay the same, their Lordships examined the limits of the principle of the exception and observed that the obligation relied on must not only have been antecedently incurred but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. In saying so, they could hardly have meant that if such antecedent debt had been incurred on the security of the family property, it was to be wiped out altogether and treated as non-existent, for, apart from any question of family necessity underlying such debt, they themselves, in an earlier part of their judgment, had pointed out that the responsibility to meet the father's debts was one thing and the validity of a mortgage over the joint estate was quite another thing (page 131*). In a later part of the same judgment they said: "The importance of the case being free from complications is this, that except under the mortgage all other remedies have long ago disappeared; and the appellants rear it up and claim under it now, there being no right in them to invoke the doctrine of the pious obligation to discharge the debt incurred by Bhup Singh, because that debt as such cannot be successfully sued for. Accordingly, unless the mortgage validly affects the joint family estate, the appellants must fail (page 135*)". It is obvious that where there is no family necessity, a mortgage as a mortgage might fail; but if it was made in lieu of an antecedent debt, that antecedent debt, though not shown to be enforceable as a mortgage, might still be evidence of a pious obligation, contingent or otherwise, on the son of the mortgagor to pay that debt unless it is shown to have been tainted with immorality. The decisions in Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (6), Gur Sahai v. Girdhar

*Pages of 44 I. A.—[Ed.]

Lal (7) and the remarks of Sir Basil Scott in Hanmant Kashinath Joshi v. Ganesh Annari Pujari (8) are pertinent to that view.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants contends that where the father is alive the antecedency of the debt is of little value, because there is no pious obligation on his son to pay his debt in his lifetime. But there is a contingent pious obligation on him to pay all the same, which he cannot repudiate unless he shows that the debt was taken for immoral purposes: so that, if the property has passed out of the family to pay off such an antecedent debt either under a conveyance executed by the father or under a sale held in execution of a decree for the father's debt, the son cannot recover back the property unless he can show that the obligation arising out of the antecedent debt was of a character which he was not in any contingency liable to discharge.

The mortgage-deed in the present case, for the satisfaction of which the sale was made, contained a double obligation, namely, an obligation resting on the mortgaged property and an obligation resting on the person and other property of the mortgagor. The antecedent debts proved amount to over half the consideration secured by the sale. The sale of that portion of the property which was ancestral was, therefore, justified.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 16 OF 1920.

Present :—Justice Sir William Ayling, Kt., and Mr. Justice Odgers.

BANDARU MARAYYA—DEFENDANT

versus

BANDARU RAMALAKSHMI—PLAINTIFF

—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Orphan given by elder brother—Factum valet, doctrine of, applicability of.

The doctrine of factum valet is inapplicable to the case of an adoption of an orphan son when given by an elder brother, as such an adoption is invalid under the Hindu Law. [p. 142, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Kistna, at Ellore, in Appeal Suit No. 424 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Narasapur, in Original Suit No. 33 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. V. Ramadoss for the Appellant,—Though the adoption of an orphan is not, strictly speaking, valid, it must be upheld in this case on the principle of factum valet. In an exactly similar case, Bhagabat Pershad v. Murari Lal (1) the Calcutta High Court applied the doctrine of factum valet to the adoption of an orphan. See also Ohinna Goundan v. Kumara Goundan (2) where the adoption of an only son was upheld on the ground of factum valet. To hold otherwise would result in great hardship to the adoptee whose status was long recognised by the family.

Members. P. Narayanamurthy and Satyanarayana, for the Respondents.—The adoption of an orphan is illegal even when the adopted boy was given by his elder brother Subbaluvammal v. Ammakutti Ammal (3), Vaithilinga Mudali v. Munigan (4). In Bhagabat Pershad v. Murari Lal (1) the adoption was 48 years before the suit and their Lordships were influenced by that circumstance in applying the factum valet doctrine. In the present case the adoption took place only six years before the suit. In Vaithilinga Mudali v. Munigan (4) the Judges refused to apply the doctrine even though the adoption was recognised by the family for upwards of 30 years. The doctrine must be applied where there is no want of authority to give or accept or positive interdiction of adoption. See Laksmappa v. Ramava (5). See also Bashetiappa v. Shivlingappa (6) and Wooma Daes v. Gokoolanund Daes (7).

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for decision in this appeal is whether it is proper to apply the doctrine "factum valet" to the adoption of an orphan. The facts are admitted. Appellant Marayya was in fact adopted by Narasimhayya, respondent's husband in 1910. Marayya was at the time an orphan and was given in adoption by his elder brother. It is conceded on his behalf that the adoption was, strictly speaking, illegal [vide Vaithilinga Mudali v. Munigan (4)]. Can it be nevertheless upheld on the maxim "factum valet quod non fieri debet?"

In our opinion it cannot be so upheld. The doctrine is one which must always be applied with great caution and we do not think we should be justified in applying it here. A case is reported as Subbaluvammal v. Ammakutti Ammal (3) in which the learned Judges rejected the argument that the maxim of "factum valet" could be applied to the adoption of an orphan, and set aside the decision of the Sadar Amin based on that doctrine. They also rejected the contention that an orphan could be validly given in adoption by his elder brother. This is one of the cases quoted by the learned Judges in Vaithilinga Mudali v. Munigan (4) in support of their decision, and we observe that in the latter case no attempt was made to apply the doctrine of "factum valet" although the fact that the adoption was made more than 30 years before suit and had been treated as valid by the family was brought prominently to the notice of the Judges and is referred to in their judgment.

KALLU MISIR v. BHAGWATI SINGH.

Bhagabat Pershad v. Murari Lal (1) is no doubt an exactly similar case to the present, in which the doctrine of "factum valet" was applied to an adoption of an orphan given by his brother. The learned Judges say they apply it "not without considerable hesitation" and lay stress on the lapse of 48 years after the adoption and on the grave injustice which would be done to the adopted son by destroying his civil status after it had been so long accepted. These considerations have no application to the case before us, where the adoption took place only six years before suit. Ohinna Goundan v. Kumara Goundan (2) is quoted as a case in which the doctrine was applied to the case of adoption of an only son, and, indeed, it does seem to have largely induced the decision of the learned Judges, that the adoption of an only son, once made, was valid in law. But their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshamma (8), while endorsing the correctness of the decision in that case, certainly do not put in on the ground of "factum valet." On the contrary, they are at pains to point out at page 423 the inapplicability of such a doctrine and the conclusion they arrive at is, that the adoption is not contrary to Hindu Law.

The true limits of applicability of the doctrine of "factum valet" as regards adoption are laid down by Westropp, C. J., in Laksmappa v. Ramava (5) thus: "To us it appears that its application must be limited to cases in which there is neither want of authority to give, or to accept nor imperative interdiction of adoption." The views of Westropp, C. J., in this connection are expressly endorsed by the Privy Council in the last quoted case (page 423). See also Mahmood, J., in Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj Singh (9). The capacity to give, the capacity to take and the capacity to be the subject of adoption seem to me to be matters essential to the validity of the transaction, and, as such, beyond the province of the doctrine of "factum valet."

As an instance of the proper application of the doctrine, we may refer to Worma Dass v. Gokoolanund Dass (7). There the maxim of "factum valet" is relied on as supporting the view of their Lordships that the adoption which they were considering was legal and valid. But the only objection to the adoption there was that the rule of preference of a brother's son had been disregarded and it was held that this view was not so imperative as to have the force of law. If that case be compared with the case before us in the light of the tests suggested by Westropp, C. J., and Mahmood, J., it will be seen how inapplicable the doctrine is to the case we have to deal with.

The only other case to which we shall refer is Bashetiappa v. Shivalingappa (6). The learned Judges in that case (Westropp, C. J. and Nanabbai Haridas, J.) held that the adoption of an orphan, even when given by an elder brother with the authority of parents given before their death, was invalid and they add the pithy remark that, to allow such an adoption, would leave it in the power of an elder brother to thin the ranks of his fellow parsons by bestowing his younger brothers in adoption in a manner highly detrimental to the interests of the latter.

We must hold that the adoption of an orphan is not only contrary to Hindu Law but that the doctrine of "factum valet" cannot be invoked to support it.

The second appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 3rd of November 1919, in the case of ejectment

JUDGMENT.

PORTER, J. M. (April 13, 1920).—This is a suit to contest ejectment from one plot, new number 1978/2, area 9 biswas, a portion of old number 1052.

The appellant claimed to hold this plot by a tenure known technically as biswai, peculiar chiefly to the Fyzabad and Sultanpur Districts, and described by Sykes as an under-proprietary tenure arising out of a special class of mortgage by the proprietor to the cultivator of the latter's holding for a sum of money paid down. Generally, a low rent was reserved, the difference between the interest due on the money and the full rent.

The lower Courts have dismissed the suit. They have been mainly influenced by the fact that the plaintiff-appellant has failed to establish that the defendants in certain suits in 1884 and 1886, in which the same right in another portion of the same number was asserted and established by appellant's uncle, were the respondent's ancestors or predecessors-in-interest. They have consequently rightly held that those judgments cannot operate as res judicata in the present suit. The Commissioner has also found that the appellant has failed to prove that the original mortgagee was his own ancestor, or that the original mortgagor was the respondent's ancestor. This is admitted.

What they have failed duly to weigh is, I think, that the judgments and plaints in the suits are in themselves very weighty evidence as showing that the claim was asserted and proved by the appellant's predecessor in respect to a portion of the same land and against respondents' co-sharers.

They have also failed to bear in mind that it is not necessary for the appellant to prove his claim to the hilt. It is sufficient for a Revenue Court if he gives prima facie proof of under-proprietary right. The Court will then cancel the notice of ejectment and refer the landholder to the Civil Court.

The facts are these:—The mortgage-deed is dated Asarh Sudhi 5, Sammat 1868, over one hundred years ago. It was executed by Zalim Singh in favour of Mansa Misra. It was a mortgage of 7 bighas 15 biswas land. One of the fields, area 2 bighas kham, about 18 biswas jaribi was named Chowka Ramwala.

The first Settlement khassra shows that No. 1052, area 18 biswas, was jaribi and was held by Suchit Misra, who was whole brother to the appellant's father. The field bears the same name, Chowka Ramwala, to the east of the village.

At the last Settlement the same field, now No. 1978, same area was held by the same man.

At first Settlement the plot is shown as jointly owned by all the co-sharers. It seems to have been partitioned among them. In 1884 one Mahabir issued notice of ejectment against Suchit for 5 plots, including a part of 1052, 5 biswas. Suchit in his plaint asserted the claim that he held this plot on this mortgage tenure (rahandari) and he produced in support of his claim the mortgage deed which the appellant relies on. He succeeded, and the notice was cancelled.

In 1886 another notice of ejectment was issued by Mahabir (apparently another person—there are three in the village), this time for 3 biswas 15 out of 1052. Suchit brought the same claim in his suit to contest and again succeeded.

It is admitted that the appellant has failed to establish that these Mahabirs are the same persons, or that they are either of them respondents' ancestors.

There is, however, the fact that this field, which bears the same name and is of the same area as that in the original mortgage-deed, has been held since the time of Suchit by the appellant and his co-sharers. The mortgage-deed, over 100 years old, was produced 36 years ago from their custody. The appellant's predecessor successfully asserted his claim to another portion of the same field against two co-sharers of the respondent. To my mind there is a strong prima facie presumption that the appellant holds the plot on under-proprietary tenure. I would hold that the Courts below have erred in law in failing to give due weight to the importance of the judgments in the previous cases as evidence of the previous assertion of this claim apart from the fact whether they can operate as res judicata in this suit (section 13, Evidence Act). I would also hold that they have erred in law in not cancelling the notice of ejectment on the appellant producing sufficient prima facie evidence that he holds on an under-proprietary tenure.

I would accept the appeal, and cancel the notice of ejectment. The respondent should pay costs throughout.

HOPKINS, S. M.—I agree.

Where in a suit for partition of immovable and moveable property a preliminary decree is passed in respect of the immovable property and the plaintiff withdraws his claim with regard to the moveables, such withdrawal has not the effect of bringing the suit to an end, and the Court has power to transpose parties under Order I, rule 10 of the Civil Procedure Code and to continue the suit.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated the 20th October 1919 of the Court of Temporary Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, in I. A. S. Nos. 185 and 232 of 1919, in Original Suit No. 11 of 1918.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and B. Jagannada Doss, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. V. Ramesam, K. Satyanarayana Murthi and T. Ramachandra Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The order of the Subordinate Judge is sought to be impugned on the ground that a preliminary decree having been passed by consent in respect of the immoveables and the plaintiff having withdrawn his claim with regard to the moveables, there were no proceedings during a stage of which the Judge could transpose the parties as required by Order I, rule 10. In my opinion, this contention cannot be upheld. The order of the Subordinate Judge says (paragraph 4): "before the matter regarding partition of immoveables was finally disposed of," the plaintiff put in his petition for leave to withdraw his claim to the moveables. The suit was clearly still going on and that was not one suit for partition of immoveables and another for that of moveables and it cannot be said that, by the withdrawal by the plaintiff of his claim for moveables, the suit came to an end. It seems to me that the very basis of allowing plaintiff to withdraw was to allow the eighth to tenth defendants to become plaintiffs in his stead, and so to allow the shares of the defendants already ascertained with regard to the immoveables to be proceeded with, with regard to the moveables. The case in Edulji Muncherji Wacha v. Vullebhoy Khanbhoy (1) seems to support this view; also those in Shivmurteppa v. Virappa (2) and Tommenidi Adeyya v. Ohelukuri Venkatarayudu (3).

The order of the Subordinate Judge was right and the civil revision petition must be dismissed with costs (two sets).

A suit for rent was instituted on the Small Cause Court Side of a Munsif's Court. The defendant applied for and obtained an order under section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act for presentation of the plaint to a Court having jurisdiction to try the question of title. The plaint was then re-presented to the Munsif's Court on the Original Side, when the parties agreed that there was no question of title and wished the suit disposed of as a Small Cause Court suit. On revision the defendant objected that the Court had no jurisdiction as a Small Cause Court to try the suit as the order under section 23 had not been set aside:

Held, that the objection could not be taken for the first time in revision.

Petitions, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif, Karur, in Small Cause Suit Nos. 1396, etc., of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasa Gopalachariar, for the Petitioner.—The case having been removed to the file of the original suits, it was not competent to the District Munsif to try it again on the Small Cause Side. The want of jurisdiction cannot be cured by the consent of parties. The parties are not competent to give jurisdiction where it is inherently wanting.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar and M. S. Vaidyanatha Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The doctrine that consent cannot give jurisdiction is not of universal application. See Ledgard v. Bull (1) and Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (2). Here, the suits were sent to the Original Side simply for sake of convenience as it was then understood that a question of title was involved. As it was found that there was in fact no such question parties agreed for their trial as Small Cause suits. The objection as to want of jurisdiction should not be allowed to be raised for the first time in revision.

JUDGMENT.—These revision petitions are against the decrees of the Small Cause Court of Karur in a number of suits brought to recover various sums as rent. They were tried together by consent of parties and the judgment in 1396 of 1917 deals with all the cases. Various objections were raised before us, the only one of real substance being that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to try the suits. They were all originally filed in the Small Cause Court. The defendant applied for and got an order under section 23 of the Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) returning the plaints to be presented to the proper Court having jurisdiction to try the question of title. They were so presented to the Munsif and when taken up for hearing, the parties agreed that there was no question of title that need be tried and wished the suits to be disposed of by the Small Cause Court. This was done, and they were tried and disposed of, on the merits. It is now objected that there was no jurisdiction in the Small Cause Court to try the suits, as the order under section 23 had not been set aside. We think, however, that this is not an objection which we should allow the defendants to take in a revision petition for the first time. We think that the facts of these cases do not bring them within the doctrine that consent cannot give jurisdiction, where there is an absence of inherent jurisdiction in the Court trying the case. [Vile Ledgard v. Bull (1) and Minakshi v. Subramanya Sastri (2) where the distinctions are explained by the Privy Council.] We, therefore, overrule these objections. A question of limitation was raised as to some of the suits. It is not clear on the record that they are beyond time: for it is not shown that there was any delay between the return of the plaints by the original Court and their being re-presented in the Small Cause Court. On the merits, it is urged that there is no valid contract to pay the increased rent of Rs. 1-4-0 per acre. The agreement has been found by the Munsif and no point was raised before him, that consideration was wanting. We cannot allow it to be raised here. There was also evidence on which the Munsif could find that the agreement was not for a limited period only and the reason for the addition of two annas, viz, the revenue increase, certainly supports the Munsif's view. This objection also fails.

The further objection has been raised in eleven suits in which grain rents have been decreed. Whether rent was payable in kind or money was a question of fact, carefully considered by the Munsif; and we see no reason why we should interfere with his decision on this point. In the result, all the petitions are dismissed with costs. Vakil's fee in each case will be Rs. 7-8-0.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (3)—Authority to adopt contained in Will of minor—Registration, whether necessary.

An authority to adopt conferred by a Will does not require registration to render it valid, although the executant was a minor and the bequests may not be valid.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, Ganjam, at Berhampore, in Original Suit No. 2 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. Satyanarayana, for the Appellants.—Though the Will was registered there was no valid registration of the power to adopt, as the Will was not presented for registration by either the donor or the donee.

The instrument cannot be said to be a Will as it was executed by a minor who has no legal capacity to make a Will. There are lots of dispositions in it which are all invalid.

Mr. H. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents.—We are not here concerned with the dispositions of property contained in the Will. They may or may not be given effect to. The question of the requirement as to registration does not depend on the validity of the dispositions. In Arumugam Pillai v. Arunachallam Pillai (1) it was held that a Registrar cannot refuse to register a Will on the ground that the executant is a minor.

The document in question is a 'Will' within the meaning of section 3 (57) of the General Clauses Act.

JUDGMENT.—We are not prepared to differ from the finding of the learned District Judge that the Will is genuine. As he says, the evidence of execution is not very strong, but that is largely attributable to the fact that the parties who now contest the Will accepted and acted upon it for many years, so that when it was challenged many of the witnesses were dead. The fact that the Will, though made by a minor, contained dispositions of property as well as the authority to adopt does not appear to us to afford any indication that it was not genuine. The deceased was 19 and the fact that his minority had been prolonged to 21 owing to the appointment of a guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act may have been overlooked. The invalidity of the bequests appears to have been discovered after his death and no attempt was made to give effect to them. This negatives the suggestion that they were inserted in a forged Will with some corrupt intention.

The widow herself when she was 23 adopted a boy under the authority given in the Will, and her mother-in-law, who now gives evidence for the plaintiffs, obtained a maintenance-deed from the father of the adopted boy recognizing the adoption. The present case appears to have arisen from the fact that, sometime after the adoption, there was a quarrel between these ladies and the father of the adopted boy. The power to adopt has been questioned as not validly conferred. Section 17 (3) of the Indian Registration Act requires authorities to adopt, not conferred by a Will, to be registered. The Will in question was registered as a Will, but it is said that this was not a valid registration of the power to adopt, because the Will was not presented for registration by the donor or by the donee, his widow, or by the adoptive son, as required by section 40 (2) of the Act. The answer is that an authority conferred by a Will does not require registration. It has, however, been argued that the instrument executed by the deceased was not a Will because the executant boy, a minor, was unable to make a valid Will. Will is defined in the General Clauses Act, 1897, section 3 (57) as including "a codicil and every writing making a voluntary posthumous disposition of property." The document, therefore, fully satisfies the definition which is applicable to the word "Will" as used in the Registration Act. The question whether effect can be given to the dispositions of property contained in the Will is a different one and must depend on the question of his age at the date of execution, and the further question whether his minority had been prolonged by the appointment of a guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act. These are questions which are beyond the scope of the Registration Act. In conformity with this view, it was held in Arumugam Pillai v. Arunachallam Pillai (1) that the Registration department was not entitled to refuse to register a Will on the ground of the alleged minority of the executant.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

STUART, A. J. C.—This is an appeal against the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Mohanlalganj, dated the 8th January 1917, dismissing the suit of Mohammed Ali Khan, appellant, for the possession of certain villages, shares in villages, and other property, and mesne profits. The villages are situated in the Sitapur and Bara Banki districts. They belonged to Sheikh Mozaffar Ali Khan who died on the 18th April 1890. This gentleman was a Bazid Khani Kharzada of the Bara Banki district. He was married to a lady, called Zohra Bibi, who died on the 9th August 1904. He had in his keeping a certain Musammât Phundan-un-nisa who had been a prostitute before she came to him. By her he had several daughters and a son, called Ghazanfar Ali Khan, defendant respondent in this appeal. Ghazanfar Ali Khan asserts that his mother was married to Mozaffar Ali Khan, and that he is the legitimate son of the latter. The family of Mozaffar Ali Khan is a family of standing. They are Siddiki Sheikhs, who trace their origin to the First Khalifa Abu Bakar. According to their family history, their ancestor, Kazi Nasrullah, who was in the twelfth generation of descent from Abu Bakar, was Kazi of Baghdad. He is said to have come to India in the twelfth century during the reign of King Shahabuddin (better known as Muhammad) of Ghori and to have settled in Amroha. His descendants for three generations are said to have held the office of Kazi at Delhi. About 1345 A. D. his great grand-son, Kazi Nasratullah, was sent to Oudh by Muhammad Bin Tughlak to subdue the Bhars. The descendants of this family subsequently divided into three main branches—those of Pahar Khan, Said Khan and Bazid Khan. These three were either brothers or closely related collaterals. They founded three distinct families or khandans who are known as the Pahar Khani Kharzadas, the Said Khani Kharzadas, and the Bazid Khani Kharzadas. The principal member of the Pahar Khani Kharzadas is the Taluqdar of Bhatwaman. The Said Khani Kharzadas held Paintipur and other estates. Paintipur was afterwards transferred to the Bazid Khani, Raja of Bilehra. In these proceedings we are concerned entirely with an alleged custom of Bazid Khani Kharzadas. The plaintiff-appellant is in the tenth generation from Nawab Bazid Khan. It may be taken, roughly, that Nawab Bazid Khan died some 300 years ago. There are six important families of the Bazid Khani Kharzadas in Oudh—the families of the Raja of Mah-mudabad, the late Raja of Bilehra, and the owners of the Haswapara, Muhammadpur, Bishenpur, and Mitaura estates. These proceedings are concerned with property in the Haswapara estate. Imdad Ali owned that estate. Mozaffar Ali Khan and Nasir Ali were the sons of Imdad Ali. Imdad Ali had also two daughters. Nasir Ali had a son Nisar Ali. The plaintiff-appellant, Muhammad Ali Khan, is the son of Nisar Ali. When Mozaffar Ali Khan died three persons applied to have their names entered in the revenue papers as his successors. These persons were his acknowledged wife, Musammât Zohra Bibi, Ghazanfar Ali Khan, then an infant of two years old under the guardianship of Musammât Phundan-un-nisa, his mother, who claimed to be the legitimate son of the deceased, and the deceased's brother, Nasir Ali. The Tahsildar reported on the 6th June 1890 (Exhibit A-29) that Nasir Ali's name should be recorded on the ground that he was in possession. The Deputy Commissioner, Lieutenant Colonel Grigg, by his order of the 19th June 1890, (Exhibit A-31) directed that the name of Ghazanfar Ali Khan, under the guardianship of his mother, and also the name of Musammât Zohra Bibi should be entered on the khewat as part owner without specification of extent of share along with the name of Ghazanfar Ali Khan as the son of the nikah wife, Musammât Zohra Bibi and Ghazanfar Ali Khan remained in possession. It is to be noted that an eight annas share in Bambhauri, in the Sitapur district, was recorded in the name of Nasir Ali. Nasir Ali died in 1900. He survived his son Nisar Ali. He was succeeded by Raza Husain, son of his sister Nareez-un-nisa, and his grand-daughter Kaniz Fatima. On the 10th January 1899, shortly before her death, Musammât Zohra Bibi executed a deed of relinquishment (Exhibit A-28) which was registered on the 11th January 1899, by which she gave up all her claims in favour of Ghazanfar Ali Khan. As has already been stated, she died on 9th August 1904. On the 12th March 1902 Ghazanfar Ali Khan instituted a suit for the share in Bambhauri against Raza Husain and Kaniz Fatima. On the 7th April 1902 Raza Husain and Kaniz

MUHAMMAD ALI KHAN v. GHAZANFAR ALI KHAN.

Fatima instituted a suit against Ghazanfar Ali Khan, Musammât Zohra Bibi, Musammât Phundan-un-nisa, and a transferee, for possession of the property of Muzaffar Ali Khan (who had died eleven years and 264 days before) which was in their possession. The Subordinate Judge decided Ghazanfar Ali Khan's suit for possession of the share in Bambhanri in his favour and dismissed the other suit holding Ghazanfar Ali Khan to be legitimate. Appeals were filed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. These were decided in one judgment on the 23rd July 1906. The learned Judges who decided these appeals arrived at the conclusion that Ghazanfar Ali Khan had been unable to prove that Musammât Phundan-un-nisa was married to Muzaffar Ali Khan. They further found that there was a family custom by which daughters and their descendants were excluded in favour of sons and their descendants. On those findings they allowed the appeal with regard to the Bambhanri property and dismissed Ghazanfar Ali Khan's suit. On the second appeal they found that the plaintiffs had no case, inasmuch as they were excluded by the present plaintiff-appellant. They dismissed the appeal and upheld the decision of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit brought by Raza Husain and Kaniz Fatima. The latter decision became final. An appeal was taken to their Lordships of the Privy Council by Ghazanfar Ali Khan against the dismissal of his suit for the Bambhanri property. That appeal was dismissed by their Lordships of the Privy Council on the 23rd April 1910 [Ghazanfar Ali Khan v. Kaniz Fatima (1)]. Their Lordships found that on the evidence Muzaffar Ali Khan and Phundan-un-nisa had not been married. Ghazanfar Ali Khan remained in possession of the property with the exception of the share in Bambhanri. On the 5th February 1914 Muhammad Ali Khan instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki against Ghazanfar Ali Khan, Phundan-un-nisa (who died in the following year) and certain transferees. The hearing of the suit was subsequently transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mohanlalganj who decided it.

The case put forward by the plaintiff-appellant is that, under the custom of the family holding the Haswapara estate, a childless widow succeeds to the property of her deceased husband for life, and that after her death the property goes to the collateral heirs of her deceased husband. Later on in the proceedings he enlarged this plea to a plea that the custom which he asserted prevailed amongst all Bazid Khani Khanzadas. He further asserted that Muzaffar Ali Khan and Phundan-un-nisa had never been married. He thus put forward as his plea that, on the death of Muzaffar Ali Khan, the estate had devolved for life on Musammât Zohra Bibi, and succession had opened in his favour on the 9th August 1904. He also asserted exclusion of daughters and their descendants. Ghazanfar Ali Khan in reply again asserted that Muzaffar Ali Khan and Phundan-un-nisa had been married. The learned Subordinate Judge, who decided the suit, in a very careful and intelligent judgment, found that the existence of the custom asserted by the plaintiff had not been established. He dismissed the suit, finding, at the same time, that Musammât Phundan-un-nisa and Muzaffar Ali Khan had not been married.

I now proceed to the determination of the appeal. I have already noted that there are six important families of Bazid Khani Khanzadas. The most important are the families of the Raja of Mahmudabad and the late Raja of Bilehra. Mahmudabad and Bilehra both being taluk's, succession to which is governed by Act I of 1869, and the subsequent amending Acts, the question of family custom as affecting succession can only become of importance should all heirs fail under the provisions of the first ten clauses of section 22, Act I of 1869, as amended. Up to the present, the question has not arisen in either of these families. The remaining four families are the families which own the Bishanpur, the Mitaura, the Mahammadpur, and the Haswapara estates. Leaving for the present the Haswapara estate, with which the present proceedings are concerned, out of consideration, I shall consider the evidence with regard to the Bishanpur, the Mitaura, and the Maham.

madpur estates relating to the existence of a custom in derogation of the ordinary Muhammadan Law. I may remark in limine that the evidence in this case goes to show that the provisions of the ordinary Muhammadan Law have not been followed in most instances by Bazid Khani Kharzadas to determine questions of succession.

The first question to be decided is, whether there is any custom having the force of law which prevails in all the Bazid Khani Kharzada families in question. I need not take into account the alleged customs amongst Pahar Khani Kharzadas and Said Khani Kharzadas, as those branches separated from the Bazid Khani Kharzadas at least ten generations ago. In the case of the Bishanpur estate there is a wajib-ul-arz proved at the Settlement of 1865 (Exhibit 53). The wajib-ul-arz is with regard to the village of Bishanpur. A translation of the important passage is as follows:—

"The rule of inheritance is this, that if any lambardar or co-sharer has two married wives of the biradari with one son by one wife and several sons by the other wife, then the one son of the one wife shall get one-half and the several sons of the other wife shall get the remaining half in equal shares. If one of the wives be childless, then, after the death of her husband, she will remain in possession of one-half share till her death without power of transfer, and after her death the sons of the other wife shall divide it among themselves in equal shares. If the lambardar or co-sharer dies childless his widow shall remain in possession till her death without power of transfer, and after her husband's heirs will be entitled to get the share. If during his lifetime the husband makes a gift of his share in favour of his wife in lieu of dower or in any other way, the wife shall have power to make a gift, sale and mortgage in respect of the gifted property. A ghair kuf married wife or her children will not get shares as against the children of the biradari, but they will get maintenance if they are of good character and are obedient. If there be no children by the biradari wife, she will be the owner of the share till her death, and after her the children of the ghair kuf married wife shall be the owner of the shares. An unmarried woman or her children shall get maintenance if they are of good character and are obedient to the heirs of the deceased whose mistress the woman was. If the co-sharer has given by means of a writing such things as sir, grove and house to the unmarried woman or to the ghair-kuf married wife or to their children, then they will remain in possession without power of transfer. Daughter's children get no share in any family according to custom. But if any co-sharer has given anything to his daughter or daughter's son and reduces the same into a writing when they will be the owners of the same, and will have also powers to make a gift and sale."

The custom laid down here is that, in event of the proprietor having two wives and a varying number of sons by each wife, his property is divided according to the number of wives and not per capita according to the number of sons. If one of the wives is childless she is entitled to a life-estate in her share with reversion to the sons of the remaining wife on her death. Daughters get no shares. A childless widow gets a life estate with reversion to her husband's heirs. These rules apply only to wives of families of an equal degree with that of the husband. In the case of a wife whose family is not of an equal degree, that is a ghair kuf wife, neither she nor her children are to get anything more than maintenance, and they are put in no better position than a mistress and her children who also get maintenance. The provisions of the wajib ul arz formed the subject of a judicial decision. Samsam Ali, the owner of the Bishanpur estate, died on the 18th October 1879. He left two wives, Khatun Bando Bibi and Makbulunnisa. On his death the two ladies took joint possession of the property and subsequently divided the estate between themselves. On the death of Khatun Bando Bibi, Makbulunnisa applied to have her name entered in the Collector's register in place of the deceased's name. The application was opposed by Abdul Rahman, son of Abbas Ali, Samsam Ali's brother. The dispute was subsequently referred to arbitration and an award was made allotting Khatun Bando Bibi's share to Abdul Rahman and dividing the moveable property between him and Makbulunnisa. On the 22nd January 1895 Makbulunnisa executed a deed of gift transferring a part of her share to her brother's son. Thereupon Abbas Ali, Sameam Ali's brother, sued her and the donee for a declaration that the gift would be void as against him after the death of the donor on the ground that Makbulunnisa had a life-interest only. The judicial proceedings were terminated by a judgment of Mr. Spankie, Additional Judicial Commissioner, of the 14th March 1899 (Exhibit 61). He held that the custom of inheritance recorded in the wajib ul arz was a good custom and that the widows of a sonless Khanzada in this family obtained a life-interest in the property and nothing more. This instance thus supports the existence of the custom asserted by the plaintiff appellant.

I now come to the Mitaura estate. There are three wajib ul araz on the record—one of the village Banar, one of the village Katri and one of the village Mitaura itself (Exhibits A 22, A 43, A 42). The first Exhibit declares that if a co-sharer has two married wives with a son by one wife and two sons by the other the shares will be divided according to the number of sons, that is, per capita. It continues that, if he has only a daughter by one wife and a son by the other, the daughter will get a share as against the son, but that if he has a son and daughter by the same wife the daughter is excluded by the son. In the case of the widow of a childless proprietor it is laid down that she will be the full owner of a half share with full power of transfer. This is the wajib-ul-arz of Banar. The wajib-ul arz of Katri states that the custom of inheritance is the same as in Banar. The wajib-ul arz of Mitaura, which is another village of the same estate, varies the custom. A translation of the paragraph relating to succession is as follows:—

"The male issue becomes entitled to inherit. In the absence of a male issue, if the share of the deceased is divided, or if the rendition of account takes place, then his widow remains in possession of the share and enjoys power of transfer also. But if the share is not divided nor has there taken place any rendition of account then the widow is not entitled to get the share. She gets only maintenance. In case there is no widow entitled to inherit, the own brother or brother's sons, otherwise the daughter and daughter's sons become entitled to inheritance. If there are sons from several wives then the shares are divided according to the number of sons. The custom of adoption prevails, but the condition is that the person to be adopted must be of the family, and one belonging to another family cannot be adopted, even the widow who is heir to her husband's property can adopt at her own will, from the family of her husband. The adopted son is the heir of the adopter like a natural son and gets no share from his natural father."

Succession to the Mitaura estate was the subject of judicial decision by this Court. Tasadduk Husain was the holder of the estate. He was a Shia. It is to be noted that Mazaffar Ali Khan, with whose property we are concerned in this appeal, was a Sunni. On Tasadduk Husain's death he was succeeded by his widow, Asifunnisa. From her a portion of the property went to her father and brother. Azimunnisa and Zamin Ali sued to recover possession of this portion on the ground that Asifunnisa had no title as a widow governed by the Shia Law. The defendants set up the custom as stated in the wajib ul araz to which I have referred. The matter was decided finally by a decision reported as Mohammad Ali Naki v. Ahmadunnisa (2) on 11th August 1892. The following is an extract from the judgment, at pages 7 and 8, on the matter of custom:—

"Now, as to the plea of family custom, it was practically abandoned by learned Counsel on both sides before the close of the hearing. I am clearly of opinion that nothing possessing the attributes of valid and binding custom has been established. Several wajib ul araz have been read to us, but from none of them can it be gathered that there is any uniform immemorial custom as to the admission or exclusion of females in matters of inheritance among Khanzadas. These wajib ul araz set forth varying customs, some excluding females, some giving them a partial, and some an absolute title, and in two of the villages which Tasadduk Husain himself possessed (Banar and Helapara) the custom evidenced by the wajib ul araz is conflicting, i.e., there is more than one custom as to the same matter in the same family. In fact, all these wajib-ul-araz are of the kind commented on by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh (3). They record much more the wishes and opinions of the parties to them than any settled immemorial custom. A good illustration of this is the fact that after the wajib-ul-araz of one village had been drawn up, Tasadduk Husain endeavoured to get it altered with a view to give the right of succession to Zamin Ali, his sister's son. I find that no binding custom varying the Muhammadan Law has been proved. The parties, therefore, must be held to be bound by that law; and as, admittedly, they are all Shias the law applicable to them is the law of the Shia sect. Under the law Tasadduk Husain's widow, as a childless widow, had no right to succeed to any share in her husband's estate. She, however, held possession of the whole from July 1875 up to her death in December 1878. On her death the plaintiff succeeded in obtaining possession, forcibly it is said, of the great bulk of the property which is situate in the Sitapur district, but the defendants were by order of the Revenue Authorities put in possession of the small portion now in suit lying in the Bara Banki district."

MUHAMMAD ALI KHAN V. GHAZANFAR ALI KHAN.

It will be seen that the plea of custom was argued and decided although the arguments apparently were not pressed at the end of the proceedings. The Court here decided clearly that there was no custom proved and that succession must be according to the provisions of the Shia Law. The custom had been asserted but was not recognised.

I now come to the Muhammadpur estate. The wajib ul araz produced from that estate are the wajib-ul-araz of Muhammadpur itself (Exhibit 52) and the wajib-ul-araz of Kardari (Exhibit A-41). The following is a translation of the paragraph dealing with the question of succession, in Exhibit 52:—

"The rule of inheritance is this, that if any co-sharer has two married wives of the biradari with one son by one wife and several sons by the other wife, then the one son of the one wife shall get one-half and the several sons of the other wife shall get the remaining half in equal shares, that is to say, the share will be divided according to the number of wives without any regard for children. If one of such wives is childless, then, after the death of her husband, she will remain in possession of one-half share till her death without power of transfer; and after her death, the sons of the other wife shall divide it among themselves in equal shares. If the limbदार or co-sharer dies childless his widow shall remain in possession of his share till her death. She will have no power to transfer it to a stranger, but if she wishes to give it to her daughter or to some particular heir of her husband she can do so in her lifetime. If she does not give the aforesaid share to any person, the heirs of her husband will be entitled to get it.

"If during his lifetime a husband makes a gift of his share to his wife in lieu of dower or in any other way, and reduces the same into a writing, then the wife will have power to make a gift, sale and the widow gets only maintenance. The partition of heritage is, at all events, made according to number of male issues, whether they are from one wife or from several wives. The wedded wife belonging to low caste and unwedded wife are not entitled to inherit, but get maintenance provided they are of good character. The sethansi right and the custom to adopt do not prevail."

It will be seen that this wajib ul-araz directly contradicts the wajib ul-araz of Muhammadpur inasmuch as it states that if the property of the deceased is divided or if the rendition of account takes place then the widow of the deceased becomes the heir and she enjoys the power of transfer also. It further contradicts the wajib ul-araz of Muhammadpur in stating that the division is to be according to the number of male heirs irrespective of the number of widows.

There has been no judicial pronouncement as to the validity of custom in this estate.

I have now to consider whether it can be held that there is any custom applicable to the Ahandan or collection of the six families,

MUHAMMAD ALI KHAN v. GHAZANFAR ALI KHAN.

It is to be noted that, according to the pedigree accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge at o. p. 1092, Bazid Khan had three sons, Inayat Khan, Fateh Khan, and Hidayat Khan. Hidayat Khan was the ancestor of the Mahmudabad family. So the Mahmudabad family separated nine generations back. Inayat Khan had two sons, Muhammad Kaim Khan and Aulia Khan. Aulia Khan was the ancestor of the Muhammadpur family. So the Muhammadpur family separated eight generations back. Muhammad Kaim Khan had three grand-sons, Bedar Bakht, Muhammad Imam Khan, and Ghulam Husain. Bedar Bakht was the ancestor of the Bishanpur family. Muhammad Imam Khan was the ancestor of the Bilehra family, and Ghulam Husain was the ancestor of the Mitaura family. So these three families separated six generations back. Fateh Khan was the ancestor of the Haswapur family. They separated nine generations back. There has thus been ample time for different customs to grow up in the different branches. We have it in the beginning that the Bishanpur family has a custom of succession by which a childless widow obtains only a life-estate that has been judicially recognised and that in the case of the Mitaura family there is a judicial pronouncement that the succession is by Shia Law. In the case of the important Mahmudabad and Bilehra families the question of custom has not arisen and is not ordinarily likely to arise. In the case of Muhammadpur the question has not arisen but may arise. In the case of Haswapara it has now arisen. I consider that, in view of these facts, it is impossible to hold that there is any general custom of succession affecting Bazid Khani Khanzadas. Bishanpur has been found to have such a custom. Mitaura is found to have none. Muhammadpur records two conflicting customs. The question of custom of succession is thus narrowed down with regard to the matter before us in appeal to the custom of succession, if any, affecting Haswapara. No light is shed on the question by evidence with regard to the remaining Bazid Khani Khanzada families. A fortiori no light is shed on the question by evidence as to custom amongst Pahar Khani Khanzadas and Said Khani Khanzadas.

I now come to the evidence with regard to the Haswapar family. Seven wajib ul arais were prepared at the time of the Settlement from 1865 to 1870. Imdad Ali was then alive. The waib-ul arz of Haswapara (Exhibit 51) was prepared on the 25th December 1867 and was verified by Nasir Ali as agent of his father, Imdad Ali. It may have also been verified by Imdad Ali himself. This latter point is not clear. The paragraph relating to succession may be translated as follows:—

"The rule of inheritance is this, that if any lambardar or co-sharer has two married wives from the biradari, with one son by the one wife and several sons by the other wife then the one son of the one wife shall get one-half, and the several sons of the other shall get the remaining half in equal shares. If one of these wives is childless, then, after the death of her husband, she will remain in possession of one-half share during her life without power of transfer, and after her death the sons of the second wife shall divide it equally among themselves. If the lambardar or the co-sharer dies childless, his widow shall remain in possession (of his estate) during her lifetime without power of transfer, and after her the heirs of her husband shall be entitled to get shares. If during his lifetime the husband makes a gift of his share in favour of his wife in lieu of melar or in any other way, the wife shall have power to make a gift, sale and mortgage in respect of that gifted property. A ghair kuf married wife or her children will not get shares of those of biradari (sic), but they will get maintenance provided that they are of good character and are obedient. If the wife of the biradari has no child, she will have a life estate in the share, and after her the share will go to her husband's bhai bhatije (brothers and nephews) who are entitled to inherit according to law, rules of society (urfan) and custom. A wife not married or her children will get maintenance like a ghair-kuf married wife. Neither of them will get share whether the share is divided or undivided. If any co-sharer or lambardar gives away to his unmarried wife, or to ghair-kuf married wife, or to their children, such things as sir, grove and house and reduces the same to a writing, they will remain in possession of the same during their lifetime without power of transfer. In my family a daughter's son gets no share according to custom, but if any co-sharer gives something to his daughter or daughter's son and reduces the same to a writing, then such daughter or daughter's son shall be the owner of the same and will also have power to make a gift and sale."

It is, however, a very remarkable fact that in Exhibit A 44, the wajib ul arz of the village Sadrawan, prepared on the 10th May 1870, which was verified again by Nasir Ali as son and general agent of Imdad Ali, it is stated in paragraph 4—

"There is no custom for the daughter and daughter's son to get inheritance, nor is the widow entitled under any circumstances to inherit her deceased husband whether the property is ancestral or self acquired. If the owner of land dies childless, his inheritance devolves upon his collaterals, preference being given to nearer ones. The widow gets only maintenance. In case there are sons from several wives the shares are divided with reference to the number of sons. The custom to adopt and the je'hami right do not prevail."

Again, in Exhibit A-45, the wajib-ul ara of Bambhanri, dated the 13th April 1870 verified by Nasir Ali as son and agent of Imdad Ali, the custom regarding inheritance is stated as it prevailed in Sadrawan. Thus, Nasir Ali made two absolutely conflicting statements in 1867 and 1870. In 1867 he stated that under the custom of the family a childless widow had a life-interest in her deceased husband's estate. In 1870 he stated that she had nothing more than a right of maintenance. The learned Counsel for the appellant would have us minimize the effect of the statements made by Nasir Ali in 1870 on the following theory. His suggestion is that in 1870 it occurred to Nasir Ali that if he asserted that a widow had nothing more than a right of maintenance he might be in a position to obtain the property of Muzaffar Ali Khan who was his elder brother when the latter died without giving anything except a right of maintenance to Musammat Zohra Bibi. He points out that when Muzaffar Ali Khan died Nasir Ali actually claimed the property at the time of mutation proceedings denying that Musammat Zohra Bibi had any right. I cannot, however, accept this contention. In 1870 Muzaffar Ali Khan was not more than 34 or 35 years of age. This is clear from the statements of his age given in Exhibits C1, C7 and C8. I cannot accept it as a likely hypothesis that Nasir Ali in 1870 was deliberately calculating on the prospect of his brother, who was then a man only 34 or 35 years of age, dying without issue. We have no reason to suppose that at that time Musammat Zohra Bibi was considered incapable of bearing a son. Muzaffar Ali Khan was capable of begetting children, as is shown by the fact that he begot several children from Phundan-un nisa. The explanation is rather that there was no real custom and that the members of this family were inclined to invent customs almost from day to day as their inclination took them. Muzaffar Ali Khan himself verified four wajib ul ariz at the time of the same Settlement. These were the wajib-ul-araiz of Rawal Bhari (Exhibit 32), Implipur (Exhibit 34), Bachhrajman (Exhibit 36) and Bibipur (Exhibit 33). The following is a translation of the passage dealing with the question of succession in Rawal Bhari:—

"The rule of inheritance is this, that if any one has two wedded wives from the biradari, with a son from one wife and several sons from the other, then his share will be divided among his sons equally, i.e., regard will be had not to the number of wives, but to the number of sons. If one of such wives be childless then, after the death of her husband, she will get maintenance but no share. In the same way, if there is only one wife and she is childless then, after the death of her husband, she will get possession over the divided share of her husband without power of alienation. But if the share is not divided it will be inherited by the deceased's brother and brother's sons or any other near relative, and the widow will get maintenance. A ghair-kuf wedded wife or an unwedded wife and their sons will get maintenance, provided they are obedient. A childless widow belonging to the biradari can adopt but in the presence of nearer relatives of her husband she cannot adopt another person, whether the share is divided or undivided. If a co-sharer has given something in the form of s.r., grove or house to his ghair kuf wedded wife, or to his unwedded wife, or to the sons from such wives then she or he will remain in possession thereof without power of alienation, and when she or he dies without leaving any son, then the nearer relative of the man whose kept mistress she was will get the share. A daughter will not get a share under any circumstances, that is to say, whether there is a son or not. But she will be the owner of the share if her father has given it to her during his lifetime and has reduced the same into a writing."

In the remainder, the custom is stated to be the same as in Rawal Bhari. These wajib-ul-araz are not dated. According to these entries, a childless widow obtains a life estate only. But these entries have little value owing to the circumstances in which they were prepared. These villages are not ancestral villages of the Haswapara estate. They were acquired in the following circumstances, as stated in Exhibit 32:—

"Rawal Bhari, Ghiswapur, Iahraganj, Chak Makia, Makiapur, Jafarpur, Mustafabad, pargana and tahsil Mahmudabad, Ballia Pargana Dawa, tahsil Nawabganj, Implipur, Kundri, Bibipur, Rajauli and Baohbrajman—After Bazid Khan, it went to his son Muhammad Fateh, and from Muhammad Fateh to Karam Ullah, and after Karam Ullah to Jafar Husain Khan and Isbrat Zaman Khan, who were among the descendants of Karam Ullah. The last two had no sons. The share of Isbrat Zaman Khan came to me, Chaudhri Muzaffar Ali Khan, because his wife was my father's father's sister, while the share of Jafar Husain Khan came to me, Niamat Ali, because his wife was my father's sister. Out of these villages, village Rajauli, has been in possession of Raja Ibad Ali Khan, Talukdar of Bilehra, etc., since 1256 Fasli; and the 12 annas of Baohbrajman has from a long time been in possession of us Raja Ibad Ali Khan, Nabi Bakheh Khan and others; and the remaining villages are in possession of both of us. In 1262 a partition took place between Chaudhri Muzaffar Ali, and the wife of Jafar Husain Khan in the following manner: "

It is thus seen that these villages originally belonged to Jafar Husain Khan and Isbrat Zaman Khan who died without issue. Jafar Husain Khan and Isbrat Zaman Khan were descendants of Ali Ahmad, a son of Karam Ullah, son of Fateh Khan. Reference has already been made to Fateh Khan. Ali Ahmad was the eldest son, Muhammad Roshan was the second son, and Muhammad Ghaus was the third son of Karam Ullah. Isbrat Zaman Khan had married a lady who was a sister of Muzaffar Ali Khan's father's father. Jafar Husain Khan had married the sister of Alam Ali Hajjaji. Alam Ali Hajjaji was not a Kharzada. If the custom asserted in these wajib-ul-araz were a binding custom on the death of Isbrat Zaman Khan the property would have gone to his widow for life and on her death it would have devolved on her husband's nearest collaterals. It did not devolve on her husband's nearest collaterals. It devolved on Muzaffar Ali Khan who excluded his own father, Imdad Ali, who was then alive. He belonged to the Muhammad Ghaus branch who were further in line than the Muhammad Rostan branch. The wajib-ul-araz of Rawal Bhari states clearly that in 1262 Fasli 1855 A. D. the widow of Jafar Husain Khan was in possession of half of the villages and he himself was in possession of the remaining half in succession to his grand-aunt and that in that year a partition took place between him and the widow of Jafar Husain Khan. When Jafar Husain Khan's widow died she was succeeded by her nephew, Niamat Ali, who was not a Kharzada. The evidence of Ghani Ahmad Khan, who was believed by the learned Subordinate Judge and whom I believe, (p. 718) shows this. In Exhibit 33, the Bibipur wajib-ul-araz, Muzaffar Ali Khan describes Jafar Husain Khan's wife as his aunt—a statement diametrically opposed to the statement in Exhibit 32, the Rawal Bhari wajib-ul-araz. Ghani Ahmad Khan's evidence would go to show that Jafar Husain Khan's widow was the aunt of Niamat Ali and the Rawal Bhari wajib-ul-araz is clearly correct on this point. His evidence would also go to show that Imdad Ali at first obtained the property from Isbrat Zaman Khan's widow and that Jafar Husain Khan's widow gave the property to Niamat Ali. But whatever be the facts upon this point, it is perfectly clear that both these ladies had not a life-interest in the property but full proprietary title. Whether that proprietary title descended to their heirs rather than to their husband's collaterals (it is to be noted that Imdad Ali was an heir of Isbrat Zaman Khan's wife who was Muhammad Saleh's daughter,

MUHAMMAD ALI KHAN V. GP:Z NEAR ALI KHAN.

Muhammed Saleh being the father of Az'zullah who was father of Imdad Ali) or whether they transferred the property during their lifetime, they both had more than a life interest. Yet, Mozaffar Ali Khan, while stating in one paragraph of the wajib-ul-arz that he succeeded either by inheritance or by transfer to the property held by the lady with full proprietary title, at a later portion of the wajib-ul-arz asserts that such a lady could not have a proprietary title under a custom but only life interest.

It is further to be noted how carelessly these wajib-ul-arz are prepared. On any view of the case, Mozaffar Ali Khan, a Bazid Khani Kharzada, belonged to a different family to Niamat Ali who was a Jajaji. In Exhibit 32 the custom of succession in a village in which Mozaffar Ali Khan owned one-half and Niamat Ali owned the remaining half is stated as the joint custom of both. The same is the case in the Implipur wajib-ul-arz, Exhibit 34. Niamat Ali was apparently then dead. His sons, Mansur Husain and Imdad Husain, were owners of eight annas in Implipur. They subscribed to a common family custom. In the case of Bachhrajman four annas had been obtained by Mozaffar Ali Khan under the partition. The remaining twelve annas belonged to other Kharzadas. A common family custom is stated in the case of Bibipur (Exhibit 33). Mozaffar Ali Khan alone verified it as the whole of this village had come to him under the partition. We thus have it that out of the seven wajib-ul-arz relating to the Haawa para estate Mozaffar Ali Khan's brother stated in one instance that the custom was that a widow had life-interest with no power of transfer. In two other instances he stated that she had no life-interest but only a right of maintenance. In four instances of property which had come to Mozaffar Ali Khan by inheritance or gift, he stated that a widow had only a life-interest without a right of transfer. But in other places he stated that the property came to him and Niamat Ali from ladies who had what must be implied to be a full proprietary title the existence of which militates against his statement that such ladies could not have a proprietary title. Further, it is a remarkable fact that, when giving evidence in legal proceedings on the 26th April 1883 (Exhibit A 34), he propounded the existence of an absolutely different custom to the custom which he had propounded in these former wajib-ul-arz. He there had stated that he was married to two wives, Musammot Zohra Bibi and Musammot Paundan un nisa, who was not of the brotherhood but of a family of prostitutes. He said with regard to his own property: "if my first wife survives she will succeed, after her death the second wife and her issue will succeed to the property. This will be succession to the property in my possession of whatever class. I do not know whether I have had inserted in the wajib-ul-arz the custom contrary to the family or not." Later on, he said:—

"My second wife and her daughters will exclude the brothers from inheritance."

It is to be noted that he had stated in these previous wajib-ul-arz:—

"A ghair kuf wedded wife or an unwedded wife and their sons will get maintenance, provided they are obedient. .... If a co-sharer has given something in the form of sir, grove, or house to his ghair kuf wedded wife, or to his unwedded wife, or to the sons from such wives, then she or he will remain in possession thereof without power of alienation, and when she or he dies without leaving any son, then the nearer relative of the man whose kept mistress she was will get the share."

The entries in these wajib-ul-arz are similar to the entries in the wajib-ul-arz in the Mitaura case. In Mohammad Ali Naki v. Ahmad un nisa (2) the late Sir William Barkitt said with regard to them:—

"They record much more the wishes and opinions of the parties to them than any settled immemorial custom."

I cannot find from these entries that there is any custom proved, as asserted by the plaintiff-appellant, under which a childless widow succeeds to a life-estate with reversion to the collateral heirs of her deceased husband. The evidence of instances is, on the whole, against the appellant and not in his favour. The only instance in his favour is the instance in Bisbanpur. But the evidence of instances carries me little further when these instances are instances outside the Haawapara estate. The fact that it was found in the Mitaura estate that no such custom existed would not prevent a finding that such a custom existed in the Haswapara estate, and, in order to make an instance valuable, it must be an instance in the Haswapara estate. The only instance in the Haswapara estate is the instance of the succession to the property of Isharat Zaman Khan and Jafar Husain Khan and that instance is against the appellant. The evidence of opinion is referred to by the learned Subordinate Judge at o. p. 1167 to o. p. 1199. I note that the Raja of Mahmudabad (Exhibit 48) and the Raja of Bilehra (Exhibit 54) deposed in 1907 and 1903 to the existence of a custom by which a widow obtained only a life-interest. But the evidence of these gentlemen, valuable as it might be with regard to the customs prevailing in the Mahmudabad and the Bilehra branches, is of little value in establishing the existence of a custom in the Haswapara estate, with regard to which they have no special means of knowledge. I accept the view of the learned Subordinate Judge that the oral evidence does not establish the existence of any such custom.

I am thus thrown back to the position that the plaintiff appellant has asserted the existence of a custom which, I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge, he has failed to establish. The learned Counsel who argued with great ability in support of the appeal has asked the Court to arrive at a finding that, inasmuch as the Bazid Khani Khanzadas do not decide question of succession according to the Muhammadan Law, it is for the Court to discover the custom on which they do decide questions of succession and to apply that custom to the decision of the present appeal. I accept his contention that the Bazid Khani Khanzadas do not appear to consider themselves bound in questions of succession by Muhammadan Law. But I cannot accept the proposition that, when a plaintiff, in order to succeed, has to establish the existence of a particular custom and fails to establish its existence, the Court can do otherwise than dismiss his suit. It is a matter of no importance for the determination of this appeal whether Muhammadan Law be applied or whether a custom exists (which has not been proved) to the effect that the widow of a childless Bazid Khani Khanzada in Haswapara succeeds to full proprietary title in his estate. If Muhammadan Law is applied, the suit is time barred. If the lady had a full proprietary title, the suit is also time-barred and, further, fails on the ground that she transferred her title to Ghazanfar Ali Khan. It was for the appellant to prove, in order to succeed, that the lady had a life-interest and that succession did not open to him until her death. Otherwise, his suit fails as time barred. He has not established that she had a life interest and his suit must, therefore, be dismissed.

There remains a further point. Ghazanfar Ali Khan's learned Counsel has urged the Court to reverse the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge to the effect that Phundan-un-nisa and Muzaffar Ali Khan are not proved to have been married. The judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ghazanfar Ali Khan v. mat Kaniz Fatima (1) does not operate as res judicata and it is not a judgment in rem. It is admissible in evidence, however, as showing an instance in which Ghazanfar Ali Khan's claim to be the legitimate son of Phundan-un-nisa and Muzaffar Ali Khan was asserted and rejected. Accepting the judgment only to prove this instance, and for no other purpose, the facts remain as follows. Muzaffar Ali Khan had undoubtedly a permanent connection with Phundan-un-nisa who had been a prostitute before she came to him. She lived in his house for many years. She adopted the habits of a respectable woman. She observed parda. She bore him many children. She resided with him till his death. These circumstances are compatible either with her being a mistress to whom he was deeply attached, or his wife. In the earlier proceedings no attempt was apparently made to prove a marriage. Even the date of the marriage was not stated with any clearness. In the present proceedings witnesses have been called to prove the marriage. These witnesses have been rightly disbelieved by the learned Subordinate Judge. The only evidence in support of the marriage is the evidence of admissions by Muzaffar Ali Khan that such a marriage took place. The strongest of these admissions was before their Lordships of the Privy Council in the previous proceedings. It did not convince them that such a marriage had taken place. There is further evidence of admissions and evidence of treatment which was not before their Lordships. Against this is the striking fact that at no time did Phundan un nisa come into the witness box to depose to the performance of a ceremony. She did not die until some time had elapsed after the institution of the present suit. From the circumstances of the case it might not have been easy for Ghazanfar Ali Khan to have produced reliable evidence as to the performance of a ceremony. It may be that all genuine evidence had disappeared. But the fact remains that it was for him in the present proceedings to prove affirmatively that the ceremony had taken place. I am not in a position to disturb the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge upon the point. I cannot find affirmatively on the evidence that such a ceremony did take place. I do not go so far as to find affirmatively that it did not take place. But the burden of proof was on Ghazanfar Ali Khan to establish that Phundan un-nisa and Muzaffar Ali Khan were married. In my opinion, he has failed to do so.

This finding does not, however, affect the result of the appeal. The plaintiff appellant, having failed to establish the existence of the custom which he alleges, must fail.

I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

KANHAIYA LAL, A. J. C.—The facts of this case have been set out at length in the judgment of my learned colleague. The dispute in this case relates to the property of Muzaffar Ali Khan. The Bazid Khani family is now represented by six branches, each of which holds a separate estate. Bazid Khan had three sons, Inayet Khan, Fateh Khan and Hidayat Khan. The Bishunpur, Muhammadpur Mitaura and Bilehra estates are represented by the descendants of Inayet Khan. The Haswapur estate was represented, among others, by Muzaffar Ali Khan, one of the descendants of Fateh Khan. The Mahmudabad estate passed from a daughter, who was a descendant of Hidayat Khan, to Muhammad Ikram Khan, one of the descendants of Inayet Khan, and is now held by Raja Ali Muhammad Khan.

Muzaffar Ali Khan died on the 18th April 1890, leaving a widow, Musammât Zobra Begam. He also had in his keeping a woman, named Musammât Phundan, who was at one time a prostitute. By her he had a son, Ghazanfar Ali Khan. Only two questions arise for consideration in this appeal. The first is, whether by virtue of a custom prevailing in the family of Bazid Khan a widow is entitled to succeed to the entire property of her husband for her lifetime without any power of alienation. The second is, whether Ghazanfar Ali Khan is the legitimate son of Muzaffar Ali Khan. If Ghazanfar Ali Khan is the legitimate son of Muzaffar Ali Khan, the plaintiff, who is the grandson of Nasir Ali, the brother of Muzaffar Ali Khan, has no right to succeed to the estate of Muzaffar Ali Khan. If he is not his legitimate son, the plaintiff would be entitled to succeed on the death of Musammât Zobra Begam in case it is established that she was, by virtue of the custom, entitled to succeed to the estate of her husband only for her life. If she had an absolute interest in the estate left by her husband or was otherwise in adverse possession of it, the plaintiff would not be entitled to succeed.

It is not now disputed that Muzaffar Ali Khan, though originally a Shia, had adopted the Hanafi faith after he took Musammât Phundan, who was a Hanafi, into his keeping. According to the Shia Law, a childless widow is not entitled to succeed to land and the question of custom is, therefore, of some importance to the family of Bazid Khani Khanzadas.

The main evidence produced in support of the custom consists of wajib-ul-arais recorded at the previous settlements. These wajib ul-arais differ as to certain details; but with the exception of the wajib ul-arais of two villages, they agree in saying that according to the custom the widow of a sonless man is entitled to inherit the whole of his estate. To that extent they depart from the Shia Law which does not allow any such widow to succeed to land and from the Hanafi Law which does not give her more than a fourth share. They differ as to whether the widow has a mere life estate or has an absolute power of disposal; but most of the wajib ul-arais give her merely a life estate.

MUHAMMAD ALI KHAN v. GHAZANFAR ALI KHAN.

The wajib-ul-arz of Bishunpur states that the rule of inheritance is that, if a lambardar or co-sharer has two married wives of the biradari with one son by one wife and several sons by the other wife, then the one son by one wife shall get one-half and the several sons of the other wife shall get the remaining half in equal shares. If one of the wives be childless, then, after the death of her husband, she shall remain in possession of one half share till her death without a power of transfer and after her death the sons of the other wife shall divide it among themselves in equal shares. If the lambardar or co sharer dies childless, his widow shall remain in possession till her death without a power of transfer, and after her, her husband's heirs would be entitled to get the share (Exhibit 53). The wajib-ul arz was verified by Nabi Bakhsh Khan, Samsam Ali and the sarbrahkar of Riasat Ali Khan who were descendants of Bazid Khan.

The wajib-ul-arz of Muhammadpur records the custom in the same terms, but adds that, although a childless widow has no power of transfer, she can, if she likes, give the property to her daughter or to some particular heir of her husband in her lifetime (Exhibit 52). The latter clause gives her a limited power of transfer in favour of a certain class. This wajib-ul arz was verified by Muhammad Ali Khan, Bakshish Ali Khan and Imdad Ali Khan, who were descendants of Bazid Khan.

The wajib ul-arz of Ral Bhari provides that if a co sharer dies childless leaving a widow the widow will get possession over the divided share of her husband without any power of alienation; but if the share was not divided, it would be inherited by the deceased's brother and brother's sons or by any other near relative, and the widow would get maintenance. Where a person leaves sons by more than one wife of the same biradari, it provides for the distribution of his estate according to the number of the sons and not according to the number of his wives (Exhibit 32). But no such question arises in this case. This wajib-ul arz was verified by Muzaffar Ali Khan himself at a time when there was no dispute as to the question of succession and there is no reason why Muzaffar Ali Khan should have then falsely represented the custom prevailing in his family. This village belonged to Jafar Husain Khan and Isbrat Zaman Khan, both of whom were descendants of Fateh Khan. The share of Isbrat Zaman Khan went to Muzaffar Ali Khan, the sister of whose father was married to him. The share of Jafar Husain Khan went to Niamat Ali Khan, the sister of whose father was married to him. Abbas Husain Khan, one of the witnesses for the defendants, states that Jafar Husain Khan was succeeded by his widow who gave away the property to Niamat Ali Khan, who was her relation. Ghani Muhammad Khan, another witness of the defendants, says the same. Whether Jafar Husain Khan had, by virtue of any disposition made in his lifetime, conferred on his wife a larger share than she would otherwise have possessed under the custom is not clear. According to the latter witness, the property of Isbrat Zaman Khan devolved on his widow and went, after her death, to Imdad Ali Khan. From Imdad Ali Khan it must have passed in the ordinary course to his son, Muzaffar Ali Khan, but as the village was substantially a Bazid Khani village the custom of inheritance recorded therein may be taken to be the custom prevailing in the Bazid Khani family. Niamat Ali Khan had to sign the wajib ul-arz because it recorded many other matters to which the agreement of the co-sharers had to be taken. The parties to this appeal claim to derive their title from Muzaffar Ali Khan and an admission of Muzaffar Ali Khan that the custom of inheritance was as recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of the above village is, therefore, entitled to considerable weight. The wajib-ul-arz of Implipur (Exhibit 34), Bachhrajman (Exhibit 36) and Bibipur (Exhibit 33) follow the custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of Ral Bhari.

The wajib-ul-arz of Haswapur provides that if a co sharer dies childless, his widow shall remain in possession of his estate during her lifetime without any power of transfer and after her the heirs of her husband shall be entitled to the same. But if, during his lifetime, her husband makes a gift of his share in favour of his wife in lieu of dower or in any other way, the wife shall have power to make a gift, sale or mortgage in respect of the property comprised in the gift (Exhibit 51). This wajib-ul-arz was verified by Nasir Ali Khan on behalf of his family, MUSAMMAD ALI KHAN v. GHAZANFAR ALI KHAN.

Imdad Ali Khan, and by the patwari of the village, and there is no reason to suppose that Imdad Ali Khan or Nasir Ali Khan was anxious to dictate at the time a custom which did not exist. The custom as recorded in this wajib-ul-arz tallies with the custom as recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of Ral Bhari, which was verified by Mazaffar Ali Khan himself, the other son of Imdad Ali Khan. The wajib-ul-araz of Kandari (Exhibit 41), Mitaura (Exhibit A-42), Banar (Exhibit A-22) and Katari (Exhibit A-43) recognise the right of a widow to succeed according to the custom and give her an absolute power of disposal.

The right of a childless widow to succeed to the property of her husband is thus recognised by the wajib-ul-araz of twelve villages, belonging to the Bazid Khani family, out of which seven expressly declare that she has only a life estate, one gives her only a limited power of disposal and the remaining four give her an absolute right. The evidence of two of the leading representatives of the Bazid Khani family, Raja Ali Muhammad Khan of Mahmudabad and Raja Kazim Husain Khan of Bilehra, who were examined in certain previous cases, goes to corroborate the custom as recorded in the wajib-ul-araz first referred to, and to establish that a childless widow is entitled to the property of her husband only for her life without any power of transfer. Raja Ali Muhammad Khan is himself one of the defendants in this case. He purchased some of the disputed properties from Musammat Phundan and Ghazanfar Ali Khan on the 8th March 1913 (Exhibit C47). When examined in 1907 with regard to the custom prevailing in the family to which he belonged, he stated that he knew the custom of Khanzadas as to the widows and that if a man died leaving two widows, one of whom had children and the other had not, the latter would have a life interest in half the estate, but if he left only one widow and no children, the widow would get a life interest. Raja Kazim Husain Khan was the father of Raja Abul Hasan Khan, one of the defendants, who died during the pendency of this suit. On the 1st March 1903 he was examined in the suit filed by Raja Husain and Musammat Kaniz Fatima against Musammat Zohra Bibi, Musammat Phundan and Ghazanfar Ali Khan. He then stated that he belonged to the Shaikh sect, known as Khanzadas, and that the custom in his family was that, if any Khanzada died leaving a biradari widow, a ghair-kuf son, and an own brother and his son, then the biradari widow would be entitled to be in possession of the property of her husband for her life without any power of transfer and that the brother and nephews of her husband would have in her presence no right. He admitted that he had not seen any decision or wajib ul arz and could give no instances; but he asserted that that was the custom in his family and that such cases had taken place in Paintipur and Mahmudabad. No wajib-ul-araz were prepared for the Mahmudabad and Bilehra estates to record the custom of inheritance prevalent among the proprietors thereof because the succession to those estates is governed by Act I of 1869, but the admission of two leading members of the Khanzada family with regard to the existence of the above custom, however damaging it may be, now to their interest, is entitled to considerable weight. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gauracharya a Prasad v. Superundharya Prasad (1), the existence of a custom in allied branches of a common origin lends strong antecedent probability to the prevalence of such a custom in the branch to which Musaffar Ali Khan belonged, and that probability is materially strengthened and confirmed by the entries as to custom dictated and verified by Musaffar Ali Khan himself and his brother, Nasir Ali Khan, at the time of the first Regular Settlement. The learned Subordinate Judge treated the statements made by Raja Ali Muhammad Khan and Raja Kazim Husain Khan as pertinent only to that branch of the family, to which each of them respectively belonged. But, even if that was so, those statements having been made by persons belonging to the families of the same group, have an important bearing on the question at issue, both as admissions made by transferees before they took the transfers and as evidence of the traditions existing as to such custom in other sections of that group.

The wajib ul-araz of the villages, Sadrawan and Bambhauri, have been referred to in support of the contention that the custom relied on was not uniform and invariable. The former records that a widow is not entitled under any circumstances to inherit the estate of a deceased husband, whether such estate is ancestral or self-acquired, and that if the owner of that estate dies childless his inheritance devolves upon his collaterals to the exclusion of the widow, who gets only maintenance (Exhibit A-44). The latter merely refers to the former (Exhibit A-45). But it is noticeable that both these wajib-ul-araz were dictated by Nasir Ali Khan on behalf of his father, Imdad Ali Khan, in 1870 and are materially inconsistent with what Nasir Ali Khan himself dictated earlier in 1867 when the wajib-ul-arz of the village Haswapur was prepared (Exhibit 51). The custom declared and verified by him in 1867 was that, if the wife of the biradari had no child, she would have a life estate in the share of her husband and after her that share would go to the brothers and nephews of her husband. In 1870 he felt impelled by a desire to have the property of his childless brother to declare that a widow was not entitled to any right whatsoever in the share of her husband beyond that of maintenance in direct contradiction of what he and the other members of the family belonging to the alleged groups had stated before.

There have been three instances in which the existence of the custom has been the subject of settlement by judicial decisions. The first of these cases related to some property which belonged to Tasadduq Husain. His widow, Musammât Asif un-nisa, was in possession of that property after his death. When she died, Musammât Azim un-nisa, the sister of Tasadduq Husain, and Zamin Ali, her son, sued to recover a portion of the estate from the father and brother of Musammât Asif un-nisa, who were in possession. The suit was defended chiefly on the ground of a family custom prevalent among Khazadas, by virtue of which, it was said, a widow succeeded to the estate of her deceased husband. The plea was, however, abandoned by the Counsel on both sides before the close of the hearing, and the only point at that time pressed for consideration was, whether the widow was in possession in lieu of her unsatisfied dower (Exhibit A-36). That decision is not, therefore, of much value. The second case related to the estate of Samsam Ali, who died leaving two widows both of whom divided the estate equally between themselves. On the death of one of the widows the other widow applied to have her name entered in respect of the share held by the deceased but she was opposed by Samsam Ali's brother's son. The dispute between these two persons was eventually referred to arbitration and an award was made allotting the share of the deceased widow to the nephew of Samsam Ali and dividing the moveable property left by her between him and the surviving widow. Subsequently, the surviving widow made a gift of a part of her share in favour of her brother's son. Thereupon, Abbas Ali, the brother of Samsam Ali, sued her and the donee for a declaration that the gift would be void as against him after the death of the donor, alleging that she had only a life interest in the share which she had inherited from her husband. The defence of the surviving widow was, that she had an absolute interest therein. The finding of this Court was, that the surviving widow derived her right from the custom of inheritance recorded in the wajib ul-arz and that under that custom she had no power of alienation (Exhibit 61). The third case related to the property of Ahmad Husain Khan, who died childless. His widow claimed inheritance on the basis of custom and was opposed by Nurul Hasan Khan, the brother of the deceased. The finding of Raja Ali Muhammad Khan, to whom the matter was referred for arbitration, was that the widow of Ahmad Husain Khan had failed to prove the alleged custom inasmuch as the entries in different wajib-ul-araz varied and the decision in the suit relating to the estate of Tasadduq Husain mentioned already was against its existence (Exhibit A-47). This award was filed in Court and a decree was passed in accordance with its terms on the 17th November 1905 (Exhibit A-48). The arbitrator was, however, the very person who, in his subsequent statement of the 10th November 1907, admitted that though there were many points on which the wajib-ul-araz were conflicting, the custom was that if a man left a widow and no children, the widow got a life-interest. In the face of that statement the decision of the arbitrator, which seems to have been largely influenced by the decision in Tasadduq Husain's case, wherein the question of custom was practically abandoned, can hardly carry any weight.

Some other instances have also been relied on in disproof of the custom set up by the plaintiff, but the evidence produced in support of those instances is vague and indefinite and does not exclude the possibility of transfers having been made inter vivos in favour of the person or persons who succeeded. The members of the Bazid Khani family are mostly Shias. Twelve out of fourteen wajib-ul-arais produced appear to agree in recognising the right of a childless widow to succeed to the entire estate of her husband, if he has died childless without leaving any other wife, in contravention of the Muhammadan Law which allows her no right whatsoever in the landed property left by her husband. Most of them expressly state that such a widow on succeeding to the property of her husband gets only a life interest; and these entries are corroborated by the oral evidence produced including the testimony of two such leading members of the Bazid Khani family as Raja Ali Muhammad Khan and Raja K. Zim Husain. The few wajib-ul-arais which gave a widow an absolute right were verified by persons who were agents not probably so well conversant with the details of the custom as some of the persons of the family themselves, who had dictated the remainder. I am not, therefore, prepared to reject the general trend of the testimony in favour of the existence of such a custom afforded by the remaining wajib-ul-arais and to hold that what was contained therein was prompted merely by the wishes or whims of the persons who dictated them, particularly when the wajib-ul-arais say in explicit terms that what they recorded was the custom or rule of inheritance prevailing in the family of the co-sharers.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant wanted to produce in evidence copies of certain other wajib-ul-arais belonging to allied branches which the Court below had refused to admit in evidence because they were filed too late. Considering that the plaintiff-appellant had sufficient opportunity of producing them before the evidence for the defendants began, there is no reason for showing him any indulgence at this stage.

The next question relates to the paternity of Ghazafar Ali Khan, who was born of Musammot Phundan. Musammot Phundan was originally a prostitute. But that fact did not deter Mrzaffar Ali Khan from marrying her, if he chose. In the previous suit filed by Ghazafar Ali Khan against Musammot Kaniz Fatima and another, it was held that Ghazafar Ali Khan was not the legitimate son of Mrzaffar Ali Khan, because there was no evidence of marriage between Musammot Phundan and Mrzaffar Ali Khan and no presumption of marriage could be made from prolonged cohabitation, for Musammot Phundan was, before she was brought to the house of Mrzaffar Ali Khan, according to the case of both sides, a prostitute [Ghazafar Ali Khan v. Kaniz Fatima (1)]. Some direct evidence in proof of the marriage has now been adduced which the Court below has disbelieved. Not having been produced in the previous case, it must naturally be regarded with considerable suspicion, and it would be unsafe to place any reliance on it. There is, however, some documentary evidence of an unquestionably genuine character, which is now forthcoming and has a bearing on the question of the acknowledgment and treatment of Musammot Phundan by Mrzaffar Ali Khan as his married wife. A deposition of Mrzaffar Ali Khan of the 26th April 1885 was filed in the previous suit in proof of the acknowledgment (Exhibit A-34); but it was held by this Court that, in view of the fact that Mrzaffar Ali Khan had several children born of Musammot Phundan, he might have considered it advisable to make the best of the existing state of affairs and given out that he was married to Musammot Phundan and recognised her as his wife whenever he spoke of her (Exhibit 29). A petition said to have been filed by Mrzaffar Ali Khan, in which Musammot Phundan was described as saor a apni (my wife) was also then discarded from consideration (Exhibit B-7) because it did not describe her as saor a mankuha apni (married wife). But a copy of the petition filed by Mrzaffar Ali Khan on the 13th June 1887 in the mutation proceeding instituted by him in respect of the village Sadrawan, now filed, shows that Mrzaffar Ali Khan had described Musammot Phundan as his married wife (saor a mankuha apni) (Exhibit B-7). Though this acknowledgment is open to the objection that it might have been made from ulterior motives to conceal what might otherwise have been a result of shame it is sufficient in the eyes of the Muhammadan Law to invest Musammot Phundan with the status of a married wife and her subsequent born children with the status of legitimacy, unless a marriage is shown to have been legally impossible. The object of an acknowledgment, as explained by Baillie, is the "giving of information for the establishment of a right in favour of another against oneself." The "acknowledgment by a man of a woman as his wife is valid when confirmed by her, and she is not married to another husband and the acknowledgor has not already her sister or four others living with him as his wives." (Baillie's Muhammadan Law, Volume I, page 405). "Where the acknowledgment of such a woman as wife is valid, it is obligatory not only on the acknowledgor and the person acknowledged but on other persons also (Ibid, page 405)." "A person may acknowledge another," says Ameer Ali, "as his or her father or mother or husband or wife: and such acknowledgment, if assented to or confirmed by the acknowledged, whether during the lifetime of the acknowledgor or after his or her decease, would constitute a valid relationship, in so far as the parties themselves are concerned." (Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Volume II, 4th Edition, page 273). He later on explains, quoting Fatawai Kazi Khan, that "when it has been said that the acknowledgment of a man is not valid in respect to those above mentioned, it is only meant that it is not obligatory on any other except the acknowledgor and the acknowledged: but with regard to such rights as affect them only, the acknowledgment is valid" (Ibid, 274). So says Tyabji: "Where either party has acknowledged that he or she was married to the other (and the other party has confirmed or acquiesced in the acknowledgment) it will be presumed that they are validly married unless prohibition to marry is established between them." (Tyabji's Muhammadan Law, page 100). The decision of this Court and of the Privy Council in the previous case is unquestionably entitled to the highest consideration and respect but it must be recognised that that decision was not between the parties to the present suit and as pointed out in Mahamad Amin v. Hasan (5) no person is to be concluded by a judgment in a case to which he was not a party.

The explicit admission made by Muzaffar Ali Khan that Musammot Phundan was his married wife was evidently not before their Lordships of the Privy Council; and, reading that admission with the subsequent conduct of Musammot Zohra Begam, the senior wife of Muzaffar Ali Khan, who joined Musammot Phundan in executing a deed of mortgage in favour of Raja Amir Hasan Khan on the 10th November 1892 wherein she described Musammot Phundan as the wife and Ghazanfar Ali Khan as the son of Muzaffar Ali Khan (Exhibit O13) and subsequently relinquished her rights in favour of Ghazanfar Ali Khan, describing him as a son of Musammot Phundan her co-wife (Exhibit A-28), there can be no doubt left that Ghazanfar Ali Khan was treated as a legitimate son of Muzaffar Ali Khan so as to give his transferees a valid title to the property he was transferring. For nearly 24 years the plaintiff took no action nor challenged the right of Ghazanfar Ali Khan whose name was entered in the revenue papers jointly with that of Musammot Zohra Begam in respect of the estate left by Muzaffar Ali Khan, deceased, (Exhibits A-29 and A-31). Musammot Zohra Begam died on the 9th August 1904 after she had surrendered her rights in favour of Ghazanfar Ali Khan on the 10th January 1899 (Exhibit A-25). The sale deed obtained by Raja Ali Muhammad Khan from Ghazanfar Ali Khan and Musammot Phundan was effected in lieu of money due on certain previous mortgages under which the mortgagor was in possession and that possession cannot, in any circumstances, be disturbed until the mortgages are satisfied, because those mortgages were made by Muzaffar Ali Khan himself.

I agree, therefore, in dismissing the appeal with costs.

On a contract of indemnity in a deed of sale whereby the vendor covenants to indemnify the vendee against the costs of litigation affecting the title to the property conveyed, the vendee is entitled to recover not merely the taxed costs, but the actual costs which he had to pay to his legal adviser, provided they are not unreasonable. [p. 165, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in Original Suit No. 28 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. V. Ramesam and V. Suryanarayana, for the Appellants.—The indemnity covenant does not make defendants liable for the costs of the suit which they instituted. The vendors agreed to remove obstruction at their own cost. The indemnity clause does not cover cases like the present.

In any event, the plaintiff is only entitled to the taxed costs and not to any fancy amount they might have paid to a lawyer. It would be straining the language of the covenant too far to hold that it should cover any excessive amount which a party may choose to pay to his Vakil.

Messrs. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, and A. O. Sampath Aiyangar, for the Respondents.—The indemnity clause covers a case where the vendee is obliged to institute a suit to support the vendor's title. The plaintiffs have incurred loss in that litigation and are entitled to be re-imbursed. The plaintiff is entitled to enforce the covenant.

Under the terms of the covenant the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the defendants all reasonable expenses incurred by them. That includes the amount that they actually paid to their Vakil. It was necessary to engage a Vakil of some standing and eminence in a suit like that which the plaintiffs conducted. In fact, the defendants approved of the plaintiff's choice of their Vakil.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada in a suit brought by the Zemindar of South Vallur against the defendants from one of whom he had purchased a certain village to recover the costs which he was put to in defending his title to the village against a third party. He bases his claim upon an indemnity contained in a deed of sale executed by the second defendant who was the actual vendor and also on a covenant contained in an indemnity-bond executed by first, third and fourth defendants, her husband and two sons respectively.

The Subordinate Judge has given judgment for the plaintiff and we think he is right. The covenants in the deed of sale and in the indemnity-bond are practically the same, and the covenant in the sale-deed is accurately translated in paragraph 8 of the Subordinate Judge's judgment. It says: "if the previous owners or any others setting up any rights by transfer from them or any other claiming themselves to be their heirs or any others claiming under any other title should lay any claim or file any suit regarding the title and interest of the property sold and if, by such claim or suit, any sort of loss should accrue to your title or enjoyment all such obstructions we will remove at our cost and secure to you absolute right and enjoyment." Now, although the language used here is somewhat cumbersome, we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the effect of these words is to impose upon the covenantor the duty of indemnifying the plaintiff from costs in suits like this in which he was obliged to defend his title to the village. However, the case does not stop there because the deed goes on: "Hereafterwards. (b) if any body should file suit, or (c) if there should be any dispute regarding the nature of the grant or of the tenure of the village from the Government or from any others and if there should accrue any losses on that account all those also we will remove at our cost and will secure to you absolute right and enjoyment." Now, we are clearly of opinion that, even if the first covenant is not clear these words are sufficiently wide to cover the present claim because a suit has been filed and loss has accrued on that account to the plaintiff who has had to defend the suit at great expense. Therefore, we hold that both the clauses contain a covenant of indemnity which the plaintiff is entitled to enforce in this suit.

The only other question which has been argued before us is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover only the taxed costs or costs between Solicitor and client or, what corresponds to that in this country, the actual costs which he has had to pay to his own legal adviser. We are only concerned in this case with the practice in cases of indemnity such as the present and with regard to such practice it appears to be well-settled law in England that a party is entitled to recover costs as between Solicitor and client and it obviously must be so because, unless it were so, there would be really no indemnity at all. That has been laid down by the high authority of Lord Tenterden in Smith v. Compton (1), by Kelly, C. B., and Martin, B., and Piggot, B., in Howard v. Lovegrove (2) and Buckley, J., as he then was, in Great Western Railway Company v. Fisher (3). The system of awarding costs in litigation is somewhat different in England from what it is in India. There is no system here of taxing costs as between a client and his Vakil. We do not lay down that under such contracts anything which a party had agreed to pay or actually paid could be recovered without regard to whether his conduct was reasonable or not; there can be no question here that what was paid was reasonable having regard to the condition of things prevailing here and was such a payment as would have been allowed if there were taxation here as between client and Vakil corresponding to taxation between solicitor and client in England. No better proof of that need be mentioned than the fact that the defendants approved of the engagement of the late Mr. V. Krishnasami Aiyar, one of the leaders of the Bar in Madras, and when he became a Judge they suggested to the plaintiff that he ought to get another Vakil of the same position at the Bar which, of course, meant that he should be retained upon somewhat similar terms. It cannot be suggested that there was anything unreasonable in the conduct of the plaintiff or that he incurred any expense which he ought not to recover under his contract of indemnity.

(1) (1832) 3 B. & Ad. 407; 1 L. J. K. B. 146; 110 E. R. 146.

We may also mention as regards this point that notice was given at a very early date to the defendants in this suit which had been instituted against the plaintiff inviting them if they liked to come in and conduct the defence.

The only other point is as regards interest. The plaintiff has claimed, and the Subordinate Judge has allowed, interest at 9 per cent. Having regard to the position and the general circumstances of the case, we think that the rate of 6 per cent. is quite adequate and we accordingly vary the lower Court's decree by giving 6 per cent. instead of 9 per cent., otherwise the appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKSJE, ACRA. C. J.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has led up to this appeal is a dargah (mausoleum or shrine of a Moslem saint) situated in Clive Street in this City. The case for the plaintiff is that she was in possession as mutwalli for many years, till the defendant, her son-in-law, after the death of his wife, wrongfully interfered with the performance of her duties on or about the 18th May 1918. She accordingly instituted the present suit on the 30th May 1918, for declaration that the defendant was in wrongful possession of the dargah, for recovery of possession from him, and for incidental reliefs. The defendant resisted the claim on the allegations that the plaintiff had renounced the mutwalliship in favour of her husband who had been installed as the sanjadanashin, and had performed his duties as such till his death in 1911, that thereafter the defendant had been installed as sanjadanashin, and that he was lawfully in possession of the dargah at the date of the institution of the suit. Mr. Justice Greaves has decreed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff was lawfully in possession as mutwalli and that the defendant, even if selected sanjadanashin, by the fakirs, could not successfully resist her claim to recover possession as mutwalli. The defendant has appealed against this decree. Before we deal with the questions raised before us, it is necessary to set out the history of this endowment so far as it can be gathered from the materials on the record.

In 1834, the property was in the possession of one Jutty Shah who described himself as the khodim and mutwalli of the holy shrine of Hazrat Joomma Shah. On the 19th October 1834, he executed a testamentary instrument which recites that his ancestors had, from generation to generation, acted as mutwallis of the shrine and that he himself had for a period of about sixty years performed the duties of the office, "according to the former rules and long-established usages." By this document, Jutty Shah appointed his infant son, Sheikh Mehtur, to succeed him as mutwalli after his death, and nominated several Moslem gentlemen to perform the duties appertaining to the holy shrine till his son should attain years of discretion; a set of detailed rules for the management of the endowment was appended to the instrument. On the death of Jutty Shah, his son (called Mehtur or Nadir) held the office of mutwalli till his death in 1858. The mutwalliship thereupon passed to Ahmed Shah (said to be a nephew of Jutty Shah), but under what exact circumstances this happened cannot be ascertained at this distance of time. Ahmed Shah held possession as mutwalli till his death, which took place on the 12th May 1873. We find that on the very next day, the 13th May 1873, Korban Shah, the son of Ahmed Shah, executed a deed in favour of his son, Vilayet Hossain, whom he appointed as mutwalli and trustee of the Will of Jutty Shah. The reasons for this appointment cannot be discovered, but it appears from the document that Korban had lost his wife and the deed enjoined Vilayet Hossain to perform ceremonies, according to orthodox Moslem customs and usages, at the grave of his mother Amina Bibi. Vilayet Hossain continued to hold the office of mutwalli till his death, which happened on the 16th August 1880. During his term of office as mutwalli, Vilayet Hossain instituted a suit in 1875, on the Original Side of this Court, against one Choones Bibi who was in possession of a portion of the trust properties on the strength of a purchase from the previous mutwalli, Ahmed Shah, in 1867. The result was that the purchaser defendant disputed the title of Vilayet Hossain to hold the office of mutwalli. Mr Justice Phear found that Ahmad Shah had succeeded Nadir Shah as mutwalli and held that, as he had exercised undisturbed the right of mutwalli for nearly fifteen years, he might be presumed to have been lawfully appointed. As regards Vilayet, however, Mr. Justice Phear held that as admittedly he had no title by actual appointment, he could not maintain the suit as framed in his character as mutwalli; nor had he a right to enjoy the property as secular property by right of inheritance. The plaintiff was, in these circumstances, given leave to amend the plaint, but what followed does not appear from the record. The fact remains, however, that, although the effort of Vilayet Hossain to restore to the endowment, property alienated by his predecessor thus proved ineffectual, he continued to hold the office of mutwalli, and, previous to his death, he made a testamentary disposition on the 4th September 1874. At the time of his death, he left him surviving his widow Imamunnessa (daughter of one Mahomed Musa) and his own daughter by her, Hazra Bibi (who is plaintiff in the present litigation). Vilayet Hossain, by his Will, appointed his daughter Hazra Bibi as mutwalli of what he described as "Jutty Shah's Imambara and dargah in Clive Street" and all properties moveable and immovable appertaining thereto. During the minority of his daughter, however, the management was vested in his widow Imamunnessa. The Will further provided that the widow would cease to hold the appointment if she took a second husband or lost her virtue; in either of these events, Mahomed Musa, the father-in-law of the testator, would discharge the duties of mutwalli during the minority of Hazra Bibi. Disputes broke out shortly after the death of Vilayet Hossain, and we find that two suits were instituted in 1881 and 1882 by Mahomed Musa for proof of his Will in solemn form, for its construction, and for ascertainment of the rights of the parties thereunder. On the 28th August 1883, Mr. Justice Morris appointed a Receiver of the estate in the suits mentioned and directed the payment of Rs. 170 a month to Imamunnessa as also the expenses of the religious ceremonies. Imamunnessa died in 1893, before the termination of the suits. On the 16th January 1902, Mr. Justice Sale made a consent decree on the basis of terms of settlement which were ordered to be carried out. The premises now in dispute were declared to be trust properties incapable of partition and division; at the same time, Hazra Bibi was appointed mutwalli of the trust properties and was authorised to conduct and carry out the religious trust according to an approved scheme. The decree thus made in 1902 terminated the dispute as to the succession to the office of mutwalli, and Hazra Bibi, who had been married to one Jalil Shah, continued peacefully to perform her duties till the defendant appeared on the scene. Hazra Bibi had a daughter, Chahaty Bibi, who was given in marriage to the defendant Kassim Hossain. There can be little doubt that the defendant was first allowed to take up his residence at the Imambara as the son-in-law of the mutwalli Hazra Bibi, and the evidence shows unmistakably that he lived there amicably for five or six years after his marriage, which took place in 1911 or 1912. Chahaty Bibi, however, unluckily for all parties concerned, died towards the end of the year 1917, and, as might be anticipated, her death affected a considerable change in the position of the defendant. Feelings gradually became estranged, and the defendant ultimately set up a title to the disputed properties on the allegation that he had been elected sajadanashin by the fakirs and other worshippers who congregate in the dargah. Such, in outline, was the position of the parties when the controversy between them was brought into Court for determination. The questions which emerge for consideration from the arguments addressed to us may be formulated under two heads as follows, namely, first, had the plaintiff title to the office of mutwalli of the disputed properties at the date of the institution of the suit; and, secondly, was the defendant appointed as sajadanashin; if so, did such appointment affect the title of the plaintiff as mutwalli.

KASSIM HASSAN V. HAZRA BEGUM.

As regards the first question, namely, whether the plaintiff had a valid title to the office of mutwalli at the date of commencement of this litigation, we must not overlook two outstanding features of this case. In the first place, it is plain that the office of mutwalli has been held successively by members of the same family. The testament of Jutty Shah executed in 1834 recites that he had been in possession as mutwalli for sixty years in succession to his ancestors, who had successively held the office and discharged its duties from generation to generation. After Jutty Shah, the office was held successively by his son Nadir and his nephew Ahmed, and, thereafter, by Korban (the son of Ahmed), by Vilayet (the son of Korban), and by Hazra (the daughter of Vilayet). In the second place, each incumbent has taken it upon himself to nominate his successor in the office of mutwalli. It is not for us to determine now, whether such appointments could or could not have been validly made; but, notwithstanding the general rule enunciated in the cases of Atimunnessa Bibi v. Abdul Sobhan (1) and Phatmabi v. Abdulla Musa Sait (2), that no right of inheritance attaches to the office of mutwalli, the question may well arise whether the uniformity which characterises the successive appointments for nearly a century may not improbably indicate that the practice had a lawful origin in the directions given by the original founder, though they can no longer be traced with certainty from the lapse of time. Apart from this, what is of vital importance to the case of the plaintiff is that her great grandfather, Ahmed Shah, held the office of mutwalli for fifteen years from 1808 to 1823 and that thereafter, by virtue of the deed executed by her grandfather Korban Shah in favour of her father Vilayet Hossain, the latter held the office for seven years from 1873 to 1880. Thereafter, the plaintiff herself has held the office, without interruption, as we shall presently see, from 1880 to 1916. The testament of Vilayet Hossain vested the office of mutwalli in his daughter from the time of his death, subject to the reservation that during her minority the management would be carried out by his widow Imamunnessa, or, in certain events, by his father-in-law Mahommed Musa. Such possession of the office of mutwalli, whether by Imamunnessa or by Mahommed Musa, would plainly be on behalf and for the benefit of Hazra Bibi. We are not unmindful that by the decree of Mr. Justice Norris, made on the 28th August 1883, the properties were placed in the hands of a Receiver; but in view of subsequent events, this did not operate to interrupt the possession of the office of mutwalli by Hazra Bibi. It is significant that the order for appointment of Receiver included a direction for the payment of a fixed sum to Imamunnessa on whom was cast the duty of management of the waqf estate by the Will of her husband during the minority of her daughter. Besides this, the decree ultimately made by Mr. Justice Sale on the 16th January 1902, confirmed the appointment of Hazra Bibi as mutwalli of the trust properties. In our opinion, it is indisputable that the office of mutwalli has been vested in Hazra Bibi by the Will of her father and has been held by her without interruption from the time of his death in 1880 till 1902 when her appointment was confirmed by an order of this Court. It is equally plain on the evidence that after 1902, Hazra Bibi held the office of mutwalli, till her title was questioned and her possession was disturbed by the defendant, immediately before the suit. We are in agreement with Mr. Justice Greaves when we hold that we cannot possibly accept as well founded the assertion of the defendant in his written statement that Hazra Bibi renounced the office of mutwalli so as to allow her husband to instal himself as the sajjadunashin. In our opinion, it is fully established by satisfactory evidence that Hazra Bibi has held the office of mutwalli from 1880 and has been in possession thereof by performance of the duties attached thereto, either herself or through her deputies, for a period of not less than thirty-six years. What, then, is the legal effect of such possession of the office, even if we assume for a moment that her nomination to the office of mutwalli was not validly made or was not confirmed by a kazi or by a judicial officer of equivalent status? The obvious answer is, that the plaintiff has acquired a good title to the office of mutwalli by reason of her possession thereof for the statutory period. The principles applicable in such circumstances were explained in the case of Salimulla v. Abdul Khayer Mohammad Mustafa (3). It is indisputable that a claim to office and to property appurtenant thereto may be barred by limitation. The decisions in Balwant Rao v. Puran Mal (4), Jagan Nath Das v. Birbhadra Das (5), Kidambi Ragava Chariar v. Tirumalai Asari Nallur Raghava-chariar (6) show that if the office is not hereditary, Article 120 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act is applicable. If, on the other hand, the office is hereditary, Article 124 governs the matter; Nilakandan v. Padmanabha (7), Alagirisami Naicker v. Sundareswara Ayyar (8), Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (9), Annasami Pillai v. Ramakrishna Mudaliar (10), Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (11) affirmed on appeal to the Judicial Committee: Ramanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (12) and Lilabati Misra v. Bishun Ohobey (13). The substance of these decisions is that a trusteeship with power to appoint a successor is well-known to and recognised by law and may be prescribed for; in the case before us, it is immaterial whether Article 120 or 124 or 144 is held applicable. When title has been so acquired by statutory operation, it is plain that the title of the true owner is not revived by re entry, in other words, even if the lawful owner should re acquire possession, he is not thereby remitted to his original title. This view is supported by the decisions in Brindaban Ohunder Chowdhury v. Tarachand Bindopadhyas (14), Dalip Rai v. Deoki Rai (15),

Vasudeva Padhi v. Maguni Devan (16), Lilabati Misra v. Bishun Ohobey (13) which accord with the rule recognised in Brassington v. Llewellyn (17), Bryan v. Cowdall (18), Jolly, In re, Gathercole v. Norfolk (19), Dawkins v. Penrhyn (Lord) (20), Beamish v. Whitney (21) and Beamish v. Whitney (22). The validity of these principles has not been questioned, but the argument has been put forward that the plaintiff was disqualified, by reason of her sex, from appointment to the office of mutwalli and could not, consequently, be deemed to have acquired title to such office by prescription, on the analogy of the rule recognised by the Judicial Committee in Bhaia Thakur v. Jharula Das (23) which reversed the decision of this Court in Jharula Das v. Jalandhar Thakur (24). This contention is fallacious, as it is based on the erroneous assumption that a woman is incompetent, under the Muhammadan Law, to hold the office of mutwalli. The true rule on the subject was enunciated by Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar in Munnavaru Begam v. Mir Mahapalli (25). A religious office can be held by a woman under the Muhammadan Law, unless there are duties of a religious nature attached to the office, which she cannot perform in person or by deputy, and the burden of establishing that a woman is precluded from holding a particular office is on those who plead the exclusion. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Shahoo Banoo v. Aga Mahomed Jaffer Bin lancem (26) takes the same view and shows that if the religious duties connected with a religious office are such that a woman cannot properly discharge in person or by deputy, then she cannot be appointed to that office. This doctrine is based on the fundamental distinction between the temporal affairs of a mosque and the spiritual functions connected with it; Hussain Beebes v. Hussain Sherif (27), Imam Bee v. Molla Khasim Sahib (28), Mujavar Ibrambibi v. Mujavar Hussain Sherif (29). A similar distinction has been recognised also in the case of Hindu endowments; Dhuncooverbai v. Advocate-General (30), Mohan Lalaji v. Madhusudan (31). We cannot, consequently, accept the contention of the defendant that the plaintiff is incompetent to hold the office of mutwalli. It has next been argued that the plaintiff should not be allowed to succeed on the basis of prescriptive title to the office of mutwalli when such a case was not expressly made in the plaint. There is clearly no substance in this contention. The relevant facts were fully set out in the plaint and the plaintiff asked for a declaration, not that she was mutwalli by appointment or by hereditary succession, but that on the facts stated the defendant was in wrongful possession and should, consequently, be ordered to deliver up quiet and peaceful possession to her. There is no room for suggestion that the defendant has been taken by surprise and he has thus no foundation for a grievance. As ruled by this Court in Sundari Dass v. Mudhoo Chunder Sircar (32), a plaintiff may be allowed to succeed on a title by adverse possession, pleaded even for the first time in the Court of Appeal, provided such a case arises on the facts stated in the plaint and the defendant is not taken by surprise. It was pointed out in the case of Ram Chandra Sil v. Ramanmani Dasi (33) that this view is supported by a dictum of Lord Davey in Vasudeva Padhi v. Moguni Devan (16), though the contrary opinion has sometimes been maintained. The same rule was adopted in the cases of Nepen Bala Debi v. Sati Kanta Banerjee (34) and Lilabati Misra v.

Bishun Ohobey (13). We hold, accordingly, that at the time of institution of this suit, the office of mutwalli was legally vested in the plaintiff and on that basis she was entitled to possession of the trust estate.

As regards the second question, we have to determine whether the defendant was appointed a sajjadanashin, and, if so, what was the effect of such appointment upon the title of the plaintiff as mutwalli. It may be conceded that there is some evidence to show that the defendant got himself elected as sajjadanashin; but this is not sufficient to enable him to resist the claim of the plaintiff for there is no satisfactory evidence of a custom for the appointment of a sajjadanashin in this religious endowment in addition to a mutwalli. Even if we accept as reliable the evidence adduced by the defendant to make out the alleged election of his father in law and of himself as sajjadanashin in 1904 and 1912, respectively, that does not establish the existence of a custom for the appointment of a sajjadanashin. The undoubted fact remains that although, according to the recital in the Will of Jutty Shah, the endowment has been in existence for at least a century and a half, there is no trace of a sajjadanashin before the alleged election of Jalil Shah in 1904. The true position and functions of a sajjadanashin will be found explained in the judgment of Mr. Justice Amir Ali in Piran v. Abdol Karim (35), which was followed in Mahiduddin v. Sayiduddin (36):

"The sajjadanashin has certain spiritual functions to perform. He is not only a mutwalli, but also a spiritual preceptor. He is the curator of the dargah where his ancestor is buried, and in him is supposed to continue the spiritual line (silsilla). As is well-known, these dargahs are the tombs of celebrated dervishes, who in their lifetime were regarded as saints. Some of these men had established khankahs where they lived and their disciples congregated. Many of them never rose to the importance of a khankah, and when they died their mausolea became shrines or dargahs. These dervishes professed esoteric doctrines and distinct systems of initiation. They were either sufis or the disciples of Mian Roushan Bayezid, who flourished about the time of Akbar, and who had founded an independent esoteric brotherhood, in which the chief occupied a peculiarly distinctive position. They called themselves fakirs, on the hypothesis that they had abjured the world, and were humble servitors of God: by their followers they were honoured with the title of Shah or King. Harklot (Qanoon-e-Islam, 1832, Chapter XXVIII) gives a detailed account of the different brotherhoods and the rules of initiation in force among them. The preceptor is called the pir, the disciple the murid. On the death of the pir, his successor assumes the privilege of initiating the disciples into the mysteries of dervishism or sufism. This privilege of initiation, of making murids, of imparting to them spiritual knowledge, is one of the functions which the sajjadanashin performs or is supposed to perform," Kiran v. Abdool Karim (35).

"So long as he lived the founder himself was the sajjadanashin, 'the one seated on the prayer mat;' in other words, the chief or superior. After his death some one among his heirs, indicated by him as qualified to initiate the murids into the mysteries of the tarikat or holy path, succeeds him in his office of sajjadanashin. He is not only a mutwalli but also a spiritual preceptor, and in him is supposed to continue the spiritual line (silsila). There are abundant indications on this record that this is exactly the case with the khankah of Sasseram. Shah Kabir was, as his title shows, a dervish, and from the evidence of the defendant it is clear that the doctrines supposed to be inculcated by these men are, as he calls it, of tassawuf or sufism. We have dwelt so far on the character of the institution, in order to show how materially it is connected with the personality of the sajjadanashin or superior. He is an integral part of the institution and the central figure, so to speak, therein. Its existence depends on his personality. This is evident from the very terms of the grant in question. The grant no doubt is to the khankah, but the enjoyment is given to the dervish and his descendants, generation after generation. The works they have to perform, and the disciples they have to maintain, are all part and parcel of their own selves. The urs, the fatehas, etc., are of their deceased ancestors." [Mohiuddin v. Sayiduddin (36).] See also Secretary of State v. Mohiuddin Ahmad (37).

The substance then is that the sajjadanashin maintains unbroken the spiritual line from the original preceptor. In the case before us, however, there never was a sajjadanashin, before 1904; there is no room for a theory that the original founder expressly directed that a sajjadanashin should be appointed from time to time. There is also no custom indicative of his wishes in the matter. There has not been a line of spiritual preceptors, an apostolic succession of spiritual curators. In such circumstances, it is impossible to hold that a person in the position of the defendant, can by the device of an election by fakirs and other worshippers force himself on the institution as sajjadanashin. The essence of the matter is, that there is no office of sajjadanashin in this institution to which the defendant could have been lawfully elected; for, such an office could exist only by virtue of the direction of the spiritual founder or by a valid custom. It is, consequently, plain that the defendant has acquired no legal status which can possibly enable him to defeat the claim of the plaintiff as mutwalli.

The result is that the decree made by Mr. Justice Greaves is confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

NACHIPARAYAN V. NARAYANA GOUNDAN.

Where a person has enjoyed a right of way for over 20 years over another person's land, and that right is interrupted, the benefit of the previous enjoyment will be destroyed unless he comes within two years of the interruption and gets a decree declaring his right. [p. 173, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 224 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirupur, in Original Suit No. 468 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Sankara Menon, for the Appellant.—There was undoubted enjoyment of the right of way by the plaintiff for 20 years peaceably and uninterruptedly. He did not acquiesce in but protested in the defendant's obstruction of it for four years before suit. Under explanation (2) to section 15, Easements Act, there is no interruption unless the obstruction is acquiesced in.

Mr. S. Subramanya Aiyar, for the Respondents.—Section 15 of the Easements Act expressly requires that the 20 years enjoyment should terminate within two years before suit. Otherwise, no absolute right of easement will be acquired by any anterior peaceable enjoyment for 20 years. The English law on which the Indian enactment was based is more stringent. The English law requires that the peaceful enjoyment for 20 years must be immediately prior to suit.

JUDGMENT.—The contention of the appellant in this case is, that he enjoyed a right of way over the first respondents' land peaceably and without interruption for a period of twenty years. But it is found that, for four years before the institution of the suit, the plaintiff did not enjoy any such right of way being effectively prevented from doing so by the first respondent. Those being the facts, the learned Judge held that the plaintiff's suit failed by virtue of the provision of section 15 of the Easements Act that, "each of the said periods of twenty years shall be taken to be a period ending within the two years before the institution of the suit wherein the claim to which such period relates is contested." The argument on behalf of the appellant is that since the appellant had enjoyed for a period of twenty years the right claimed by him peaceably, openly and without interruption, it made no difference that for four years before the institution of the suit he was prevented from using the pathway inasmuch as he never submitted to it but protested against such obstruction. He relies on explanation (2) to section 15 which lays down that "nothing is an interruption within the meaning of the section unless where there is an actual cessation of enjoyment by reason of an obstruction by the act of some person other than the claimant and unless such obstruction is submitted to or acquiesced in for one year after the claimant has notice thereof." This argument, if given effect to, would really abrogate the condition laid down in that very section that, in order to the right of easement being acquired, the enjoyment of such rights must not only be peaceable, open, and without interruption but such enjoyment must extend to within two years before the institution of the suit. The language of the section seems to be clear that the enjoyment for a period of twenty years must terminate within two years prior to the institution of the suit, otherwise his enjoyment of a right contemplated in section 15 for a period of 20 years, however long, prior to the institution of the suit, would give a person who so enjoyed it an absolute right of easement although for years prior to the suit he never exercised such right at all. That would be really violating the policy apparently underlying the law of easements. The English law of easements on which the Indian law of easements is practically based though with some difference, as has been pointed in some of the cases, in this Court, requires that the 20 years enjoyment of the right must be next previous to the institution of the suit. That is what the English Statute requires, and this is explained in Glover v. Coleman (1) by Mr. Justice Brett as he then was. The same view of the law is taken for granted in Flight v. Thomas (2). The Indian Legislature in this connection has departed from the English rule to this extent that it lays down that it would be sufficient that if the enjoyment for a period of 20 years extended within two years before the institution of the suit instead of being immediately previous to the institution of the suit, and the rulings of the Indian Courts are unanimous on the point. In this Court the law is explained in Kuthu Goundan v. Anantha Goundan (3). In the Allahabad High Court in Sultan Ahmad v. Waliullah (4) and Muhammad Maroof v. Sultan Ahmed (5), and in the Calcutta High Court in Janhavi Chowdhurani v. Bindu Bashini Chowdhurani (6) and in Jeggernath Barj v. Kanai Das Byragi (7). As pointed out by Chamier, J., in Sultan Ahmad v. Waliullah (4), the result of the Easements Act and the similar provisions of the Limitation Act is that a right of easement cannot be said to be perfected until the right is declared by a decree of Court, that is to say, a person may enjoy a right of way or right to access of light and air over the servient tenement for a period of twenty years, but if he is interrupted afterwards for one year and the interruption is acquiesced in the benefit of the previous enjoyment will be destroyed unless he comes within two years of the institution of the suit and gets a decree declaring his right.

It was also suggested by the learned Vakil for the appellant that his client had an immemorial right and that, in the circumstances, a lost grant ought to have been presumed in his favour. But this question was not properly raised in the Trial Court.

The result is that the second appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal arises out of an action instituted by the plaintiffs-respondents to enforce a mortgage-bond executed by one Bachu Koer, a Hindu widow, in their favour. Bachu Koer is now dead and the suit was resisted by the reversioners on various grounds. The bond was for a sum of Rs. 2,300 but it was conceded at the trial that only a sum of Rs. 1,220 was advanced to Bachu Koer, and the plaintiffs claimed a decree for Rs. 1,220 with interest thereon at the rate of 2 per cent. per month.

The plaintiffs' case is that, Rs. 500 was advanced to the widow on the date of the execution of the mortgage and Rs. 720 was set off against certain antecedent debts due to the plaintiffs. Now the Court of first instance gave the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 600. There was an appeal to the lower Appellate Court by both the parties. That Court, having considered all the evidence in the case, has given the plaintiffs a decree for the whole amount claimed, namely, Rs. 1,220, with interest at 2 per cent. per month.

RADHA KISHUN V. JAG SAHU.

In this Court the first point that was argued before us was that there is no mortgage at all inasmuch as the bond was not attested in accordance with the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. The lower Appellate Court has not dealt with this argument at all. It is but reasonable to presume that the point was never argued before that Court. We gave liberty to the learned Vakil, when the case was last argued before us, to file an affidavit before us, stating on oath that the point was argued before the lower Appellate Court. That affidavit has not been filed before us and we must hold that the point was never argued before the lower Appellate Court.

The learned Vakil, however, contended that he was entitled to argue the point as a matter of law but he conceded that he must accept the finding of fact of the Court of first instance. On this point the Court of first instance said as follows:—"The two marginal witnesses and the plaintiff Mooni Lal did not, of course, see Bashu Kuar who was a pardanashin lady but they saw her signing the bond and impressing it with her seal through the pardah which was hanging between them and Bashu Kuar, and Mooni Lal knew her by her voice." If there is evidence to support the finding, it must follow that the attestation was a proper attestation. The first objection urged on behalf of the appellants must accordingly be overruled.

I now come to the items comprising the sum of Rs. 1,220 for which the plaintiffs have obtained their decrees. As I have mentioned before, Rs. 500 was advanced on the date of the execution of the bond and the balance, namely Rs. 720, was in respect of two promissory-notes, one for Rs. 400 and the other for Rs. 300, Rs. 20 being the interest that had accrued due on the promissory-notes. So far as the first item is concerned, namely, Rs. 500, both the Courts have concurrently found that there was legal necessity for the loan. It was argued before us, however, that it has not been shown that the widow obtained any independent legal advice. It seems to me that if the necessity for the loan is established and if it is further established that the creditor made due enquiries about the necessity, it is not necessary for the creditor to show that the lady, in entering into the transaction, had independent advice.

But it was argued before us that upon the findings of the Courts below the necessity for the loan has not been established. It appears from the document itself that Rs. 500 was advanced to Bashu Kuar for meeting the expenses of an appeal in the Calcutta High Court and for some saruri khurach. It has been found that there was in fact at that time an appeal pending in the High Court which had arisen out of a suit instituted by one Martin Gregory against the lady. Martin Gregory was the manager appointed by her to look after the estate, and it appears that the suit of Martin Gregory was a suit for salary due to him. It further appears that the appeal of the lady partially succeeded, but Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick argued before us that the salary of Martin Gregory was payable not by the estate but by the lady herself and, therefore, she was not entitled to incur that expense as representing the estate of her deceased husband. The Court of first instance has gone into the matter very fully. That Court has shown that there was an attack on the entire estate by one Sahodra Kuar, the daughter-in-law of Bashu Kuar. It appears that Sahodra Kuar propounded a Will to defeat not only the claim of the lady but also that of the reversioners. If that Will was established then, necessarily, the reversioners could claim no interest in the estate at all. The litigation, it appears, came to an end in 1900 but the Court of first instance has found that the trouble was not over till many years after and that Sahodra Kuar had succeeded in stopping collection. It became necessary, in the circumstances, for the lady to appoint a competent man to protect the estate as against one who had put forward a hostile title not only to the widow but to the entire estate. In my view, a widow is entitled to incur expenses necessary to the well being of the estate and if she is entitled to incur a debt in the proper management of the estate, I do not see why that debt should not bind the reversioners. On the finding of the Court of first instance she did employ Martin Gregory in the course of her management of the property. I am unable to say that the employment was not for the benefit of the estate. That being so, the claim of Martin Gregory was a claim against the estate and the widow was entitled to appeal from the decree allowing in full the claim of Martin Gregory, and as that appeal partially succeeded, I must hold that the money was borrowed for a necessary purpose.

The next item is one for Rs. 400. In regard to this item the Courts have differed in their opinion. The promissory-note recites that the money was borrowed for litigation expense and saruri kharach. The Court of first instance thought that as there was nothing to show that the litigation had reference to the estate at all and also as there was nothing to show how much was borrowed for litigation and how much for saruri kharach, the plaintiffs were not entitled to succeed. The lower Appellate Court, however, has recorded a finding that the litigation referred to in the promissory-note was the litigation between Mr. Martin Gregory and the lady. That being so, I agree with the lower Appellate Court that the estate is liable in respect of this item.

The last item is for Rs. 200 which was paid to one Pokur Mull in satisfaction of a decree in execution of which some of the properties were put up for sale. It has been found that Pokur Mull supplied clothe to the lady. It has been found that there was a constant pressure on the estate due to the hostile attack made on it by Sahodra Kuar. But the Court of first instance thought that as there was nothing to show that the cloth was purchased for her use or for the use of her dependents the claim in respect of Rs. 200 could not succeed. The learned Judge thought that, upon the facts established, namely, that there was a constant pressure on the estate and that she was in the habit of buying clothe from Pokur Mull, it was a reasonable inference that the cloth was purchased for the use of Bachu Kuar or her family. In my view, the learned Judge was entitled to draw this inference from the facts established in the case. I am of opinion that the learned District Judge has taken an entirely correct view of the matter and I would accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

A rent suit was tried by a Deputy Collector exercising the powers of a Deputy Commissioner under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act and was decreed ex parte. The defendant's application to set aside the ex parte decree was dismissed in default, and a further application for restoration of the previous application was also dismissed. He then filed an appeal to the Deputy Commissioner who set aside the ex parte decree and remanded the suit for re-trial:

Held, (1) that there was no provision in the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act for restoration of an application to set aside an ex parte decree which had been dismissed for default, and that, therefore, the second application made by the defendant to the Deputy Collector was incompetent; [p. 176, col. 1]

(2) that no appeal lay to the Deputy Commissioner against the order dismissing that application; [p. 176, col. 1.]

(3) that the Deputy Commissioner's order setting aside the ex parte decree was, therefore, without jurisdiction; [p. 176, col. 1]

(4) that the Deputy Commissioner having acted without jurisdiction, his order could not be revised by the Revenue Authorities under section 217 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act; [p. 176, col. 2.]

(5) that, therefore, the High Court had jurisdiction to revise the order, which, being without jurisdiction, must be set aside. [p. 176, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The facts of the case out of which this application for revision arises are these: In Rent Suit No. 1770 of 1908 the plaintiff obtained an ex parte decree against the defendant for Rs. 169 on the 19th of February 1918. The suit was tried by a Deputy Collector, exercising the powers of a Deputy Commissioner within the meaning of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. On the 4th of March 1918 the defendant filed an application to set aside the ex parte decree. That application was dismissed for default on the 21st of March. The defendant made a further application for a restoration of his petition of the 4th of March 1918. That application was dismissed on the 23rd of April 1918. The defendant then filed an appeal to the Deputy Commissioner who, on the 5th of July 1918, set aside the ex parte decree and remanded the rent-suit for re-trial. It is against this order of the Deputy Commissioner that the present application, under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, is made to us.

It is contended that the Deputy Commissioner had no jurisdiction to direct the re-trial of the original suit. It appears that section 227 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act allows a defendant to set aside an ex parte decree by making an application to the Trial Court. It is clear that the application under this section is to be made to the Deputy Commissioner, if he has tried the suit himself or to the officer who has exercised his powers in that respect in his behalf. It is not to be made to the Deputy Commissioner if he was not the Trial Court.

If the Deputy Collector refuses to restore the case then there is an appeal under section 228 to the Deputy Commissioner. The Act does not make any provision for the restoration of an application under section 227 which was been rejected by the Trial Court unless, perhaps, by way of review of judgment. It is contended, therefore, on behalf of the petitioner that the application for restoration which was dismissed on the 23rd of April 1918 was not entertainable by the Deputy Collector, and that no appeal against that order of dismissal lay under section 228 to the Deputy Commissioner. The learned Vakil for the opposite party replies to this as follows. He says that under section 265 of the Act the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code apply and confer upon the defendant the right to make an application for review of the judgment of the 21st of March 1918 and that the order of the 23rd of April 1918 granting the review was an order appealable under section 215 of the Act, to the Deputy Commissioner. The contention therefore, is that, apart from section 228, there was an appeal to the Deputy Commissioner under section 215. The first reply to this is that if the Deputy Commissioner was entertaining an appeal against the order of the 23rd of April 1918 then he had no right to set aside the order of the 19th of February 1918. The second reply is that section 215 only gives a right of appeal in respect of orders (as distinguished from judgment in suits and certain other orders) passed under the provisions of the sections which precede section 215. An order made under section 265, therefore, is not appealable under section 215. The third reply is that section 265 confers a right of review against a judgment. The order of the 21st of March 1918 dismissing the restoration application for default was not a judgment and, therefore, there was no right of review against it. Therefore, the last application to the Deputy Collector which was dismissed on the 23rd of April 1918 was not entertainable and, therefore, an appeal also is not competent, whether under section 215 or any other section.

The learned Vakil for the opposite party finally contends that, as section 217 gives the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue revisional powers in respect of orders made under section 215 by the Deputy Commissioner, we should not interfere. That would be a perfectly valid contention if there was such a remedy obtainable from the Revenue Authorities. But section 217 only gives the Revenue Authorities power to interfere in respect of orders by the Deputy Commissioner under section 215 if he has jurisdiction. Where the Deputy Commissioner makes an order without jurisdiction, the Revenue Authorities clearly cannot interfere under section 217. The application, therefore, will be allowed and the order of the Deputy Commissioner dated the 5th of July 1918 be set aside with costs, hearing-fee two gold mohurs.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

DANIELS, A. J. C.—This is a first appeal in a suit for possession on the basis of a sale deed, dated the 11th of June 1909, executed by the first four defendants in favour of the plaintiffs in respect of an area of 149 bighas, 9 biswas in Matza Nasia included in Tendwa Ujar. The following short pedigree will serve to elucidate the facts of the case:—

At the time of execution of the sale-deed the property was in possession of certain third persons who were usufructuary mortgagees, and a sum of Rs. 825-8-0 was, therefore, included in the sale price to cover the delay which must occur in the plaintiffs' obtaining possession. The remainder of the consideration consisted of Rs. 3,277 payable in respect of prior simple mortgages containing a personal covenant to re-pay and Rs. 1,157-6-0 paid in cash. After the termination of the usufructuary mortgages the plaintiff attempted to obtain possession but were resisted by the defendants. They have filed the present suit in consequence.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that no part of the consideration was incurred either for legal necessity or for antecedent debt within the meaning of the Privy Council ruling in Sahu Ram Ohandra v. Bhup Singh (1), and has dismissed the suit in toto. The plaintiffs-appellants contest both these findings except as to the item of Rs. 1,157-6-0 which was paid in cash. As to this they suggest that the principle laid down in Buntyad Husain v. Mata Din Singh (2) and Gur Sahai v. Girdhar Lal (3) should be followed, and that if the sale deed as a whole is found to be valid it should not be set aside because a minor portion of the sale price was paid in cash. To this contention we accede. It was taken for granted at the time of argument that if the decision on the main question was in the appellants' favour the appeal would be allowed.

The case originally came before a single Judge of the Court, but has been referred to a Bench in order to put an end to a conflict of rulings in this Court as to the effect of the Privy Council decision in Sahu Ram Ohandra v. Bhup Singh (1). Before dealing with this main question, there is one minor point to be considered. It will be seen from the pedigree already given that all the remaining defendants are sons of one or other of the four executants. The whole family has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge to be joint. It has been argued on behalf of the respondents, and the argument found favour in the lower Court, that because each of the remaining defendants, though a son of one of the executants, is also a nephew of the others, the rule of antecedent debt cannot apply as a nephew is under no obligation to pay the debt of his uncle, nor can he be bound by an alienation made by him except for legal necessity. This argument is, we think, fallacious. Each of the defendants, assuming the debt to be antecedent, is bound by the act of his own ancestor. In one of the Privy Council rulings to which a reference has been made in connection with the case, Girdhari Lal v Kantoo Lal (4), some of the deeds in suit were executed by ancestors representing two branches of the family.

Apart from the above objection, the only question which has been argued before us is the question what constitutes antecedent debt for the purpose of supporting an alienation of joint family property by a Hindu father or grandfather. The answer depends on the interpretation to be placed on the decisions of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). Prior to their Lordships' decision, it had long been considered to be settled law that a genuinely antecedent debt, whether secured by a mortgage or not, was sufficient to support a sale or mortgage of the joint family estate. The question which has given rise to doubt is, whether their Lordships intended to disturb that rule and, if so, to what extent. Three different views have been taken. The Allahabad High Court has held that an antecedent debt to be binding must be an unsecured or simple debt (Vide Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (5)). In support of their view they take their stand on the passage in their Lordships' judgment which runs:—

"In their Lordships' opinion these expressions, which have been the subject of so much difference of legal opinion, do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. The exception being allowed, as in the state of the authorities it must be, it appears to their Lordships to apply and to apply only, to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which do not personally belong to him but are joint family property."

This view has also been approved by the Patna High Court [Sukhdeo Jha v. Jhapat Jha (6)]. On the other hand a Full Bench of the Madras High Court, in an elaborately reasoned judgment, has held that the words quoted must be interpreted with reference to the facts of the case under decision and that, where the debt is genuinely antecedent to the transaction in dispute, it is still binding even though secured by a mortgage (Vide Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (7)). In this Court a third view was taken in two Bench rulings. The Court accepted the position that, whether the debt pleaded as antecedent is a mortgage debt, it could not as such be binding, but held that where there was a subsisting personal obligation to pay the debt so incurred, it might in virtue of this personal obligation be treated as antecedent debt for the purpose of the rule (Vide Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (8) and Gur Sahai v. Girdhar Lal (3)). The first of these rulings was passed in June 1918 and they are regarded as settling the law for this province. Nearly a year later, another Bench of the Court declined to follow the previous curius curie and adhered to the Allahabad view [Vide Muhammad Baqar Ali Khan v. Hozuri Lal (9) and Ohandika Baksh Singh v. Widow of Jagan Singh (10)]. Subsequently, a third Bench, consisting of the two of the three permanent members of the Court, in an unpublished ruling in First Civil Appeal No. 39 of 1919 [Bharat Singh v. Sarsuti Singh (11)] has reverted to the view taken in Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (8). Such being the state of authorities, this appeal has been laid before us with a view to obtaining a definite ruling which shall settle the law for the Courts in Oudh until such time as the conflict of opinion may be settled by a further pronouncement from the Privy Council itself.

As we are considering the effect of a ruling of the Privy Council it is instructive to see, in the first place, what the precise question was which their Lordships set out to determine. The facts were of a very simple character. The plaintiffs-appellants were claiming to recover the sum of Rs. 15,000 by sale of the joint family property on the basis of a mortgage originally executed on January 6th, 1883, for a sum of Rs. 200 only. The mortgage was executed by Bhop Singh alone in lieu of a cash advance. The contesting respondents were his sons and grandsons. In the ordinary sense there was no antecedent debt whatever. The argument placed before their Lordships was substantially to the effect that, in a suit on a mortgage, the debt must necessarily be antecedent, because the proceedings to enforce the mortgage take place long after the debt was incurred. A Calcutta ruling was cited in support of this view. It was on this point, as the cases cited by their Lordships sufficiently show, that this conflict of authorities had occurred to which their Lordships desired to put an end. As their Lordships point out, there had been conflicting decisions on the same point even in the same High Court. The conflict is well illustrated by two cases cited in the judgment itself. In Ohidambara Mudaliar v. Koothaperumal (12) it was held that in the case of a mortgage debt incurred by the father the debt is the primary obligation and the mortgage is only collateral security for its discharge. According to this ruling, there is no distinction in principle between a mortgage given for an antecedent debt and a mortgage given in lieu of an advance made contemporaneously. On the other hand, in Venkataramanaya Pantulu v. Venkataramana Doss Pantulu (13), the same High Court held that a sale or mortgage of joint family property by a father is only binding on the son's share when it is made in lieu of a debt existing prior to the sale or mortgage.

The same two opposing views are to be found in the majority and minority judgments in Ohandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (14). There was not, and never had been, any doubt that a genuinely antecedent debt would be binding whether secured by a mortgage or not. In this conflict of authorities their Lordships expressed their approval of the view taken by Sir John Stanley and the majority of the Full Bench in Ohandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (14), which held that the loan in lieu of which the mortgage was executed was not an antecedent debt, so as to enable the family property to be sold up in execution of the mortgage.

Having regard to these considerations, the reasonable view appears to me to be that, though the language of their Lordships may be open to a wider interpretation, they were dealing with the actual question which had come up for decision and that, in using the words "incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or security afforded or available by such joint estate," they were dealing only with the security which the creditor was seeking to enforce against the joint family estate. The question of a debt incurred wholly apart from that transaction but secured by some prior mortgage was not before them. There is great force in the remark of the learned Chief Justice of the Madras High Court that, when their avowed object was to settle a conflict of authorities on a particular question it is most unlikely that they should have gone out of their way to unsettle what was treated as settled law in all the High Courts in India. If they had intended to do this, the judgment would surely have given some indication of their intention. I would express my entire agreement with the following passage in his Lordship's judgment in

RAM DEO v. SURAJ BAKSH.

Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (7):—

"Having regard to their Lordships' express statement that the enunciation of the principle these terms was intended as a guide to the decision of the controverted question before them, I do not think we should be warranted in extending its application to a case which was not before them and involves considerations which are not referred to in their judgment, especially when such an application of the principle would have the effect of disturbing what has long been regarded as settled law and would give rise to great uncertainty as to existing titles."

In the same case Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar remarks in his referring order, page 715*: "It seems to be rather a startling proposition that while an antecedent debt of a simple character whether contracted orally or under a simple debt bond can support a subsequent mortgage or sale of the sons' share also in the ancestral property, the fact that the antecedent creditor got the additional security of a mortgage deprives the subsequent alienor of the right given by the Hindu Law to rely upon the antecedent character of the debt discharged by the consideration paid for his alienation. The point directly decided in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) is that a loan, contemporaneous with or just previous to the date of a mortgage transaction, could not be treated as an antecedent debt."

This interpretation is supported by the concluding passage in the judgment of the Privy Council itself. In that passage they proceed to state:

"The appellant's argument in support of the validity of the mortgage also took this shape. It was said:—'What difference would it make if the father had contracted the debt an hour, a day, a year before granting the mortgage? Then de facto it would be an antecedent debt, and the creditor would have a mortgage good upon that ground.' Their Lordships cannot assent to any such proposition that a mortgage on the family estate would follow the loan. The case as put might instantly raise the presumption that what occurred was substantially this: that the father contracted the debt knowing that he was at the end of his personal resources and that the creditor advanced the money relying upon an understanding or agreement, express or implied, given to the father. In truth, in order to validate such a transaction of mortgage there must, to give true effect to the doctrine of antecedency in time, be also real dissociation in fact."

This passage appears to me to show clearly that, in using the words "independently of the security afforded by the joint family property", their Lordships had in mind the security which the mortgagee was seeking to enforce and not a prior and independent hypothecation.

It will be conceded that the most authoritative commentary which it is possible to obtain on a Privy Council judgment is a later judgment of the Privy Council itself. In this case we have such a commentary in the decision in Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram (15), the decision which has not been referred to in either of the two judgments in Muhammad Faqir Ali Khan v. Harari Lal (9) and Chandika Baksh Singh v. Widow of Jagan Singh (10). In that judgment Lord Haldane summed up the effect of the ruling in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) as follows:—"In that case it was laid down in effect that joint property could not be alienated as against co-sharers by way of mortgage, or otherwise, except for necessity, or for payment of an actual antecedent debt, quite distinct from the debt incurred in the mortgage itself, and that in consequence the transaction in that case could not stand, and it was added that the mere circumstance of a pious obligation does not validate the mortgage."

In view of the elaborate argument which has been addressed to us and the fact that I was a party to the two earliest Bench rulings of this Court in which the Privy Council decision was discussed, I have felt it right to set out my personal view on the question at issue in some detail, but having regard to

(a) the importance of settling the law once for all until such time as the question is finally decided by the Privy Council itself;

(b) the fact that the question is one which has caused much difference of opinion among the Judges of the Court and that my learned colleague is disposed to differ from me and to accept the view which has prevailed at Allahabad and which found favour with the Judges who decided Muhammad Bazar Ali Khan v. Hazari Lal (9), and

(c) that the conflicting decisions of this Court have been a source of much uncertainty and harassment alike to litigants and to the subordinate Courts of the Province, my learned colleague and I are agreed that the only satisfactory course to take is to fall back on the principle of stare decisis and to re-affirm the view laid down in Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (8). That view, after being accepted for a year, was temporarily disturbed by the two decisions to which reference has been made, but it has been re-affirmed in the latest Bench decision and in a single Judge decision of still later date and we consider, whatever our individual views may be, that we ought to follow it. Except on the ground which we have overruled at the outset of this judgment, it is not disputed that the bulk of the consideration for the deed in suit must be treated as antecedent debt if the rule laid down in Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (8) is accepted. I would accordingly allow the appeal and decree the plaintiffs' suit with costs in both Courts.

WAZIR HASSAN, A. J. C.—My learned colleague has in his elaborate judgment given expression to the opinion which I personally held on the question of an antecedent debt as settled by the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). If the matter were res integra and I were free to differ from my learned colleague on that point I would have certainly done so: but in view of the considerations set out in the judgment of my learned colleague I think that I must bow to the principle of stare decisis in this case and, therefore, I agree in the order proposed to be passed by him.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 653 OF 1919.

KILLAMSETTI APPANNA—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Arbitration—Award—Arbitrator, one, absence of, from one meeting, whether vitiates award.

An arbitration award is not vitiated by the mere fact that at one of the meetings of the arbitrators one of them was absent, where it is shown that nothing material was done at that meeting which in any way affected the award.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1902, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the District Court, Ganjam at Barbampore, in Appeal Suit No. 193 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Chicacole, in Original Suit No. 6-6 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. Narayana-murthi, for the Petitioner.—The award should be the corporate, deliberate opinion of all the arbitrators. It is necessary for the validity of the award that they should all have met and applied their minds to the questions at issue. Here, one of the arbitrators, D. W. No. 3, was absent at one of the meetings. That is enough to vitiate the award. See Thammiraju v. Bapiraju (1) and Nand Ram v. Fahir Chand (2).

Mr. L. S. Veeraraghava Aiyar, for the Respondent.—The finding of both the lower Courts is that no enquiry took place and nothing of importance was done on the day when D. W. No. 3 was absent. The arbitrators did the enquiry too and all material sittings were in conclave. The award is not void by reason of the absence of an arbitrator at a purely formal and unimportant sitting.

JUDGMENT.—The first objection to the award is that the arbitrators acted beyond the scope of the submission in including in their award a decision about gunny bags and mustard seeds. This objection depends solely on the construction of Exhibit M. I think that the District Munsif's view about it is correct as the document speaks of "all other matters" also. The next objection taken is that at one of the hearings one of the arbitrators, D. W. No. 3, was absent and it is contended, on the strength of the rulings in Thammiraju v Bapiraju (1) and Nand Ram v. Fakir Chand (2), that this vitiated the award altogether. No doubt on one day when the arbitrators met D. W. No. 3 was absent and though D. W. No. 4 says some information regarding the price of gingelly was obtained from the parties that day, it is contradicted by P. W. No. 3, one of the three arbitrators, and he is supported in a way by the evidence of P. W. No. 2. The third arbitrator P. W. No. 3 says no enquiry took place on the day D. W. No. 3 was absent. The District Munsif has found that no enquiry took place on that day and the District Judge has not displaced that finding. That being so, the absence of D. W. No. 3 for one day was immaterial, as nothing material seems to have been done that day which in any way affected the award.

The rulings quoted, therefore, do not apply.

The civil revision petition is dismissed with costs.

Bengal Patni Taluks Regulation (VIII of 1819), ss. 8, 14—Sale, notice of, manner of publishing—Irregular sale, nature of—Second sale during pendency of proceedings to set aside first sale, effect of

Where it is proposed to hold a sale under the Patni Taluks Regulation of a patni for arrears of rent due in respect thereof, the Regulation does not require that notice of the sale should be served personally on the defaulter: the posting of the notice at the Cutchery of the defaulter is a sufficient publication thereof, the receipt of the defaulter or his manager being merely evidence that the notice has been so published [p. 18, col. 2.]

An irregular sale of a patni is not void, but voidable, but it can only be avoided by a suit properly framed under section 14 of the Patni Taluks Regulation [p. 18, col. 1.]

Where during the pendency of proceedings to set aside an irregular sale, a second sale of the patni is held, the second sale is part of the first and will stand or fall with it. [p. 18, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Burdwan, dated the 21st of February 1918.

Sir Rash Behari G'ose, Babus Basanta Kumar Bose, Bepin Behari Ghose, II and Sarat Kumar Mitra for the Appellant.

Babu Karunamoy Ghose, for defendant No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit originally brought by the plaintiffs to set aside the sale under the Patni Regulation of a patni known as Lot De-bibarpur for arrears of rent due in respect thereof for the year 1322. The plaintiffs are some of the many co-sharers in the patni and own between them a one anna, nine panda three kara share; Mritunjoy Ghose, the defendant No. 1, was the purchaser at the sale on the 15th May 1916. The Maharaj Adhiraj of Burdwan, the Zamindar, is the defendant No. 2.

During the pendency of the suit the rent due for the first half of the following year 1323 being in arrears the patni was again sold on the 16th November 1916 and was purchased by Niranka Chandra Bose. The plaint was accordingly amended. A prayer for setting aside the second sale was added and Niranka was impleaded as defendant No. 22.

The Court below found that the first sale was irregular and set it aside. It was further held that the second sale fell with the first, the proceedings having been taken in the name of Mritunjoy, the purchaser at the first sale.

The appellant before us is the Zamindar, the Maharaj Adhiraj of Burdwan.

MAHARAJADHIRAJ OF BURDWAN V. MRITUNJOY GHOSE.

The notice of the first sale was duly stuck up as the Regulation requires in the Collectorate and at the Sadar Cutchery of the Zemindar. So far, we are in entire agreement with the Subordinate Judge.

The appeal depends, in the first instance, on the question of fact whether the notice was "similarly published at the Cutchery or at the principal town or village upon the land of the defaulter." The Regulation provides that this Muffassal notice "shall be served by a single peon who shall bring back the receipt of the defaulter or of his manager for the same." If such a receipt is not procurable provision is made for other evidence of the publication of the notice.

Now, the peon employed by the Zemindar on this errand was Surendra Nath Ghose. He has been examined as a witness and swears that he took the notice to the Cutchery of Atul Krishna Ghose, one of the patnidars, at Debibarpur, and that Atul's gomashta, Rakhal Chandra Sai, wrote three names at the foot of the receipt, his master's name which he wrote at his master's request, his own signature and the name of the chukidar Benimadbab, who was present at the time. According to the Regulation, the signature of the gomashta or manager was in itself a sufficient receipt and as against the plaintiffs it is matter for comment that neither Atul himself nor his gomashta were put in the witness-box to contradict the peon. Rakhal is also the gomashta of Nrisingha Chandra Ghose, one of the patnidars, and a witness for the plaintiffs. Another witness, Mongolleswar Buxi, says he was Atul's Tehsildar. We are satisfied that he was a 'manager' within the meaning of the Regulation. The learned Subordinate Judge has disbelieved the peon's evidence mainly on the ground that the day on which the notice is said to have been served was also the day on which the marriage of Atul's son was celebrated and though other co-sharers in the patni, such as Pulin Behari Ghose, Nirmal Chandra Ghose and Mohini Mohan Ghose, were present on the occasion at his house, yet the peon made no endeavour to take a receipt from any of these persons. This argument does not appear to us to be of any great weight.

Atul was the largest co-sharer. He owned a third share of the whole. The share of the four plaintiffs is, as we have said, only one-anna, nine gandras odd. The balance belonged to the defendants described as proforma defendants who have not joined as plaintiffs in the suit who have not entered appearance, and among whom Atul is included.

The question whether the publication of the notice at Atul's Cutchery was a sufficient compliance with the law was not raised in the Court below, and was adverted to, but not argued, before us. Strictly speaking, the Regulation does not require personal service of the notice of sale on the defaulter. It requires the notice of the sale to be stuck up at the defaulter's Cutchery. The receipt of the defaulter or his manager is merely evidence that the notice has been so published. All the defaulters in the present case had their Cutcheries, or places where they did their business, at Debibarpur and there can be no doubt that the principal Cutchery was that of the principal share-holder, Atul. As the plaint shows, the proceedings were taken in the name of Ram Chandra Ghose and we gather that the patni was registered in the Raj office in that name. Ram Chandra is dead, and the observation of this Court in Rainarain v. Ananta Lal (1) probably explains why the objection formulated in the plaint was abandoned. We propose, therefore, to deal with the case on the footing that publication at Atul's Cutchery was sufficient.

On that footing, no formal objection lies because the receipt was not signed by the other co-sharers or any of them and we fail entirely to see why that fact should afford any ground for suspecting the truth of the peon's narrative still less for rejecting it off-hand.

The peon, we may mention, has been in the service of the Raj for seven or eight years and is presumably, therefore, an experienced hand, well acquainted with his duties. His antecedents are not satisfactory. He has served a sentence of one and a half year's imprisonment for forging pay bills. But we are not told how long it is since he came out of prison and the proof of the publication of this notice does not rest on his unsupported word.

(1) 19 C. 703 at p. 717; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 911

It appears that the practice of the Raj office is to utilize the post for the purpose of making sure that the peon goes to the place where the notice has to be published. The peon is directed after publication to despatch a postcard intimating the fact from the nearest post office. There is no Post Office at Debitarpur, but there is a letter-box in which the peon says, he posted his card. The card passed through the Aharbelpa Post Office, as the post mark shows, on the 26th April 1916, the date of publication. It was in due course received at the Raj office and is produced in this case (Exhibit D). There is no dispute that Debitarpur is served by the Aharbelpa Post Office.

The learned Judge finds fault with the peon for not mentioning in the post-card the fact that publication was made in Atul's Cutchery. As we have said, the object of the post card is to ensure the peon's presence at the spot and for that purpose details such as these are unnecessary. The post-card states quite sufficiently that the peon had proceeded to Lot Debitarpur and served the notice there by hanging it up.

The defendant No. 2, the Maharaja, relied on the evidence of the peon on the receipt and on the corroborative evidence afforded by the post card. Other witnesses were examined by the auction-purchaser, the defendant No. 1. They all give evidence, more or less positive, in support of the publication of the notice. The learned Subordinate Judge has rejected their testimony for reasons which in some instances at least do not carry their own recommendation with them. There is no very apparent reason why the evidence of the Pleader, Dakhina Ranjan Buxi, corroborating that of the peon as regards the posting of the post card, should not be accepted. Nor do we see why Sohi Bhusan Buxi should be summarily dismissed as untrustworthy. The Subordinate Judge says he is siding with the defendant No. 1. No reason is given for that statement and the witness himself says that his son had a dar patni interest which he lost owing to the sale. The son apparently is Janaki Nath Buxi who was examined as a witness for the plaintiffs. The evidence of Janaki Nath Banerjee, who also speaks to the notice being published, is not referred to by the Subordinate Judge. At the time this witness was in Atul's service, though he is now in the service of the Bakshis of Debitarpur. He accompanied Atul to the Collectorate when the patni was sold. But we do not propose to discuss the whole of the evidence in detail, or to reverse the decision of the Subordinate Judge merely because we might be disposed to take a different view of the credibility of this witness or that. The case does not depend entirely on oral testimony and the evidence must be considered as a whole with reference to its character and the mode in which it should be approached and dealt with.

In the first place, if some of the evidence for the defence must be discounted as that of partisan witnesses, a similar criticism applies to the evidence for the plaintiffs. Mohini Babu, on whom the Subordinate Judge relies, has, no doubt, a respectable position but he is one of the defaulting patnidars and a plaintiff. Nirmal, Polin and Nrisingha Ghose are also defaulting patnidars. They appear in the category of pro forma defendants and, supporting as they do the plaintiffs' case, it is not clear why they did not join in bringing the suit. Two of the other four witnesses who speak to not seeing the peon at Atul's house are dar-patnidars whose interests were destroyed by the sale.

Secondly, the evidence of the plaintiffs is wholly of the negative description. The peon and Rakhal may have been at Atul's house without the witnesses seeing them.

Again, the evidence for the defence was taken first and the plaintiffs had to meet that evidence. If they were to succeed they were bound to challenge the receipt produced by the peon. The defence could not be expected to call Atul, the principal patnidar, or his manager, Rakhal. In our opinion, as we have already indicated, it was plainly incumbent on the plaintiffs to put those persons in the witness-box. Some attempt has been made to explain the omission to do so. The explanation, however, is unsatisfactory. It appears that Atul had originally claimed to be co purchaser of the patni with the defendant No. 1 in equal shares. But the defendant No. 1 had refused to admit the claim and before the trial of the present suit, Atul had himself instituted a suit to set aside the second sale of the patni and to have it declared that if both sales were set aside he was entitled to his original share in the patni. In paragraph 7 of his plaint (Exhibit I) he stated that he did not join as plaintiff in the present suit because the plaintiffs had made false aspersions on him in their plaint. The plaint in the present suit does accuse the pro forma defendants of colluding with the defendant No. 1. That, however, did not prevent the plaintiffs from calling three of the pro forma defendants as witnesses and there seems no reason why they should not have called Atul likewise. The plaintiff, Mohini Babu, himself said that Atul was not siding with any party. In any case, the omission to call Atul and Rakhal must tell against the plaintiffs. The judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge in this connection speaks with an uncertain sound and we are unable to follow him.

We may add that we have not forgotten that the chaukidar, Benimadhub, was not called by the defence but his evidence would have been of quite minor importance.

On the whole case, we have come to the conclusion that the evidence adduced for the plaintiffs is essentially weak evidence and, even if we leave out of account the witnesses examined on behalf of the defendant No. 1, the balance inclines in favour of the peon's story. Regard being had to the receipt, the issue really becomes whether Rakhal was present during the whole or any part of the marriage ceremony on the 26th April. The plaintiffs' witnesses say that he was not there or that they did not see him. But there are the names on the receipt which the peon says were written by Rakhal. There is no evidence that they are not in Rakhal's handwriting. The post-card shows that the peon was in the neighbourhood. If then we take it, as we think we ought to take it, that Rakhal wrote the names, he was also in the neighbourhood. If the peon was in the village, there is so much the less reason to doubt that he performed his duty. If Rakhal was there, he would naturally attend the ceremony at Atul's house to which the peon would also be attracted. The circumstances and the probabilities combine to favour the truth of the peon's story which we must end by accepting. We are both of opinion that the appeal should succeed.

In coming to that conclusion we have attached no importance to the fact that some of the patnidars attended the sale on the 2nd Jaistha. It was held on the 2nd as the first of the month fell on a Sunday. If a patnidar does not pay his rent he knows that his potni will probably be put up for sale on the next sale day. The rent of the patni seems never to have been paid in proper time. There were 22 co-sharers who could not agree and rent was never paid before proceedings were taken under the Regulation to compel payment. The patni, it would also seem, is not a very profitable one. The collections amount to sum Rs. 1,900. The rent is Rs. 1,655 and, in addition, there are the collection charges.

The first sale standing, the evidence establishes, and before us it was hardly disputed, that the second sale must stand also. The proceedings were taken in the name of the defendant No. 1, the auction-purchaser, and were duly and regularly conducted throughout.

As the case may possibly go further, we ought not to leave it without noticing the argument urged upon us on the appellant's behalf that, even if the first sale be held irregular, the second sale, the prescribed formalities in respect thereto having been observed, would be valid and effectual. The argument proceeds on the ground that an irregular sale under the Regulation being not void but merely voidable the first sale remained valid till it was rescinded. The purchaser at that sale acquired a lawful title with the right to possession. He was recorded as potnidar in the landlord's office. The mere institution of a suit would not affect his title which could only be destroyed by the avoidance of the sale. Meanwhile, proceedings taken against the tenure standing in his name would be according to law. Proceedings under the Regulation, it was added, are taken not against the person or the patnidar but against the tenure. If the original potnidars impeached the validity of the sale it was their duty to protect themselves by paying the rent during the pendency of their suit. Otherwise, it was said, if the purchaser defaulted, the landlord would have no means of recovering his dues.

Reference was made to Ranee Surno

MAHARAJADHIRAJ OF BURDWAN V. MRITUNJOY GHOSE.

Moyee v. Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (2) for the purpose of showing that neither the landlord nor the auction-purchaser are guilty of trespass by reason of an informal sale before the sale is avoided. The case also shows that the landlord is not without remedy for his rent. The rule of limitation applied would be equally applicable under the present Limitation Act and nothing more need be said about the recovery of the rent.

In Rajnarain v. Ananta Lal (1), cited above, a question arose whether proceedings taken in the names of deceased patnidars were valid. Much stress was laid on a passage in the judgment of Tottenham, J., at page 717, in which, speaking for himself and Ghose, J., he says that "proceedings under the Patni Regulation taken for the realization of arrears of patni rent are not taken against persons at all, but against the tenure. And the Zemindar is quite right in setting out in his petition and notices the name of the patni and the name of the patnidar as recorded in his books." The learned Judge, however, differed on another point on which the case went off. In any case, neither the passage cited nor the similar language used in the earlier case of Raghub Chunder Banerjee v. Brojonath Kosndoo (3), carries the argument to the necessary length.

Reliance was also placed on Suresh Chandra v. Akkori Singh (4). But that case is not much in point. The plaintiffs there were se-patnidars and the suit was not a suit under section 14 of the Regulation. It related only to a small portion of the patni. The case, no doubt, is authority for the proposition that an irregular sale is not void but voidable. It is also authority for the view that a sale can only be avoided by a suit properly framed under section 14. But nothing was decided as to the effect of a successful suit under the Regulation.

The case cited on the other side of Joykrishna v. Sarfannessa (5) is more to the purpose. The plaintiff was the transferee of a patni tenure who had not registered his name in the landlord's office. He brought his suit under section 14. The landlord pleaded that he was not bound to recognise the plaintiff as his tenant and that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue or to be restored to possession. The Court (Sir Comer-Petheram, C. J., and Tottenham, J.) held that "the effect of setting aside the sale will be that the parties must be reinstated in their original position."

Nothing is gained by describing proceedings for sale as proceedings 'in rem'. The Zemindar sells in the exercise of a statutory power of sale. The rights and duties of the parties are governed by the Regulation which makes the Zemindar "exclusively answerable" for the observance of the forms prescribed (section 8). The purchaser obtains a statutory title to have his name registered in the Zemindar's office and to obtain possession (last clause of section 5). But the validity of the title and the validity of the registration depend on the validity of the sale which is the foundation of the new position created. A second sale, pending proceedings to set aside the first, rests on that foundation, secure or insecure as the event may determine. The second sale is part of the superstructure and will stand or fall with the first.

In the present suit both sales were challenged and, if we had agreed with the Subordinate Judge as regards the first sale, we should also have agreed with him as regards the second.

With these observations, the appeal is allowed; the appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court and the Court below, to be paid by the principal respondents, the plaintiffs in the suit.

The respondents Nos. 1 and 21 (defendant No. 22) are also entitled to the costs actually incurred by them in this Court and the Court below. They will receive between them in equal parts one-quarter of the hearing fee of this appeal. The balance of the hearing fee will go to the appellant, the Maharaja.

Land Acquisition Act (1 of 1894), ss. 11, 12—Acquisition of land for purposes of quarrying—Compensation, method of assessing.

Where a piece of land is compulsorily acquired for quarrying purposes its special adaptability for quarrying is an element for consideration in fixing the amount of compensation, and the basis for calculating the amount to be awarded is the present value of what might be expected to be realized in the future. [p. 188, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the award of the District Court, Tinnevely, in Compensation Reference No. 7 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. V. Muthu Krishnier for Mr. T. M. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The lower Court erred in refusing to go into the question of the special value of the land as a gravel quarry. The use to be made of the land for quarrying should have been taken into consideration in fixing the compensation though it was acquired as cultivable land. People would be willing to pay a substantial price owing to its possessing a more than normal value. See Daya Khushal v. Assistant Collector, Surat (1).

Mr. V. Ramesam, the Government Pleader for the Respondent, agreed that the market-value of the land as a gravel quarry should have been considered in fixing the compensation but objected to the Court's acting on the evidence of witnesses for the owner which was all guess work and no witness adopted an accurate method of calculation.

JUDGMENT.—The main question in this appeal is whether the lower Court was right in awarding compensation for the land acquired as cultivable land and not as a gravel quarry. The lower Court refused to award as for a gravel quarry on the ground that the only demand for the produce of the land as a quarry came from the District Board, a public body, on account of which the acquisition was made, and it referred to the proviso I of section 24 of the Land Acquisition Act and the judgment of Lord Moulton in Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board, In re (2). We need not say much regarding this part of the case, because the learned Government Pleader has not disputed that the lower Court erred in refusing to consider the character of the land as a gravel quarry. It is sufficient to refer to a quotation from the judgment of Mr. Justice Grove in Countess Ossalinsky and Manchester Corporation, In re (Browne and Allan's Law of Compensation, 2nd Edition, page 659) extracted in the judgment of Vaughan Williams, L. J., in the case referred to by the District Judge: "The only one of those that can apply to this case is the latter one that the arbitrator has acted ultra vires; in other words, that he has made an element of his calculation of the value of this land that which legally cannot or ought not to be an element in its consideration, namely, the enhanced value of the land on account of its capability of being used for diverting and impounding water or of being converted into a reservoir, or for any useful purpose for which persons would pay a substantial price. It appears to me that that in itself is not an objection to the award and that the arbitrator, ought to take that into consideration. If the land has what I may call an adventitious value, that is, something beyond its mere agricultural or normal value (and that is a marketable value in this sense, that persons wishing, for a purpose for which the land is peculiarly applicable, to purchase that land would give a higher price for that land) then the arbitrator has a fair right to take that into consideration: it is a matter, no doubt, contingent: but, still, it is a matter which is not to be ignored or put out of consideration by an arbitrator." The portion of Lord Moulton's judgment to which the learned District Judge refers must be with reference to the circumstances of the acquisition, which was then under contemplation. That acquisition was of a piece of land, which was of no value for agricultural or other purposes to any one except to the public authority, which was proposing to use it for the construction of a reservoir. The circumstances of the present case are different, because the compensation is really being given for the gravel, the commodity, which the land proposed to be acquired contains and which has had in the past and must be considered as having in the future a market-value independently of the fact that its permanent acquisition is now under consideration. The decision in Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board, In re (2) was referred to in Daya Khushal v. Assistant Collector, Surat (1), and we respectfully agree with the conclusion reached in that case that, when a piece of land is compulsorily acquired for quarrying purposes, its special adaptability for quarrying is an element for consideration in fixing the amount of compensation. This conclusion entails dissent from the decision of the lower Court.

We have then to decide what is the proper amount to be awarded on the basis that the land is to be compensated for as a quarry. Firstly, there is before us no finding regarding the amount of gravel on the land. But it is not suggested that the land will be of value for any other purposes. If it is used as a quarry, we can found our award on the amount of gravel which can be realized. The witnesses estimate the amount of gravel at 2,000 to 3,000 cart-loads of gravel per acre. This evidence is, of course, indefinite. The witnesses, in fact, say that they are merely guessing; but we think that they probably mean that they are making the best estimate they can. It is suggested that we can reach no conclusion on this evidence, because it includes nothing to show that any accurate method of estimating was adopted by any witness. It is true that there is nothing regarding the depth of the gravel at any particular place. We find, however, that the question was fully in issue before the lower Court and, if the witnesses were not cross examined with regard to the manner in which they made their estimates, or with regard to their failure to ascertain the depth of the gravel, that is the fault of the Government. Moreover, on the side of Government there is no counter evidence. We, therefore, act on such evidence as is available and, taking the lowest figure spoken to by any of the witnesses, we find that there are 2,000 cart-loads of gravel per acre.

The next question is as to the valuation of this quantity of gravel. There is some very vague evidence as to the value of a cart-load of gravel from the claimant's witnesses and there is some evidence from the Government witnesses as to the price paid by Government for gravel at a quarry four miles distant and as to the cost of transporting that gravel. It is clear, however, that better evidence must be available, because we know that the Government has recently been buying gravel from the quarry now under acquisition and it should be possible to prove the price which the Government actually paid for gravel from it. That evidence would clearly be the best; and we must express our surprise that it was not laid before the lower Court. As the record stands, we do not feel able to come to any satisfactory conclusion on this part of the case. There is, moreover, another point, which does not seem to have been considered on the evidence, but which should have a material bearing on the conclusion. The price which ought to be allowed for a cart load of gravel must be influenced by the extent of the District Board's demand for it in the near future. For the value of the available gravel at the rate actually paid in the past could not be adopted without disregard of the District Board's loss of the use of the purchase money, which they will have to pay in a lump sum at once, or, to put it from the point of view of the owner of the land, the value to him is the price of the cart-loads of gravel to be extracted from time to time for a certain number of years, not the total value of the whole amount available paid at once. That is, it is the present value of what might be expected to be realised in the future. We must, therefore, call for a finding from the lower Court as to the rate per cart load at which compensation should be paid for the gravel on the land in the light of the foregoing. Fresh evidence may be taken. The finding is due in six weeks and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Acknowledgment—Debt referred to in subsequent document—Presumption—Acknowledgment of liability, what amounts to.

Where the acknowledgment of a debt is contained in a document which does not include any definite and certain reference to a debt, the subject-matter of a suit, the presumption, in the absence of any other debt proved to exist, is that the debt acknowledged is the debt under consideration and the burden of proving the contrary rests on the person disputing the debt. [p. 191, col. 2]

"An acknowledgment of liability" under section 19 of the Limitation Act need not necessarily be in respect of the particular relief prayed for in a suit or application. It is a sufficient acknowledgment if it is of liability, whether pecuniary or in relation to other obligations, and is in respect of the property or right which is the subject-matter of the suit or application. The identity of the liability acknowledged need not correspond with the nature of the relief which a plaintiff seeks on the cause of action which embraces his right, and upon which he comes into Court, nor need the specification of the nature of the property or right be exact. JUDGMENT.—On the 22nd September 1909 one Dalip Singh, father of the defendant No. 1, executed a deed of mortgage in favour of the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 75. The rate of interest stipulated therein was 6 per cent. per annum and the property mortgaged was 1 bigha, 11 biswas baribi land situated in the village Rampur Sakrauri, Pargana Aldema, District Sultanpur. It was a possessory mortgage and one of the conditions was that out of Rs. 71-0, the total profits of the mortgaged land, Rs. 4-8-0 shall be credited towards interest and Rs. 3-4-0 shall be paid annually by the mortgagee to the mortgagor on obtaining a receipt therefor. On the 13th day of May 1905 Dalip Singh executed a deed of further charge in respect of the same property for a sum of Rs. 36, carrying interest at the rate of Rs. 12 per cent. per annum, in favour of the same mortgagee. Chauharia Singh, son of Dalip Singh, the mortgagor, and defendant No. 1 in this suit, sold his mortgagor's interest in the property to the defendant No. 2 on the 22nd April 1913. The plaintiff's case is that Dalip Singh delivered possession to him of the land mortgaged, that afterwards he took out a portion of 13 biswas from that land and that the plaintiff remained in possession of the rest of the property by the realization of rent and continued to pay the paramana-money annually to the father of the defendant No. 1 on obtaining a receipt for the same but that in the beginning of the month of Katik 1325 Fasli corresponding with October 1915 the defendant No. 2, in collusion with defendant No. 1, dispossessed him without paying the mortgage-money and appropriated the profits of the land mortgaged. He, therefore, sued for possession of the property mortgaged as mortgagee. The plea in defence with which I am now concerned was that the relief for possession was barred by limitation.

The Court of first instance decreed the claim, holding that the plaintiff had been in possession of the property in suit within twelve years prior to the institution of the suit. The defendant No. 2 appealed to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs. The plaintiff has now come to this Court in second appeal.

On the question of possession, the learned Subordinate Judge found against the plaintiff. His finding is as follows:—
"I am of opinion that the plaintiff's possession has not been satisfactorily established and the learned Munsif's finding on this point is wrong." This finding is conclusive but the appellant contends, as he contended in the Court below, that his suit must be deemed as within time by virtue of certain acknowledgments upon which he relies. In proof of the alleged acknowledgments I have been referred to the following documents:—

(1) The deed of further charge dated the 13th May 1905;

(2) The receipt, dated the 3rd July 1909, granted by the mortgagor to the mortgagee

JAGESHAR SINGH v. BIR RAM.

for the paramsana payable by the mortgagee to the mortgagor under the original mortgage, dated the 22nd September 1899;

(3) The sale-deed in favour of the defendant No. 2 dated the 22nd April 1913.

The material portion of the deed of further charge (Exhibit 2) may be thus rendered in English:—"It is another condition that the paramsana payable to the mortgagor under the deed of the 22nd September 1899 for the sum of Rs. 75 shall be set off against the interest payable under the deed of further charge." The receipt (Exhibit 3) purports to be a receipt granted by Dalip Singh, the mortgagor, to Jageshar Singh, the mortgagee (rehandar), in respect of the share of Dalip Singh in the village, Rampur Sakrauri, for the years 1315 and 1316 Fasli for a sum of Rs. 8 & 0. At the foot of the sale-deed and in the detail of the consideration for the sale, the following statement appears:—"Left with the mortgagee with power to redeem for the purpose of redeeming the mortgage in favour of Jageshar Singh, mortgagee, . . . . . Rs. 136." It is argued on behalf of the appellant that every one of these statements constitutes a valid acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), and that from the date of each he is entitled to a fresh period of limitation.

The learned Counsel for the respondents contended, in the first place, that the plaintiff's argument in respect of the effect of the acknowledgments could not be entertained because he did not comply with the provisions of Order VII, rule 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure. This contention is, in my opinion, untenable. The plaintiff came into Court on the allegation that he had been in possession of the mortgaged land since the date of the mortgage and that he had been dispossessed in October 1915. It is clear, therefore, that his suit as brought was not instituted after the expiration of the period prescribed by the Law of Limitation and that he could not have claimed exemption from such law on the ground of acknowledgments. In paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 of the plaint the plaintiff, however, gives a sufficient indication of the facts upon which he relies as constituting the acknowledgments, and in paragraph 12 of the replication he refers to the sale-deed with particular emphasis on the admission of the mortgage deed in suit contained in the sale-deed.

With regard to the receipt (Exhibit 3) the learned Advocate for the respondent contends that it does not contain any definite and certain reference to the mortgage-deed in suit and that the amount of paramsana stated therein does not correspond with what was due to the mortgagor under the deed of mortgage, dated the 22nd September 1899. This contention, again, is unsound. It might be that between the dates of the mortgage and the receipt the profits of the land mortgaged had increased and consequently a larger amount of paramsana would become payable by the mortgagee to the mortgagor. The receipt in most unequivocal terms purports to be in respect of paramsana due to the mortgagor from the mortgagee and is in connection with the mortgaged share of Dalip Singh. In the absence of any other mortgage between the parties to the receipt under which the paramsana money may have been payable, I must hold that the receipt relates to paramsana due under the mortgage in suit. During the course of argument in the case of Spickernell v. Hotham (1), the Vice Chancellor, Sir W. Page Wood, referred to Shortrede v. Oheek (2) and observed that; "it was held in that case that the onus of proving the existence of more than one promissory note to which the letter might refer was thrown upon the person disputing the debt;" and in delivering his judgment said: "only one promissory-note has been proved to exist, for I cannot treat the memorandum attached to the letter of the 2nd of December 1834 as a promissory-note itself. I, therefore, think that there has been a sufficient acknowledgment, and that this debt has been payable with interest from the 2nd of December 1834." The defendants in this case have not even alleged, much less proved, any other mortgage with which reference in the receipt of the 3rd July 1909 could be connected.

JAGESHAR SINGH v. BIR RAM.

As regards the sale-deed of the 22nd April 1913 the argument of the learned Counsel is that the sum of Rs. 136 left with the vendee for the purpose of redeeming a mortgage in favour of Jageshar Singh does not tally with the total mortgage-money due under the mortgage of the 22nd September 1899 and the deed of further charge of the 13th May 1909. The mortgage-deed is for a sum of Rs. 75 and the deed of further charge for Rs. 36. These two figures give us a total of Rs. 111 only. In reply to this, the learned Pleader for the appellant points out that there was another mortgage between the same parties for a sum of Rs. 25 of the year 1890 which his client has produced in this case and which the Courts below have admitted in evidence. This is Exhibit 6 on the record. The addition of this sum of Rs. 25 to Rs. 111 gives us a total of Rs. 136 and this last sum exactly fits in with the amount stated in the sale-deed. With regard to the statement in the sale-deed also I hold that it refers to the mortgage in suit as well.

The last and the important point argued by the learned Advocate for the respondent is that none of these acknowledgments is sufficient within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) to give a fresh period of limitation for the plaintiff's suit. His contention is that the acknowledgment of liability mentioned in that section must correspond with the right which the plaintiff desires to obtain by his suit and that, inasmuch as the plaintiff in the present suit asks for a decree for possession and the acknowledgments at the best are in respect of a liability for the debt only, these acknowledgments are not valid within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. This argument calls for a careful consideration of the terms of the section. It is true that the acknowledgment of liability must be in respect of property or right which is also the property or right in suit. This is amply borne out by the word "such" in the sentence "in respect of such property or right." The fallacy in the argument of the learned Counsel is, that he reads "in respect of and property or right" as equivalent to the 'relief' sought in respect of any property or right. There is no legitimate ground for such a construction. I am of opinion that "an acknowledgment of liability" under section 19 need not necessarily be in respect of the particular relief prayed for in a suit or application. It is a sufficient acknowledgment if it is of liability, whether pecuniary or in relation to other obligations, and if in respect of the property or right which is the subject-matter of the suit or application. It is perfectly clear that the relief prayed for in a suit may be quite a separate and distinct matter from the subject-matter of the suit. The section does not require that the identity of the liability acknowledged should correspond with the nature of the relief which a plaintiff seeks on the cause of action which embraces his right and upon which he comes into Court; nor does it demand any exactness in the specification of the nature of the property or right. Explanation I to section 19 says that, for the purpose of that section, an acknowledgment may be sufficient though it omits to specify the exact nature of the property or right. I do not think that the explanation means that an acknowledgment will be insufficient if it omits to specify altogether the nature of the property or right, though it will be sufficient if it omits to specify the "exact" nature of the property or right. The word "exact" is intended to qualify the specification of the nature of the property or right rather than of the property or right itself.

The law as regards the effect of an acknowledgment on the question of limitation of actions in England is not different from the law enacted in the Indian Limitation Act. [See Maniram v. Seth Rup Chand (3)]. I may here quote from Banning on the Limitation of Actions, Chapter IV, Mortgagor and Mortgagee, page 160, Third Edition:—"Secondly, where the mortgagee does not enter into possession, but the mortgagor continues in possession,—The 7 Will., IV, and 1 Viet., c. 28 (as amended by the 37 and 38 Viet c. 57) provides that the mortgagor's payment of interest, or his payment of any part of the principal of the mortgage-debt, shall be a sufficient acknowledgment of the title of the mortgagee but, of course, the mortgagor (so remaining in possession) may also otherwise expressly acknowledge the mortgage-debt—and therewith acknowledge also the mortgagee's title as mortgagee." Maria Ohinnery v. Eyre Evans (4), Lewin v. Wilson (5). A covenant to pay a mortgage-debt in a deed executed subsequently to and referring to the mortgage is an acknowledgment of the existence of the relation of the mortgagor and mortgagee and, therefore, of the mortgagee's title [Jayne v. Hughes (6)]. I am fortified in my construction of section 19 by a recent decision of a Bench of this Court in Basant Singh v. Thakur Rampal Singh (7). That decision, in effect, entirely covers the point argued before me.

On the question of the construction of the acknowledgments before me also, I am of opinion that they not only amount to an acknowledgment of liability for the debt but that each of them imports an admission of a subsisting mortgage in favour of the creditor. In other words, the interpretation which I place on the language of these acknowledgments makes them out as acknowledgments of the mortgagee's title. The construction of the document containing an acknowledgment is an undoubted function of the Court alone (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XIX, page 63).

During the course of the arguments the learned Advocate for the respondent pressed on me the decision in Beni Madho v. Bir Bal Singh (8), but he candidly admitted that the view of law expressed in this case is not in accordance with the view taken in the Bench case mentioned before. The judgment in the case reported as Beni Madho v. Bir Bal Singh (8) was delivered so far back as April 1918. The Bench case to which I have made reference is about a year later

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 6—Tenant continuing in possession after sale of holding, status of—“Having held land as a ryot”, meaning of.

Prior to the Madras Estates Land Act coming into force, the holding of an occupancy tenant was sold in execution of a decree for rent and purchased by the landlord who did not obtain actual possession, the tenant continuing in possession. In a suit to recover possession brought after the enforcement of that Act, it was pleaded that, by virtue of section 6 thereof, the tenant had acquired a permanent right of occupancy when the Act came into force, and was, therefore, entitled to resist the suit:

Held, that after the sale of the holding the possession of the tenant was that of a trespasser, and as he had no interest left in the holding he acquired no right by virtue of section 6 of the Madras Estates Land Act. [p. 19, col. 2]

The phrase “having held land as a ryot” in the explanation to section 6 of the Act, means that the interest in the land of a person has continued till the commencement of the Act at least as a tenant-at-will, and he is actually in possession at that date. [p. 19, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J., delivered his separate judgment on 19th August 1920, having expressed his concurrence with Abdur Rahim, J., on 11th August 1920.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—I must hold that the learned District Judge is not right in saying that there was no proper proof of the existence of attachment at the date of the purchase of the third defendant. As a matter of fact, we have got the attachment list of 1902 to show that the property was under attachment, and if, at the time of the purchase by the third defendant which was in 1902, the attachment had been raised, it was for him to prove it. The learned District Judge ought to have proceeded on the assumption that the attachment continued. That being so, the purchase by the third defendant can be of no avail against the first defendant or his vendee. But it is argued that, under section 6 of the Madras Estates Land Act, the tenant of the third defendant acquired a permanent right of occupancy when the Act came into force, i.e., in 1908, although the holding had been sold before that date and purchased by the first defendant, the landlord, in execution of his decree for rent. In support of this position a ruling of the Division Bench of this Court has been put forward; Sivapada Mudali v. Pitty Thayagaraja (1). No doubt that decision supports the contention of the respondents, but with all respect to the learned Judges I find myself unable to agree with them. The first step in the reasoning in that judgment is that a ryoti land, although brought to sale by the landlord and purchased by him, does not cease to be a ryoti land. I am prepared to accept that proposition. But I am unable to see how the next step in the reasoning is made out, namely, that a tenant whose holding has already been sold and who had, therefore, no interest whatever left in the holding acquired any right by virtue of section 6. Before section 6 can be applied, apart from the explanation, which I shall presently consider, it must be shown that the man in possession is a ryot within the meaning of the Act, and a ryot has been defined as a person who holds agricultural land paying rent to the landlord. Here it is not suggested that, after the holding of the third defendant had been sold, he either paid rent or in any other way attorned to the landlord. He remained in possession after his holding was sold merely as a trespasser.

Reliance is placed on explanation to section 6. In my opinion the explanation does not extend the scope of the section itself to the extent claimed. The explanation is to this effect: "For the purpose of this sub-section, the expression 'every ryot now in possession' shall include every person who, having held land as a ryot, continued in possession of such land at the commencement of this Act." If we are to give any force to the phrase "having held land as a ryot", it must mean that a person whose interest in the land has continued till the commencement of the Act at least as a tenant at-will and who is actually in possession at that date. To give any other meaning to this explanation would be conferring very valuable rights on a person whose possession is that of a mere trespasser and who has no sort of right in the land recognised by law at all. In this case, the third defendant continuing in possession of the land even after the sale was not only a trespasser but was acting in defiance of the law. It must be conceded that, if there had been a final decree declaring that the third defendant had no occupancy rights passed before the Act came into force, section 6 would not help him at all as the land would be exempt from the operation of section 6 as 'old waste'. Can it be said that, where the holding itself has been sold and the tenant has ceased to have any more interest in the land, he is in a better position? The fact that the land does not lose its ryoti character has undoubtedly this effect, that if the land-holder thereafter lets any other tenant into possession for the purpose of cultivation then that tenant will acquire occupancy rights in accordance with the provisions of the Act. That is to say, by the purchase the landlord does not add to his home-farm lands and the land remains a ryoti land throughout. The decision of the Full Bench in Gorakula Kanakaiya v. Janardha Padhai (2) does not, in my opinion, in any way touch the present question for there the only question was whether a decree of the Court of trial is a final decree within the meaning of the definition of "old waste" in section 3 before the time for appeal has expired. The other decision referred to in Sivapada Mudali v. Pitty Thayagaraja (1) is the decision in Markopuli Reddiar v. Thandava Kone (3) but the judgment is very brief. We do not find that the facts are fully given there. We do not know from whom the first purchase was, whether the original ryot or somebody else. In my opinion, therefore, the defence of the third defendant under section 6 of the Madras Estates Land Act is bad.

When the third defendant bought the land in dispute there was a usufructuary mortgage outstanding in favour of second defendant and that mortgage was paid off with the purchase-money. That being so, the learned District Judge finds that the third defendant must be held to be subrogated to the rights under the usufructuary mortgage and by virtue thereof he will be entitled to possession of the land until he is redeemed. The learned Vakil for the appellant, therefore, applies to us for leave to amend the plaint so that the plaintiff may have a decree for redemption in this suit. No such application was made to either of the lower Courts and we do not think that, in the circumstances of this case, we should be justified in allowing amendment of the plaint at this stage. It is not suggested that the right of redemption will in any way be barred. It will be open to the plaintiff to institute a separate suit for redemption if he so chooses. We also considered whether the plaintiff might not be entitled to recover the purchase-money from the first defendant as a consideration for the sale was paid to him. But as the first defendant has not been made a party to this appeal we cannot grant the appellant any such relief.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

K. OLDFIELD, J.—The facts, as I take them, are that the appellant plaintiff is the purchaser of the item now in dispute from the first defendant, who bought the saleable interest in it of its defaulting tenant in a rent-sale in 1907. First defendant gave a delivery receipt but did not obtain actual possession, probably because in 1892, the land had been transferred to the possession of second defendant by a mortgage, Exhibit V, which, with reference to section 38, Act VIII of 1865, and Rajagopalachari v. Subbaraya Mudali (4), was not affected by the rent-sale and had been sold in 1902 by Exhibit VI to third defendant who is now in possession part of the purchase-money having been paid to the second defendant in discharge of his mortgage. Plaintiff's contentions are that third defendant has no right to retain possession or, alternatively, that he should surrender it on being reimbursed what he spent in respect of the suit item on redeeming Exhibit V, the necessary amendment of the plaint being permitted. I agree with my learned brother that the former is unsustainable and deal only with the main argument with which third defendant has resisted the latter that, because he was in possession at the commencement of Act I of 1903, he is entitled under the explanation to section 6 (1) thereof to resist plaintiff's suit for possession on the ground that he has acquired an occupancy right.

The period for which third defendant has retained possession since the rent-sale, falls short of any by which plaintiff's right to sue for possession or redemption can be barred, and there is no question of estoppel. The argument is, then, that the character of the possession referred to in the explanation to section 6 (1) being undefined, even such possession as third defendant's or a defaulter's (for no attempt has been made to show that third defendant is in a better position than his transferor) will confer occupancy right. To take first the case of a defaulter who has lost his interest in the land by a rent-sale and continues in possession in disregard of its result, there is every reason why he should not profit by his conduct: and a construction of the explanation, which would enable him to do so, should, if possible, be avoided. True, such a construction was adopted in Sivapada Mudali v. Pitty Thayagaraja (1). But it was supported only by reference to a dictum contained in the referring order in Gorakala Kanakaiya v. Janardha Padhai (2) and to the landholder's obligation under section 8 (1) to hold the land as landholder notwithstanding his purchase of the occupancy right. With all respect, these reasons seem to me insufficient. Gorakala Kanakaiya v. Janardha Padhai (2) was not decided with reference to section 6 or the explanation now in question: and the dictum referred to is only a general warning against confusion between possession and title, not an attempt to interpret the former expression with reference to its context in that explanation or the intention of the Legislature. Section 8 (1) no doubt entails that the land, after the landholder's purchase, remains ryoti: but it does not purport to affect the character of the possession referred to in section 6 (1) or its explanation and cannot do so.

As regards the intention of the Legislature in the latter provision, there is every reason against supposing that the result already referred to was contemplated by it. In the context the body of the section refers to ryots in possession or to be admitted by the landholder in the future, and it is to be supposed that the explanation refers to possession of a similar kind and to cases of a similar legal origin, such as those of holding over and the like. Certainly, such an interpretation is preferable to one by which it would not merely specify one class of cases already described in more general terms, but would extend the scope of the substantive provisions in a different direction; and I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that we must adopt it.

The foregoing proceeds on the assumption which was made in argument, that third defendant is in the same position as the defaulter, his transferor would have been in, if he had retained possession. But his actual position has been stated and since he cannot plead his purchase against plaintiff's rent sale his possession must, for the present purpose, be regarded as authorised only by the mortgage, which he discharged: and then the objection to the application in his favour of the principle of the decision in Sivapada Mudali v. Pitty Thayagaraja (1) is no less. For, whether or no, the learned Judges were consistent in conceding, as they did, that rights in the kudivaram interest as between rival claimants other than the landlord are not intended to be affected by section 6 (1), there is still the fact that the equity of redemption of the mortgage must have been included in the saleable interest of the defaulter, which the landholder bought, and will be unenforceable if third defendant's construction prevails. The result would be that a mortgagee with possession, perhaps with a portion of his term still outstanding, at the commencement of the Act would, in virtue of that possession, acquire a new title, by which his liability to redemption would be extinguished: and, in the absence of anything clearly or directly abrogating the established mortgage law in such cases, that cannot be accepted.

Plaintiff's right being to obtain possession on payment to third defendant of the amount spent by the latter in redeeming the mortgage on his item, it cannot, I agree with my learned brother, be exercised in these proceedings. I, therefore, concur in dismissing the appeal with costs.

GOPIRAM BHOTICA—DEFENDANT—

Arbitration—Agreement to refer disputes arising out of contract—Several disputes—Successive awards, whether permissible.

Where by the terms of a contract the parties agree to refer all disputes arising on, or out of, it to arbitration, the right to make a submission is not exhausted by reason of the mere fact that one award final and complete has issued from it: there may be an indefinite number of awards, as it is possible to have further disputes over the same claim which are not covered by the first award, and the arbitrators have jurisdiction to make awards from time to time in disputes arising out of the contract, as such disputes arise. [p. 198, col. 1.]

Sir E. O. Mitter (with him Messrs A. N. Chaudhuri and S. M. Bose), for the Plaintiff.

Mr. L. P. E. Fugh (with him Mr. N. Sircar), for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—By a contract of 1st December 1917, made on the ordinary form of the Indian Jute Manufacturer's Association, the plaintiff agreed to sell to the defendant three lacs of yards of Hessian cloth. The only express terms which require notice are three:—

Delivery of the said goods to be given and taken as follows:—December 1917.

Each month's delivery to be treated as a distinct and separate contract.

Any dispute whatsoever arising on or out of this contract shall be referred to arbitration under the rules of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce applicable for the time being for decision, and such decision shall be accepted as final and binding on both parties to this contract. The award may, at the instance of either party, and without any notice to the other of them, be made a rule of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William.

These three terms are all part of the printed form with the exception of the words "December 1917" at the end of the first.

The seller by his Counsel has been careful to make clear that it is not disputed that the contract is, by the usage of this market, an instalment contract in so far that it is open to the buyer to require delivery in separate quantities, at all events if each be not less than 50,000 yards, and in this further sense also that the buyer may, if he likes, require performance as to any such quantity taken separately either by giving due shipping instructions to the seller or by demanding Mill's pucca delivery orders.

Of the three lacs of yards contracted for, one-half lac was duly delivered and may now be ignored. No delivery was in fact made of any part of the remainder, which divides itself into three separate lots.

The first lot is of 50,000 yards for which a formal shipping instruction for the "City of Calcutta" was given on the 15th of December. Vessel was not ready to load. On 7th January buyer offers to take at once a delivery order. Delivery having been made in neither form, buyer on the 18th January sends his difference bill by registered post claiming Rs. 8,750. Seller refuses to pay. On the 28th February an arbitration by the Chamber of Commerce is demanded by the buyer, and proceedings, strictly confined to this claim, took their course under this demand, resulting on 24th July in an award of the sum claimed to the buyer with certain interest and costs. This is the first arbitration case.

The second arbitration case had reference to 1,00,000 yards for which another shipping instruction was given on 15th December—this time for the "Chile". The seller finding that the vessel would not begin loading till the 2nd of January, disclaimed responsibility. Buyer insisted. On the 7th January buyer asked for immediate shipment or else delivery order. On the 18th buyer sends another difference bill, this time for Rs. 17,750, on the footing of the price at which the goods had been bought against him by his buyer. On the 19th the seller tendered delivery orders which were refused. On the 21st the seller returned the difference bill and claimed to cancel the contract because of that refusal. On some date, before the 9th of April, Kanoria and Co., who had bought from the buyer, claimed arbitration between themselves and him. This had resulted in an award in their favor before the 24th of June. On the 9th of April the buyer's second case against the seller was commenced, claim being made in the alternative either for the amount of the difference bill or for such sum as might be awarded to Kanoria and Co.

The third arbitration case was not commenced till the 21st of June. It concerned two quantities of 50,000 yards each; one for the "Chile" and one for the "Talabat". As to this I have only the buyer's case: the seller's case never having been lodged. The buyer claimed that shipping instructions were given on 14th and 21st December for these boats respectively; that on 2nd January 1918 he received two letters dated 29th December in which seller said the "Chile" was not yet in port and that the "Talabat" had left long before due date. That on the 3rd January buyer wrote that the goods for "Talabat" should be put on the "City of Manchester" and on the 4th that he

That on the 3rd January buyer wrote that the goods for "Talabat" should be put on the "City of Manchester" and on the 4th that he would take Mill's pucca delivery order for the other lot. That in the end the seller did neither. That on 15th January the buyer gave notice that his buyers had bought against him as regards the 'City of Manchester' consignment. That on the 16th he demanded a delivery order for the other lot by the next day, and that next day his buyers had bought against him for this lot also. That the seller refused to recognise this liability. That afterwards buyer settled with one of his buyers on 25th February for 7,250 with seller's consent and on seller's promise to pay. That in May he settled with his other buyer for the same sum on the basis of an award obtained against that buyer by a firm to whom he had in turn re-sold.

Now, all that seller did in the third arbitration case was, that on the 18th July he applied to the Tribunal for time to file his case, and on 25th July for more time, and in the end was given till 3rd August by a letter dated 27th July.

On the 25th July, as I have said, an award in favour of the buyer was made in the first arbitration case between these parties, and by letters of 1st and 3rd August from seller's Solicitors to the Tribunal, the seller set up his present claim that the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to proceed with the second and third cases, since in the matter of the contract of 1st December there had been an award, which award they say, with complicated in correctness, "has resulted in a decree". It is given as additional ground that the claim in these cases had arisen completely at the time of the Tribunal's decision. In this action brought by the seller I have to say whether his contention is correct, and whether he is entitled to any relief accordingly.

It was argued for the seller that while the contract was for delivery by instalments, it was one single contract in the sense that there was one promise, one covenant to which all the breaches have reference. That once one award is made under the arbitration clause in a complete form capable of enforcement at law, the Tribunal is functus officio and there can be no jurisdiction to make a second. That in this case all the alleged breaches were complete some time before the 25th February 1918 when the first arbitration case was started. That there was only one cause of action, vis., failure to fulfil the promise to deliver 3 laas of yards. That the buyer has split up his cause of action and made three cases out of one. And that this course is so unjust and unreasonable that, at all events, the principle which underlies Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, if not that rule itself, should be applied by me as a ground for holding that the Tribunal has no jurisdiction to entertain the second and third proceedings now.

The buyer's Counsel, in reply, founded upon a custom, alleged in his written statement to obtain in this market, to the effect that when orders for delivery in different lots are given, the original contract becomes divided into as many contracts as there are separate lots.

He further raised an issue of fact that, whether such custom exist or not, the seller has by his conduct assented to this contract being treated as several separate contracts.

Apart from these questions of fact, he took certain objections logically prior to these issues. He contended that the Tribunal has jurisdiction to decide both these issues and that they are not triable by me.

He contested the proposition that, apart from such a custom, the first award precluded the Tribunal from entertaining the other cases.

As regards the principle of Order II, rule 2, he said that this objection applied at the initiation of the other cases and that either it does not go to the jurisdiction of the Tribunal, or, if it does, the seller consented to such jurisdiction by filing his written answer in the second case of the 11th June 1918 and by his applications to the Tribunal on 18th and 25th July for time to file his answer in the third.

Lastly, and as an answer good in all events, he said that where an arbitrator has any jurisdiction in law no injunction or other relief is obtainable to stay his hand, and the only course is to take objection when the nullity is sought to be enforced as valid.

(A copy of the issues as settled and agreed on is annexed to this judgment).

To the contentions of the buyer as to custom, the seller's Counsel intimated that he would contest the existence of the custom. He argued further that the custom was contrary to the express words "each month's delivery to be treated as a distinct and separate contract" and was invalid as unreasonable.

I agreed that evidence as to the existence of the custom pleaded by the buyer should be reserved until after my decision on the prior points. The documents in the three arbitration cases were produced and it was agreed that I should decide the preliminary points on these.

Now, I will take the contract in the sense admitted by the seller, as stated at the commencement of this judgment, and I will examine as to whether or not he has established that the Tribunal is now without jurisdiction to decide the second and third arbitration cases.

I. First, is it true of a submission, such as was in this contract, that under it there can be only one award, meaning thereby a final and complete award enforceable in law? In my opinion there may be an indefinite number of such awards, as many awards as there are disputes arising out of the contract. The submission, if it be in the terms which are present in this contract, is not exhausted by reason of the mere fact that one award, final and complete in itself, has issued from it. The arbitrators are not functus officio, one item of their duty done, their duty remains their duty.

The completeness of the first award, so far as regards its own subject-matter, has no relevance to the present point. An award which is incomplete as regards a claim may yet be good if complete as regards those matters in dispute with reference to the claim, which were submitted to the arbitrators. In such a case it is possible to have two awards over the same claim, because it is possible to have further disputes over the same claim, disputes not covered by this first award. An award final and complete as regards a claim precludes another as to that claim only, this, not because the number of awards would be getting high, but because there is nothing further to dispute without disputing the award itself.

This is my view of the effect of the unreported case of Ohandan Mall v. Donald Campbell & Co.* decided in the House of Lords on 4th December 1916. The judgment in the Court of Appeal and the speeches of the Lords of Appeal will be found in the paper-book in Appeal No. 42 of 1917 in this Court. (Suit No. 1094 of 1916). The terms of the submission are for this purpose indistinguishable from those I have to deal with, and will be found at page 170 in the judgment of the present Master of the Rolls. Rule 26 of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce Rules does not, in my opinion, cut down the jurisdiction of the arbitrators to make awards from time to time in disputes arising out of the contract as such disputes arise.

II. In the second place, on the footing that the breaches alleged in the latter cases are all breaches of the same promise as grounded the first award, I have to decide whether the arbitrators are without jurisdiction to award upon them now. This contention of the seller must be put upon one or more of the following principles:—res judicata, bar by suit, principles of common law or equity analogous to these, or such a construction of the submission as would exclude from its ambit any right to entertain proceedings which, if before a Court of Justice, would be held an abuse of the process of the Court.

I think it will re-pay the trouble to make the hypothesis that on 28th February, 9th April and 21st June the buyer had commenced three several suits in a competent Court subordinate to this Court for breaches all prior to the 28th of February and had recovered judgment in the first suit on 20th July. In any case, for the sake of clearness I will do so. I think the position then would have been as follows:—

(1). The lower Court would have had jurisdiction to decide whether the later cases come within Explanation IV in section 11 of the Code. I think it would be bound to hold that they do not; but if they do, and such Court wrongly held that they do not, the only remedy would be appeal. No question of jurisdiction would arise, and no remedy under section 115 of the Code would be appropriate. Such questions could only arise in a limiting case, e. g., if on the footing that section 11 did apply the Court had refused to give effect to the law or if it held wrongly on a point quite unarguable.

(2). The same observations apply to a plea under Order II, rule 2, but with this difference, I think (assuming no such custom as the buyer alleges) that such lower Court, to decide rightly, would have to hold that the later cases were hit by the rule. But again no question of jurisdiction would arise if its decision were merely wrong, if, e. g., it purported to dispense the plaintiff from the provisions of the rule, that would be another matter. It is to be observed that the presence or absence of a judgment in the first suit would be wholly irrelevant in dealing with this plea.

(3) If, putting aside the Code, the plea to the later suits fell to be considered at Common Law, I think myself that to reject it would be right. Such an objection must be matter of substance and I think has to fulfil certain technical conditions even then. In Brunsdon v. Humphrey (1) Bowen, L. J., said: "The rule of the ancient common law is that where one is barred in any action real or personal by judgment, demurrer, confession or verdict, he is barred as to that or the like action of the like nature for the same thing for ever." In the present case and on my hypothesis, would these actions be "for the same thing" in substance? I think there can be but one answer, and the only way to attempt another is to insist upon the unity of the promise as making the cause of action technically the same. On this I will quote farther from the same great authority: "The principle is frequently stated in the form of another legal proverb nemo debet bis vexari, pro eadem causa. It is a well-settled rule of law that damages resulting from one and the same cause of action must be assessed and recovered once for all. The difficulty in each instance arises upon the application of this rule, how far is the cause which is being litigated afresh the same cause in substance with that which has been the subject of the previous suit? 'The principal consideration' says DeGrey, C. J., in Hitchin v.

Campbell (2) "is whether it be precisely the same cause of action in both, appearing by proper averments in a plea or by proper facts stated in a special verdict or a special case." "And one great criterion," he adds "of this identity is that the same evidence will maintain both actions."....."The question," says Grose, J., in Seddon v. Tutop (3) "is not whether the sum demanded might have been recovered in the former action, the only enquiry is, whether the same cause of action has been litigated and considered in the former action.".....It is evident, therefore, that the application of the rule depends, not upon any technical consideration of the identity of forms of action, but upon matter of substance.

This passage, if only in view of the last words covers and disposes of the objection which I am now considering in this case. I take the principles there laid down to be first principles; not mere axiomata meliora, true only of the special range of facts then before the Court.

(4) Before parting with my hypothesis of these cases being brought as actions, I have only to say that if, before the first had been decided, application had been made to strike out the others as oppressive or as an abuse of the process of the Court, it would have been wrong and unreasonable to do more than to consolidate the actions and to make the buyer pay costs thrown away. If such application had been made after judgment in the first case, in view of the lateness of the application, it would probably have been wrong to accede to it at all so far as regards the second case. As to both second and third, an order to strike out would have been improper, some terms as to costs would at the utmost meet the case.

When I come to consider the seller's contentions as applicable to proceedings by arbitration, none of his points as to want of jurisdiction become any stronger. If into this submission I am to import any conditions against multiplicity of arbitrations for the same thing, I know no better principles than I have stated from Lord Bowen and I should not be any stricter than the language of section 11 of the Code, which many Judges have thought too strict. But that is for the arbitrators and not for me. In Donald Campbell's case Lord Sumner said this: "incidentally the effect of a prior award might come into question in an arbitration upon dispute arising out of a contract if the defendants alleged that the claimants denied that the award already made had decided the matter in dispute."

If, further, I import into this submission an implied term which would exclude oppression or abuse of process the facts here do not come within it.

Lastly, even if I stretch the principle of bar by mere suit to arbitration cases I cannot make it go to jurisdiction and, as the seller has taken steps in both of the later cases, my difficulty would be increased. Besides, I have no right or inclination to stretch it at all. Order II, rule 2 is a special provision doubtless of the completest wisdom but unknown to the Common Law, one, moreover, which attaches an indiscriminate and indeed incalculable penalty to a condition difficult to define. There is, I think, a cardinal error involved in any attempt to appeal even to the principle on which the rule is founded for the jurisdiction of an arbitrator depends not upon the existence of a claim or the accrual of a cause of action, but upon the existence of a dispute. And his right to entertain a second case depends not on the identity of the cause of action but on the identity of the matters in dispute. Where there has been an award not set aside, everything decided by it will be deemed conclusively to have been disputed. The first award, if valid, covers the whole of the issues raised and covers nothing else; any issue not raised is, if disputed, another dispute. In the case referred to already, the House of Lords applied this principle to affirm the validity of a second award on what was really the same claim. Of such a case it is important to say, and I think the House of Lords has implied, that the second dispute must arise subsequently to the first. But in other cases such a requirement would be either meaningless or wrong. If a dispute exists now; if neither party treated the issue as in dispute upon the previous arbitration; if it is not in substance a dispute about the same thing or covered by the first award; then the most positive proof that the parties were in difference about it before the first case was launched, will not affect the arbitrator's jurisdiction.

In the present case, whether the contract was one or several, there is no room for doubt that the three cases were distinct disputes about separate instalments. The shipping instructions are separate; the correspondence throughout is kept entirely separate on both sides; separate difference rates are claimed, separate difference bills delivered. Though under the same contract, they are in no way mixed up: the course of business requires that they should not be: buyer and seller as to each consignment being links in a chain which stretches between mill and shipper—for all they know, links in a different chain as to each different consignment.

Having gone through the parties' statements in writing before the Tribunal, and the exhibits submitted, I think the cases were very different in many ways. Each is a story with complications of its own: though the general nature and some important facts are the same in all. Whether on a true view of the parties' rights the cases, stripped of all irrelevance, would become more similar or more divergent, is a question. It may even be that one short answer would decide them all. But the parties' own views are what constitute the dispute, and have in this case constituted three disputes.

For these reasons, apart altogether from any custom not admitted by the seller, I think he fails upon the merits, and I prefer to decide upon that ground. I think he has no equity and no grievance, and that his effort to impugn the arbitrator's jurisdiction comes to nothing. I find against him on the third issue, and his other difficulties need not be discussed.

I sustain the objection taken by Sir Benode Mitter at the conclusion of the plaintiffs' case. I hold that there is no case to answer, and I dismiss the action with costs.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, (with him Mr. T. R. Krishnaswamy Aiyar), for the Appellants.—The lower Court erred in holding that the dismissal of Original Suit No. 434 of 1913 for default barred the present suit. A dismissal under Order IX, rule 9 does not operate as res judicata. It only declares that a second suit on the same cause of action is not maintainable. Ohand Kour v. Partab Singh (1).

The first suit was for a declaration that the sale by the plaintiff's mother, the first defendant, to second defendant and mortgage by second defendant to ninth defendant were all invalid. Plaintiff alleged joint possession with the defendants. There the cause of action was to remove the cloud on the plaintiff's title. In the present suit plaintiff asks for partition and separate possession. Here the plaintiff wants to separate. The causes of action are distinct. See *Siliman Sahib v. ### JUDGMENT.

KRISHNAN, J.—The plaintiffs are the appellants before us. Their suit has been dismissed by the lower Courts in limine, without being tried on the merits, on the ground that it is barred by Order IX, rule 9, of the Civil Procedure Code, by reason of the order in the prior suit, Civil Suit No. 494 of 1913, brought by them against practically the same defendants, regarding the same properties, dismissing it for default under rule 8. The lower Courts have held that the cause of action for the two suits is one and the same. The learned Vakil for the appellants contends that they were wrong in so holding.

In considering the applicability of rule 9, it must be carefully kept in view that it has not the effect of res judicata, for there is no adjudication on any of these issues in the first case. This is pointed out by the Privy Council in Ohand Kour v. Partib Singh (1). The rule merely bars a second suit on the same cause of action. In that case their Lordships observe: "The cause of action has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up by the defendant, nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action, or, in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour." Applying this view, they held that the dismissal for default of a prior suit by the reversioners, for a declaration and injunction restraining the widow from alienating her husband's properties was no bar to a subsequent suit by them to declare a gift made by the widow after the disposal of the first suit was not valid against them. The ground of claim in one suit was the intention of the widow to alienate and in the other suit a completed alienation by her.

To decide the question before us we have, therefore, to examine the allegations in the two plaints, in Civil Suit No. 494 of 1913, and in the present suit, to see if the two suits are based on the same cause of action. In the first suit, plaintiffs claimed title to a fractional share in the plaint properties as the heirs under Muhammadan Law of their deceased father, Sheikh Meera Rowther. They stated that their mother had illegally sold their share to their brother, the second defendant, who had subsequently mortgaged the whole property to the ninth defendant and that he had brought a suit and obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged properties. They contended that the sale was invalid against them, as their mother had no authority to act as their guardian, under the Muhammadan Law and deal with their properties and that, even if she had, the sale was vitiated by fraud and other grounds stated. Alleging themselves to be in joint-enjoyment of the properties with their co sharers, they sued for a declaration of their title and for an injunction restraining the ninth defendant from executing his decree. That was the suit that was dismissed for default. In the present suit they, no doubt, allege the same title and the same reasons for treating as invalid against them the sale, the mortgage and the decree as well as the subsequent Court auction-sale and purchase in execution of that decree, which took place since the dismissal of the first suit. But they also aver they are no longer willing to remain joint with their co sharers and pray that the properties may be divided by metes and bounds and separate possession of their share may be given to them. The first suit was for a declaration to remove a cloud on their title and the second one for partition and separate possession of the lands falling to their share.

The relief as asked for has, no doubt, no direct bearing on the cause of action, but where reliefs claimed are different, the causes of action are generally found to be different. It seems to me the cause of action in the first suit is not the same as the cause of action in the second suit, though the title alleged is the same in both. Title is only a part of the cause of action. The ground of claim alleged in the first suit is the alienation by the mother and the subsequent dealings by the alienee and his transferee with the properties; whereas, in the second suit, there is super added the intention of the plaintiff not to continue any longer in joint possession with their co-sharers and the refusal or the failure of the latter to divide and give them separate and exclusive possession of the part of the properties representing their share. Till the plaintiffs exercised their volition and decided to separate and the defendants refused or neglected to give them their share, a cause of action could not be said to have arisen for the partition suit. That being so, it seems to me the causes of action for the two suits are different though they overlap to some extent.

It has been held, both here and in Calcutta, that the cause of action for a suit for a declaration of title to property is necessarily different from the cause of action for the suit for possession, as the former requires an allegation of possession with the plaintiff or that the plaintiff is not entitled to possession; whereas the latter is based on the allegation of possession being with the defendant. See Giribala Das v. Nitya Lal Sinha (3) and Siliman Sahib v. Bontala Human Sahib (2). The first case arose with reference to Order IX, rule 9 itself and though the second case had no reference to that rule, it discusses the meaning of the expression "cause of action" in Order II, rule 2 and we must, I think, adopt the same meaning for the expression in both rules. Reference may also be made to Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Aiyar (4), where there is a full discussion of the meaning of that phrase. It seems to me that a suit for partition and delivery of exclusive possession of part of the property, which was before in joint possession stands on the same footing as a suit for possession of the whole property, as regards the difference between it and the suit for a declaration of title. The cause of action in each case is different.

The learned Vakil for the respondent, however, relied on the case of Naganada Iyer v. Krishnamurthi Aiyar (5), as opposed to this view. But I think that case is clearly distinguishable. In that case, it is pointed out that the plaintiff in the first suit alluded to the Government order under which plaintiff was dispossessed, and admitted that defendant had entered upon the land but nevertheless the plaintiff sued for a declaration and injunction only as if he was still in possession (see pages 102 and 103)*, and that the second suit was based on the same grounds, nothing further having happened in the interval and that the only difference between the two suits was that the latter asked for possession while the former asked for a declaration and injunction only. It was on this view of the facts that the learned Judges held that the second suit was barred by Order IX, rule 9. I express no opinion regarding their view of the case before them; for it does not apply here. They held that the addition of a prayer for possession, the cause of action for which had already accrued prior to the first suit and which was actually disclosed in the plaint, did not remove the bar created by Order IX, rule 9. In the present case there is nothing to indicate that the plaintiff's cause of action for partition and separate possession on which they now sue had arisen prior to their first suit.

It was further argued that the cause of action against the ninth defendant was different from the cause of action against the other defendants who are co-sharers with the plaintiffs and that, so far as he was concerned, the cause of action in the two suits was the same. It is doubtful whether, under rule 9, the causes of action against different defendants in the same suit can be considered separately at all. Assuming that it can be, it is clear that the sale and purchase in Court-auction which took place subsequent to the first suit gave the plaintiffs a fresh cause of action to have them declared invalid against them. The dismissal of the previous suit not having the force of res judicata is not tantamount to declaring the mortgage and decree to be valid and binding transactions. Their validity can be attacked in the present suit. Even as against the ninth defendant separately this suit is, thus, not barred by rule 9.

In these circumstances, I have come to the conclusion that the lower Courts were wrong in dismissing the plaintiff's suit as barred by rule 9. I would, therefore, set aside their decrees and remand the case to the District Munsif for trial on the merits. Plaintiffs must have their costs in this and the lower Appellate Courts from the ninth defendant, and there will be an order for refund of Court-fees paid by them in those Courts.

AYLING, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in execution of a decree for rent.

It appears that the plaintiff decree holder claimed rent (in the suit) at the rate of Rs. 22 while the tenant pleaded that the rent of the holding was Rs. 13. The parties then settled the case; the defendants took some additional lands, and for the entire land (the original area and the additional land) the rent was fixed at Rs. 22 per year. A decree was passed upon the compromise, but the Court did not comply with the provisions of section 147-A of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Tenancy Act.

The decree-holder having applied for the execution of the decree, the judgment-debtor raised objection to the execution on the ground that the provisions of section 147-A not having been complied with, the decree was incapable of execution. The decree-holder has appealed to this Court.

The Court below relied upon the case of Sarjug Saran Lal v. Dukhit Mahto (1) in support of the view taken by it. That case lays down that the decree for rent passed in accordance with a compromise in contravention of the provisions of section 147-A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, i. e., without recording evidence to show what the amount of rent was before the dispute arose, is made without jurisdiction, and the tenant is not bound to have it set aside.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant, first, that the non-compliance with the provisions of section 147-A (clause 3) does not render the decree a nullity though a decree passed in contravention of the section may be set aside by proper proceedings being taken in that behalf; and secondly, that the present case is distinguishable from the case reported in Sarjug Saran Lal v. Dukhit Mahto (1).

The question whether a non compliance with a particular provision of the law constitutes an irregularity, or renders an order a nullity, has been considered in the recent Full Bench decision in the case of Hridayanath Roy v. Ram Chandra Barua (2). It is unnecessary, however, to discuss how far (if any) the principle laid down by the Full Bench affects the decision in the case of Sarjug Saran Lal v. Dukhit Mahto (1), because we think that the present case is distinguishable from that case. In the first place, the compromise in that case settled the rent payable for the land held by the tenant, and the Court did not consider the question whether the effect of the compromise would be to enhance the rent in a manner or to an extent not allowed by section 29 in the case of a contract. In the present case, the compromise fixed the rent of the land originally held, together with the additional land which the tenant was to hold under the compromise. It could not be said that there was an enhancement of the rent previously paid by the tenant when the holding in respect of which the rent was settled by the compromise, comprised additional lands. Although the Eastern Bengal and Assam Tenancy Act lays down (and the provision is similar to that contained in the Bengal Tenancy Act) that the Court shall not pass a decree in accordance with the compromise unless it is satisfied for reasons to be recorded in writing that the terms of the agreement or compromise are such that, if embodied in a contract they could be enforced under the Act, the compromise in the present case, as stated above, fixed the rent of the lands originally held together with some additional lands. In the next place, that case was one under the Bengal Tenancy Act, section 147-A, sub-section (3) of which provides that the Court shall record evidence in order to ascertain whether the effect of the compromise would be to enhance the rent in contravention of the provisions of section 29 of the Act whereas the present case is governed by the Eastern Bengal and Assam Tenancy Act which does not contain any provision for recording evidence. Lastly, the objection to the validity of the decree has been raised in the present case in execution of the decree. In the case of Kalipada Sirkar v. Harimohan Dalal (3) it was held that the Court executing the decree must take the decree as it stands and has no power to go behind the decree or entertain an objection to the legality or correctness of the decree. In that case the decree was passed against a lunatic who was not represented in the suit by a legal guardian and although a Court is not competent to make an operative decree against a person not a party to the suit or properly represented on the record, it was held that such a decree cannot be impeached in execution, but should be annulled or reversed in some direct proceeding taken for that purpose.

For all these reasons, we think that the present case may be distinguished from the case reported as Saryug Saran Lal v. Dukhit Mahto (1), and that the objection raised to the validity of the decree cannot be entertained in execution proceedings. The result is that the orders of the Court below are set aside, and the case sent back to the Court of first instance in order that execution proceedings may be carried on. We make no order as to costs.

This judgment will govern the other case (Appeal from Order No. 253 of 1919).

RESPONDENT.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 55
Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 36—Insolvent, mortgage by, within two years of insolvency—Good faith—Consideration—Burden of proof—Official Assignee, application by, to expunge admission of proof, effect of—Consideration, portion of, proved—Procedure,

Where a mortgagee seeks to enforce a mortgage executed by a person within two years of his insolvency, the onus, under section 55 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act rests upon the mortgagee to show that the transaction was executed in good faith and for consideration. The fact that the Official Assignee has moved to expunge proof of the mortgage which he had admitted under section 36 of the Second Schedule to the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, does not alter the onus of proof, as such admission is in no sense an adjudication. [p. 206, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a portion only of the mortgage consideration is found to have been advanced, the proper order is to set aside the mortgage in toto and treat the mortgagee as an unsecured creditor for the amount advanced by him. [p. 208, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter dismissing an application of the Official Assignee to expunge the proof of one Sambanda Mudaliar as a secured creditor on a mortgage alleged to have been executed in June 1916.

OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF MADRAS v. SAMBANDA MUDALIAR.

This case has brought to the notice of the Court, not for the first time, the existence in this City of dangerous gangs who take advantage of the fact that the Indian Majority Act enables young men to dispose of their property before they have sufficient sense to manage it and get them to execute conveyances for little or no consideration and thus strip them of their possessions. I am not unaware of the considerations which actuated the Legislature in fixing the age of 18 as the age of majority, but I hope that this matter may receive re-consideration in the near future with the object of stopping scandals such as have come to light in this Court in this case and in other recent cases.

In this case the insolvent, who came of age in 1916 by August of that year had been stripped of all his property and found himself in the Insolvency Court, where his brother had preceded him, and in this case also we have had before us the case of another young man, named Kappuswami, who in a brief career which came to an untimely end made away with the estate which his father had acquired in the well-known firm of Messrs. Thompson and Co, in this City. The learned Judge in another suit has already set aside two mortgages which were obtained by another gang from this insolvent and that decision has been confirmed on appeal; and the reason why a different fate attended the present application appears to be that, as stated by the learned Judge in his judgment, the proceedings before him were conducted upon the footing that the onus was admittedly on the Official Assignee. I do not know how that view came to be taken. In law, a mortgagee setting up a mortgage executed within two years of the insolvency has the onus cast on him under section 55 of this Act, and section 30 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, to show that the transaction was one executed in good faith and for consideration. That has been repeatedly held as regards section 36 and it has also been held as regards section 55, the language of which is identical, by Sir Arnold White, C. J., in Official Assignee of Madras v. Annapurnammal (1), and in another Calcutta case. In this case the burden is, if anything, stronger because we have a mortgage at the usurious rate of 24 per cent. by a young man who has just come of age and who was squandering his property in dissolute courses. I do not know if it was supposed that the fact that the Official Assignee was moving to expunge a proof which he had admitted under section 36 of the Second Schedule to the Act altered the onus of proof; but I think it is clear that it has no such effect. An admission of proof by the Official Assignee, is, in no sense, an adjudication and it is open to him, if he thinks that the proof was improperly admitted, to have an adjudication by Court on notice. It is also open to the other creditors, if they are not satisfied with the admission, similarly to obtain an adjudication, and in that adjudication the matter has to be decided with reference to the ordinary legal presumptions which arise. Possibly, the fact that the insolvent in his examination, Exhibit K 1, in April 1917, told the Official Assignee: "I got the money Rs. 4,000, and odd. It was in rupees and notes I have spent it on drinking and women" may have influenced the view that the onus was on the Official Assignee. The difficulties of these cases are illustrated by the fact that the insolvent made the statement to the Official Assignee, under what inducement we know not, because his explanation that he was drunk when he made it is absurd. However, it is nobody's case that, on the execution of this mortgage, the insolvent was paid Rs. 4,000 in rupees and notes and that circumstance cannot affect the burden. I attach considerable importance to this question of burden of proof because, from the learned Judge's judgment, I think that, if the burden that was placed on the Official Assignee had not been placed on him, he would have arrived at exactly the same conclusion at which we have arrived.

On the whole, I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the mortgagee has failed to discharge the onus that was on him of showing that the transaction was entered into in good faith and for consideration. All that is shown is that a payment of Rs. 340 was admittedly made about the time of the execution of that mortgage. But the Statute says that a mortgage of this kind, if executed without consideration,

(1) 20 Ind. Cas. 901; 14 M. L. T. 150.

is void. Even as to this Rs. 340, as was held by the late Chief Justice in another case, the proper course is to set aside the whole mortgage and allow the mortgagee to prove as an unsecured creditor for Rs. 340.

I have not dealt with the oral evidence of the insolvent and the widow, Meenakshi Ammal, though it supports the conclusions at which I have arrived because it is obviously unreliable. It is, however, strongly corroborated by the evidence to which I have referred which is in itself sufficient to support the conclusions at which I have arrived.

The appeal is allowed, except as to Rs. 340 with costs both here and below on the Original Side scale.

Certify for two Counsel.

KRISHNAN, J.—This is an appeal from the order of Coutts-Trotter, J., dismissing a petition of the Official Assignee in the matter of the insolvency of a young man, named Devarajulu, praying for the annulment of a mortgage executed by him to one Sambanda Mudaliar, under section 55 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. That section provides that a transfer of property made by a person who is adjudged an insolvent within two years from the date of the transfer shall be void against the Official Assignee and may be annulled by the Court unless the transfer was made before and in consideration of marriage, or was made in favour of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration. It has been held, with reference to section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, which is worded exactly and similarly as section 55, that if the transfer is shown to be within two years of the insolvency the burden is on the transferee to prove that he comes within the exception by showing good faith and valuable consideration. See Nilmoni Chowdhuri v. Basanta Kumar Banerjee (2). This view was approved of in Anantarama Aiyar v. Yussufi Omer Sahib (3) and in Official Assignee of Madras v. Annapurnammal (1) White, C.J., assumed that the onus was on the transferor in a case under section 55 itself though he did not expressly decide it. The manner in which the section is worded making an exception in favour of bona fide encumbrancers for valuable consideration, clearly throws the onus on the person who alleged that he is within the exception. No case has been cited to us to the contrary, but it was urged in the present case the onus was on, or had been shifted on to, the Official Assignee as at an earlier stage of these insolvency proceedings he had accepted the proof of the mortgage and admitted his claim. I do not think this contention tenable. The Official Assignee's action was based on what he was then led to believe were the real facts of the case by the mortgagee but now he states that he has been shown reason to think that he was wrong in this view and he has applied to the Court to annul the mortgage under section 55. The way in which the Court has to deal with the matter when it comes before it depends entirely on the wording of the section and it is not affected by anything the Official Assignee might have done previously. What the Official Assignee did here was merely to come to a conclusion on the evidence placed before him by the mortgagee, that cannot be treated as an admission against him, or against the body of creditors whom he represents. It follows that the onus is still on Sambanda Mudaliar and has not been shifted.

There is a further reason why, in the present case, the onus should be placed on him to prove consideration for his document. The mortgagor is a young man who had come into property on his father's death and who had just attained his majority. It is clear from his schedule that he was borrowing recklessly. With reference to another mortgage executed by this very youth about the time that the mortgage in question here was executed we recently held, following the ruling in Moti Gulabchand v. Mahomed Mehdi Tharia Topan (4), that the burden was shifted on to the mortgagee to prove consideration: See Original Side Appeal Nos. 26 and 43 of 1919. The petition is the same in this case and, therefore, the onus is, in my opinion, on Sambanda Mudaliar, for both the above reasons, to prove the good faith and the consideration for his mortgage before me can uphold it.

dense as to consideration, etc., for the mortgage.—Ed.]

Finding, then, that the mortgagee has failed to prove that his mortgage was made in good faith and for proper consideration, it must be annulled under section 55 of the Act. But, as it is admitted that the mortgagee paid Rs. 340 to Devarajulu, he must be allowed to claim Rs. 340 from the insolvent's estate. The proper order in such a case seems to be, as held by White, C. J. in Official Assignee of Madras v. Annappurnammal (1), to set aside the mortgage in toto and treat the mortgagee as an unsecured creditor for the amount advanced by him.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal and annul the mortgage, Exhibit H., and direct Sambanda Mudaliar's name to be retained in the schedule as an unsecured creditor for Rs. 340. He must pay the Official Assignee's costs in this appeal and in the first Court. We certify for two Counsel in the lower Court: costs on Original Side scale.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against an order of a Bench of this Court passed on the 9th April 1920.

The facts are as follows:—

An application on behalf of the Benares Hindu University was made to the District Judge of Lucknow for grant of Probate of the Will of one Sah Bindraban Das who died on the 13th June 1919.

This gentleman made a Will on the 11th November 1913 in which he appointed as his executor a Society known as the Hindu University Society, a body which was registered under Act XXI of 1860. The Will provided that, in the event of this Society becoming absorbed in the Benares Hindu University, the latter body was to act as executor.

The University was incorporated under an Act of the Legislature (Act XVI of 1915) and it is admitted that it assumed all the function exercised by the Hindu University Society.

When the application for Probate was made on behalf of the University, it was opposed by a nephew of the testator one Sri Kishen Das, and his mother Musammât Santo Bibi, on the ground that the University was not legally competent under its constitution to act as executor and to maintain an application for Probate of the Will.

The District Judge decided in favour of the objectors, and dismissed the application without calling for proof of the due execution of the Will.

This Court, by its order of the 9th April 1920, overruled the District Judge's decision and held that the University was entitled to act as executor and to apply for Probate.

The preliminary point having been thus decided in favour of the University the case was sent back to the District Judge for trial and decision on the merits. We have now to decide whether the order of this Court is one in respect of which leave can be granted to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

If the order of this Court is a "final order" within the meaning of section 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the leave must admittedly be given; if it is not final; the application must be refused.

The question of what constitutes a final order for the purpose of appeal to the Privy Council is one which has been the subject of much judicial discussion and it is apparent from the decisions which have been cited to us, and from others to which we have ourselves referred, that there has been considerable difference of opinion as to the nature of the test by which the finality of an order is to be determined. It is not necessary for us to examine these decisions, most of which are referred to in a case of this Court reported as Hyder Mehli v. Balshah Khanam (1).

We have before us a recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Ramchand Manjimal v. Govardandas Vishindas Ratanchand (2) in which judgment was delivered on the 17th February last by Viscount Cave. It was there laid down that an order is final if it finally disposes of the rights of the parties.

Applying this definition to the case before us, we are of opinion that the order of this Court is not a final order. All that has been decided is that the Benares Hindu University is a juridical person legally competent to discharge the functions of an executor and as such to apply for Probate. There still remains outstanding the question whether, being competent to apply, the University is entitled to grant of Probate. Before that question can be decided, the University must prove the facts which establish its right to have the grant and no such proof has yet been given.

The order of this Court by which the case has been sent back for the determination of this question does not finally dispose of the rights of the parties and is consequently not a final order.

This application is accordingly refused with costs.

Malabar custom—Tiyas of South Malabar—Females, right of, to reside in family house after marriage—Law applicable.

There is no custom among the Tiyas of South Malabar, whereby a female after marriage is entitled as of right to live in her parent's family house. [p. 210, col. 1.]

A person who admittedly belongs to the Hindu community and is domiciled in Southern India is ordinarily governed by the Hindu Law of the Shastras as expounded by the Southern Commentators. [p. 210, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 238 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Calicut, in Original Suit No. 170 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Appellant:—The appellant, who is a Tiya woman, is entitled to joint possession of the house with first plaintiff, her brother's son. She is not governed by the ordinary Hindu Law, but by the special custom in Malabar. The existence of the custom has been proved by witnesses who are characterized in the judgment of the Trial Court as "honest".

Mr. O. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents:—The custom has not been proved. The evidence of most of the witnesses reduces itself to a question of opinion and proves not a legally binding custom but a kind of convention, devoid of binding force. The fact that a Tiya woman's property is inherited by her husband and her funerals performed by him and his relations shows that she has no connection with her parents after marriage. The presumption applies that she is governed by the ordinary Hindu Law of Southern India which negatives the right. The onus of proof is on appellant to show that she is governed by a special law or custom varying or derogating from the ordinary Hindu Law.

JUDGMENT.

SADAIVA AIYAR, J.—Defendants Nos 1, 3 and 5 are the appellants before us. The case was argued only on behalf of the first appellant (first defendant). On the date of suit she was a married woman whose husband was alive. The house in dispute belonged to her brother whose son is the minor first plaintiff. The house was inherited by the first plaintiff's father from the father of himself and of the first defendant. Practically, the only question in this case is that raised by the 7th issue, namely, "whether, under the customary law obtaining among the parties, first defendant has a right to be in joint possession of the house and moveables, i. e., jointly with her brother's minor son, the first plaintiff."

I think it must be taken as settled law that a person who admittedly belongs to the Hindu community and is domiciled in Southern India is ordinarily governed by the Hindu Law of the Shastras as expounded by the Southern Commentators. Of course, where there are very wide and well known exceptions, as in the case of the Nair community in Malabar, such ordinary Hindu Law does not apply but the well-known Marumakkathayam system of law. But as I said we do start with the presumption that the general prevailing law of the Mitakshara applies to every Hindu. I do not think that there are any such observations in Rurichan v. Terachi (1), as can be treated as casting doubt on this prima facie presumption. On the other hand, the case in Kunhi Pennu v. Chiruda (2), and the judgment in Second Appeal No. 518 of 1901 decided by Benson and Moore, JJ., support the existence of that legal presumption. In the judgment in the latter case the learned Judges say, "where the nephew's widow of the last male owner claimed to exclude the ordinary heir of the Hindu Law, namely, the daughter of the last owner, her claim", that is, the claim of the nephew's widow, "is not in accordance with the ordinary Hindu Law and she has not proved any special custom in her favour."

That being so, if a married daughter claims a right of residence in her father's house even after her marriage, and especially where her husband is alive, the burden of proof lies upon her to show that there is a special custom varying the ordinary Hindu Law on which she could rely in support of her alleged right.

As regards the evidence given in the present case of that custom, of the six witnesses examined by the first defendant the evidence of the 6th witness is not relied upon by the lower Courts. It may be taken that both the Courts held that the other five witnesses were honest witnesses. I do not think that in second appeal we are entitled to question the opinion of the lower Appellate Court as regards the honesty of any particular witnesses. Taking it, then, that all these five witnesses are honest witnesses, we have to see whether the alleged custom has been sufficiently proved. As pointed out by Mr. Madhavan Nair for the respondent, there are certain statements of the 4th and 5th witnesses which indicate that, though they may be honest witnesses, their evidence should not be given much weight. As regards the other three witnesses, their evidence is only their opinion as to the existence of such a custom; such opinion evidence is, no doubt, some evidence on the question of custom but when it was put to the test to which such evidence should be subjected, as pointed out in Lachman Rai v. Akbar Khan (3), it is seen to be of little value unless the evidence establishes that the claim in dispute can be put forward as one which the community recognises as enforceable by law; it may amount to no more than that such a claim is a moral claim recognised by practice or convention and honoured by respectable people among the community. I think the learned District Judge has given very good reasons in paragraphs 7 to 9 of his judgment for his conclusion that no such legal custom as has been put forward by the first defendant has been proved in this case.

That a married woman after marriage is called by the family name of her husband, that her funerals are performed by her husband and his relations, that her property is inherited by her husband and his relations; all these make it improbable that the custom, namely, that of right she is entitled to reside in her parent's family house even after her marriage exists among this community. Without judicial precedents and without at least a few cases where a married woman was attempted to be deprived of her alleged right and was able to enforce it by the decisions of mediators or arbitrators or by the admission of her father or his relations, it is very difficult to find the existence of such a custom on the bare opinion of a few witnesses. The admitted fact that an alienage from her father or brother can defeat her so called right of residence shows that the right is not a legal right as in the case of widows in undivided families governed by the ordinary Hindu Law or in the case of unmarried daughters. I, therefore, agree with the lower Appellate Court and would dismiss the second appeal with costs.

SPENCER, J.—I agree that this second appeal should be dismissed with costs. In Rarichan v. Perachi (1) the learned Judges observe: "The word 'Makkathayam' is generally used in Malabar to denote the succession of sons in contradistinction to Marumakkathayam or succession of nephew." After the findings were returned they went on to say: "The evidence is to the effect that the Tiyas of Malabar are not governed by Hindu Law pure and simple, but that their usages with regard to divorce, re-marriage and inheritance are not entirely in accordance with Hindu Law, though the succession of sons does obtain among them." In Second Appeal No 512 of 1911 Benson and Moore, J.J., applied the ordinary Hindu Law to a case of South Malabar Tiyas following the Makkathayam Law and they required the widow of a nephew to establish a special custom among the community in her favour before she could be allowed to prevail over the rights of a daughter of the last full owner.

If the general principles of Hindu Law are applied and if succession of sons obtains among these Tiyas, the onus must fall on the first defendant, a sister of the last male owner, to prove her superior title to succeed against a son of the last male owner. In the opinion of the lower Appellate Court she did not discharge that onus.

The learned District Judge found that the defendants adduced no evidence to show that married women belonging to the families of Tiyas in South Malabar following the Makkathayam Law have ever been in the habit of enforcing a right to reside in the house of their parents against the wishes of those parents or their sons. Accepting the correctness of this finding, the second appeal must necessarily fail.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 14—Widow, when can claim benefit of section.

In the absence of anything to show that a widow has succeeded directly to her husband's holding, she cannot claim the benefit of section 14 of the Agra Tenancy Act, by counting the period of her husband's occupation towards the acquisition of occupancy rights. (p 212, col 1)

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Meerut Division, dated the 16th of October 1919, in the case of determination of tenure.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Zamindar's second appeal in a suit for determination of tenure in which the Commissioner has held that the respondent, a woman, has acquired occupancy rights in succession to her husband having received certain lands in 1317 Fasli in exchange for those formerly held by the husband up to 1316 Fasli.

It is urged in the appeal that the woman's tenure was the result of an entirely new contract and cannot be recorded as a continuation of her husband's tenure. Although the point was not definitely raised in the grounds of appeal, I put it to the parties that the husband, having died in 1316 Fasli and there being nothing to show that the woman has directly succeeded to the husband's former holding, there was strong ground for considering that the land she herself got in 1317 Fasli was in fact an entirely new holding. In the particular circumstances, I think that the widow cannot claim the benefit of section 14 of the Tenancy Act. There were subsidiary matters raised in the Courts below the chief of which was that both in 1317 and 1318 Fasli, another person, named Isa, was recorded as joint tenant with the woman. The Commissioner has held that this man, Isa, was merely a helper in the cultivation, being a relation of her deceased husband and he regarded the woman as the sole tenant. I agree with that view but, as I have already explained, I do not think that, in the circumstances, the woman is entitled to count the period of her husband's occupation towards the acquisition of occupancy rights. I would, therefore, allow the appeal and set aside the decree of the Commissioner, restoring that of the Assistant Collector, though on different grounds, with costs to the appellant in both Appellate Courts.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection was taken in this appeal as to the right of the respondent to be heard, with reference to an order made by Mr. Justice Spencer sitting in the Admission Court excusing the delay of the appellant in applying for leave to appeal as a pauper. It has been argued before us that, seeing that the appeal was presented within the time prescribed for the filing of appeals, the respondent was not really prejudiced, and other arguments to the same effect were urged before us. We are not prepared to accept this contention. It has been held by the Privy Council in Krishnasami Panikondar v. Ramasami Ohettiar (1) that, as regards orders of single Judges excusing the delay in the presentation of an appeal "it must, therefore, in common fairness be regarded as a tacit term of an order like the present that, though unqualified in expression, it should be open to re-consideration at the instance of the party prejudicially affected, and this view is sanctioned by the practice of the Courts in India." There does not appear to be any settled practice to the contrary in the case of applications for excuse of delay in applying for leave to appeal as a pauper and we do not think any difference ought to be made. The Civil Procedure Code regards orders giving leave to sue as a pauper as affecting the other side, because it gives the other side the right to be heard when an application for leave to file a suit as a pauper is made and the effect of Order V, rule 1 is that, when an application for leave to appeal as a pauper is made, and the suit was not prosecuted as a pauper suit originally, then the party has a right to be heard, and similarly under the proviso to Order XLIV, rule 2, where a suit was conducted as a pauper suit, the Court has a discretion to order an enquiry, and that implies that the other side should have an opportunity to bring before the Court such facts as may induce it to direct an enquiry. We do not think it is in accordance with the scheme of the Code, or with the general policy that a matter of this sort should be finally decided without giving the other side an opportunity of being heard. We, therefore, heard Mr. Venkatarama Sastri's objections to leave having been granted in this case his contention being that there is no sufficient ground. The case is rather on the line: but, on the whole, we are not prepared to differ from the conclusion at which Mr. Justice Spencer arrived. The case has now to be disposed of on the merits.

What happened was, this was a suit for partition and notice was given to both parties that it would necessarily be taken up on a certain day, as there was no other business for that day. The plaintiff appeared with his Vakil and one of his witnesses. Four witnesses whom he had summoned did not appear, and when his Vakil applied for an adjournment the Subordinate Judge asked him to pay the batta for warrants to procure their attendance. When he said he would pay the batta the next day, the Judge said that he had been guilty of gross negligence, refused the adjournment and called upon the plaintiff to go on with the suit with such witnesses, as he had. The plaintiff's Vakil thereupon said that he had no instructions and the Court proceeded to dispose of the case ex parte on the pleadings. We think that it was the plaintiff's duty to go on with the case as far as he could and we have seriously considered whether his refusal to do so should not lead us to refuse him any relief in this case. On the other hand, we think there was no foundation for the Subordinate Judge's finding that he had been guilty of gross carelessness. On the whole, we think that the proper order is that, if the plaintiff pays the whole costs of this appeal within one month from the communication of this order to the lower Court, this appeal will be allowed. Otherwise, it will stand dismissed with costs.

RABNATH BAKHSH V. GANESH PRASAD.

JUDGMENT.—I have heard the argument in this case and, although I am not prepared to follow the line of decision which was taken in the lower Appellate Court, I think the result here must be the same and that this appeal must be dismissed.

The facts of the case may be briefly stated as follows. One Debi Singh owned an 8-pies share, which he mortgaged by a simple mortgage to Jiwan Singh. Debi Singh died without issue and his successors were three of his nephews, Chandi Singh, Bachan Singh, and Pablu Singh. Each of these got the property to the extent of one-third. A suit was brought on this mortgage and a decree for sale was obtained by the mortgagee or his representatives. It is proved that the mortgaged property was put up for sale on the 20th of April 1907 and was purchased by a third party, one Sheo Prasad. The amount of the decree was Rs. 500. Before this sale had been confirmed the representatives of Pablu Singh, who had died, paid into Court a sum of Rs. 500 plus 5 per cent. on this amount for payment to the auction-purchaser. I am told that after the sale had taken place the purchaser, Sheo Prasad, deposited the full amount into Court and this payment which was afterwards made to him by the representatives of Pablu Singh seems to have been made under the provisions of section 310A of the old Code of Civil Procedure which was in force at that time. It is an admitted fact that the sale was not confirmed in favour of Sheo Prasad and we may take it that the result of this payment into Court was that the mortgagees got their money and that Sheo Prasad got the 5 per cent. to which he was entitled. These representatives of Pablu Singh are the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 5 in the present suit. After they paid off this money, it is said, they got possession of the whole 8-pies share which had been mortgaged, and thereafter they are said to have transferred it to the first plaintiff Rabnath Bakhsh.

It is admitted that, although the transfer of the entire 8-pies share was made to Rabnath Bakhsh, nevertheless the khewat showed that Chandi Singh and Bachan Singh were in possession of a one third share each.

Another fact to be mentioned is that Bachan Singh after his death was succeeded by his son Bhagwan Bakhsh who sold a one half of his one-third share to Ganesh Prasad and Chandika Singh, who are really the contesting respondents here.

The present suit was brought by Rabnath Bakhsh and his transferors. They sought a declaration that they were the owners of the entire 8-pies share. In the alternative, it was prayed that if they were held not to be owners of the whole they were entitled to a charge upon the shares of the defendants in respect of the Rs. 525 they had paid for redemption of the whole.

The first Court found that plaintiffs were not the owners of the entire 8 pies but held that a charge upon the property had been created by the payment by the plaintiffs of Rs. 525. It further held that the plaintiffs were in possession of the whole share and a decree was given to them entitling them to sell two-thirds of the property to satisfy a charge of Rs. 350, that being the amount for which the defendant's share was liable.

The defendants appealed. The lower Appellate Court has found that there was no charge on the property, that the sum of Rs. 350 could not be recovered by sale of the defendants' share of the property, and that any claim for a simple money-decree by way of contribution was time-barred. The appeal was allowed to this extent. The only question before me in second appeal is, whether the plaintiffs have a charge on the property by reason of the payment made into Court on the 24th May 1907.

The lower Appellate Court found, on the authority of a case reported as Nawab Jahan Ara Begum v. Mirsa Shuja-ud-din Bukht (1), that the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 5 by paying the decretal amount into Court in the year 1907 did not acquire a charge on the property.

If the decision of this question rested only upon the Calcutta authority on which the lower Court relied, I should have found it difficult to follow it, but, as has been pointed out by the learned Counsel for the respondents, the matter has now been set at rest by a recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (2).

So far as I can see, the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 5 only base their claim to a charge on this property upon the provisions of section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act. That section lays down that, where one of several co-mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property and obtains possession thereof, he has a charge on the share of each of the other co-mortgagors in the property for his proportion of the expenses properly incurred in so redeeming and obtaining possession.

What ver interpretations may have been placed upon this section it is quite clear that the charge referred to in the section can only arise in favour of "one of several mortgagors" who "redeems" the mortgaged property.

The question is, therefore, can it be said that when the representatives of Pablu Singh paid this sum of Rs. 525 into Court on the 24th of May 1907 they were redeeming the mortgage. It seems to me that the decision of their Lordships to which I have referred negatives that contention.

The suit which was brought on the mortgage executed in favour of Jiwan Singh was brought under the Transfer of Property Act before it was amended by the present Code of Civil Procedure, and there having been an auction sale of the property it must be presumed that before the property was brought to sale there was what was then called an order absolute for sale under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act as it stood before amendment.

In the Privy Council decision which has been referred to above, the language of section 89 has been judicially interpreted and it has been held that on the making of the order absolute under that section the security as well as the defendants' right to redeem are both extinguished and that for the right of the mortgagee under his security there is substituted a right to the sale conferred by the decree. It follows, therefore, that as soon as the order absolute for sale was made in the suit brought by the mortgagee, the mortgage security was extinguished and consequently, it cannot be said that any payment which was made after that order was passed was a payment by way of redemption. There can only be redemption of a mortgage so long as the mortgage subsists. After the mortgage comes to an end any payment which has the effect of saving the property from passing into the hands of third parties, is certainly not a payment by way of redemption. And, so, I have come to the conclusion that in this case the payment did not give rise to a charge in favour of the representatives of Pablu Singh who transferred to the appellant here.

The only other point which has been argued before me is one relating to costs. It is said that the contesting respondents, Ganesha Prasad and Chandika Singh, have paid an excessive Court fee in the lower Appellate Court which has not been properly taxed. After hearing Counsel on this matter, I am satisfied that there is nothing in this point.

The result is, therefore, that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Cuddapah, in Appeal Suit No. 116 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Gooty, in Original Suit No. 230 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. V. Venkatarama Aiyar, for the Appellants.—In an appeal from the final decree the whole question is re-opened and the merits of the interlocutory orders passed in the course of the proceedings may be re-agitated. It is open to the aggrieved party to show that he was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing. See Perumbra Nayar v. Subrahmanian Pattar (1). The position is also established by the Full Bench decision in Krishna Ayyar v. Kuppan Ayyangar (2). The provisions of section 105, Civil Procedure Code, warrant such enquiries during the hearing of the appeal from the decree. Defects and irregularities affecting the decision of the case may be rectified in the appeal from the final decree. Section 105 of the new Code is much more elastic than the corresponding section 591 of the old Code, and provides for cases of orders from which no appeal is provided. The absence of the expression 'such order' in section 105 is significant. See Privy Council decision in Maharajah Moheshur Sing v. The Bengal Government (3).

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Respondents.—There is a right of appeal expressly provided in cases of orders refusing to set aside ex parte decrees under Order IX, rule 13. When that right has not been availed of, the aggrieved party cannot claim an adjudication on the same in the appeal from the decree. The principle of the cases cited by the learned Vakil for the appellant do not apply to the present case. In Perumbra Nayar v. Subrahmanian Pattar (1) there was no appeal preferred against the order under Order IX, rule 13. In Krishna Ayyar v. Kuppan Ayyangar (2) there was no application to set aside the ex parte decree. Here the application was made and was rejected.

There is nothing in the language of section 105, Civil Procedure Code, to extend its scope to cover cases like the present, or to nullify the effect of the special procedure laid down in the case of ex parte decrees. To give successive rights to parties to agitate the same matter which has been set at rest would offend against the doctrine of res judicata.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUS RAHIM, J.—It is not necessary in dealing with the second appeal to state the history of the litigation, as it has been set out in the previous judgment of the learned Judge against whose decree this appeal has been preferred. Two questions have been argued before us. The first, which relates to the merits, is this whether the finding of the lower Court that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the appellants before us, had any notice as to Narasayya's title to the property. It appears that the property stood in the name of the plaintiff and Narasayya. The case of the plaintiff is that Narasayya had no title, inasmuch as he had paid his share of the consideration-money which he was to have paid. We must take it as found in a previous judgment in the course of this litigation that Narasayya had in fact no title although his name stood in the title deeds. The High Court in its previous order of remand had remitted two issues for trial. One was, "Had the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 notice of plaintiff's claim to the entire suit property prior to the transfer in their favour?" (2) Did they act in good faith and take reasonable care to ascertain whether defendants had power to make the transfer within the meaning of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act?" The first question has been answered by both the Courts in the negative and, there can be no doubt, rightly so.

The answer to the second question is what we are now asked to consider in this second appeal. The learned District Judge says that, although the defendants

Nos. 2 and 3 had no express notice of the plaintiff's claim to the entire property, yet the fact that for several years before the transfer the plaintiff claimed and received rent for the entire property from the defendants themselves was sufficient to call upon the defendants to enquire as to how the plaintiff claimed the entire rent. The learned Judge states his conclusion in these words: "The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 made no enquiries at all and there seems to be considerable ground for the theory that defendants Nos 2 and 3 wanted to annoy plaintiff in connection with the dispute about a house." Thus, the appellants failed to make any bona fide enquiry into the matter and in second appeal it is difficult to hold that the lower Court had not sufficient material on which to come to this conclusion. In fact, no attempt has been made by the learned Pleader for the appellant to satisfy us that there was really no evidence to justify the conclusion.

The next point for consideration is, whether the District Judge is right in holding that the order rejecting the application made under Order IX, rule 13 (section 108 of the old Code) was final and that it was open to him to deal with that question in the appeal against the decree of the District Munsif. So far as I can see, there is no direct decision on the question. Our attention has been drawn to the decision in Perumbra Nayar v. Subrahmainan Patla (1). But there the learned Judges expressly refused to decide the question whether, where an application to set aside an ex parte decree had been made under the special procedure provided in this connection and refused and no appeal was preferred against the order of refusal, it was still open to the defendant in an appeal against the decree to raise the same question and have the decree set aside on the ground that the defendant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing and properly conducting the defence. It was also suggested that the Full Bench decision in Krishna Ayyar v. Kuppan Aiyangar (2) supports the appellant's contention. But there no application had been made to set aside the ex parte decree under section 108 of the Civil Procedure Code which governed that case and that decision, therefore, cannot be taken as a ruling on the point in dispute before us. Krishna Ayyar v. Kuppan Ayyangar (2) proceeds on the basis that in a case where no application under the special procedure provided by the Code for setting aside the ex parte decree has been made, it is open to the defendant in appealing against the decree to take the objection in the appeal. But that does not cover a case where an application was made and rejected and the order rejecting the application was not contested by way of appeal from that order. Assuming that it is open to a defendant in the appeal against the ex parte decree to object to the decree on the ground that he had not sufficient opportunity to adduce evidence in a case where he did not choose to avail himself of the special procedure, it does not by any means follow that, where he did actually avail himself of the special procedure and failed, still it would be open to him to have the same question re-agitated by appealing against the decree. Mr. T. V. Venkatarama Aiyar, the learned Vakil for the appellants, argued that the language of section 105, Civil Procedure Code, is wide enough to cover a case like this. It says: "Save as otherwise expressly provided, no appeal shall lie from any order made by a Court in the exercise of its original or appellate jurisdiction, but where a decree is appealed from, any error, defect or irregularity in any order, affecting the decision of the case, may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal." That prima facie refers to an order from which no appeal is provided. But it is argued that the corresponding section of the old Code has been modified in order to extend the provision to cases of orders other than those from which no appeal is provided. In section 591 of the old Code the words were: "Where a decree is appealed from, any error, defect or irregularity in any such order affecting the decision of the case, etc." The word 'such' does not find a place in section 105 of the new Code. I am, however, inclined to think that this should not make any difference in the construction of section 105 of the new Code so far as this point is concerned. The word 'such' might have been intended, as pointed out in Woodroffe and Amir Ali's Commentary on the Civil Procedure Code, to limit the application of the section to orders passed under the Civil Procedure Code. In any case, the language of section 105 does not seem to me to give the defendants the right to re-open the question whether he had sufficient opportunity given to him to adduce his evidence in cases where he has availed himself of the special procedure provided by the Code and his application to set aside the ex parte decree has been finally rejected. To hold otherwise, would be opening the door to speculative litigation. Much emphasis was also laid by Mr. Venkatarama Aiyar on the observation of the Privy Council in Maharajah Moheshur Sing v. The Bengal Government (3) which has been quoted in a recent decision of this Court in Thimmanayanim v. Venkatcharlu (4). That observation was not made with reference to any such express provision of the Civil Procedure Code as we have now. It only laid down that the general law does not contemplate that wherever an interlocutory order is passed unfavourably against a party that party must appeal against it and, if he does not do so, he will be precluded from impeaching it in the appeal against the decree. That, however, is very different from what we are asked to hold in the present case. It may well be doubted whether an order rejecting the application made under Order IX, rule 13, comes within the sense of an ordinary interlocutory order such as was under consideration before the Privy Council. I, therefore, hold that this contention also fails.

In the result, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

OLLFIELD, J.—I entirely agree with the judgment just now delivered by my learned brother, and I supplement it on the second point dealt with only, because I recently had occasion in another case to refer to two of the cases relied on and my reference to them now appears liable to misconstruction. In Gadi Neelaveni v. Marappareddigari Narayana Reddi (5) I said that Coussanel v. Soures (6) had been overruled in Krishna

Ayyar v. Kurpan Ayyangar (2). On a closer consideration of the cases that seem to me to be mistaken. In fact Coussanel v. Soures (6) is overruled by Krishna Ayyar v. Kurpan Ayyangar (2) on a point with which we are not concerned in the present appeal and with which the Full Bench was not concerned. I will only add that the misdescription of the case in my judgment in Gadi Neelaveni v. Marappareddigari Narayana Reddi (5) did not affect the opinion expressed therein.

The point which Krishna Ayyar v. Kurpan Ayyangar (2) really decides relates to the power of the Court to order a remand. No case has been cited before us in which the question now under consideration, whether a party against whom a decree has been passed ex parte can proceed in succession under Order IX, rule 13, as well as by taking objection to the order placing him ex parte in his appeal against the substantive decree has been dealt with. On principle, it would appear that he could only do so at the expense of the rules as to res judicata; and there can be no reason why the adjudication on his application under Order IX, rule 13 if there were one should not be conclusive against him for the purpose of any subsequent appeal. In the present case it is suggested that the facts that his application under Order IX, rule 13 was not carried further than the District Munsif's Court and that he acquiesced in the District Munsif's unfavourable order, would make a difference to his right to appeal against the decree on this ground. The answer to this is that the District Munsif's order, not having been appealed against, has become final. It seems to me that it would be a matter for great regret if a party could pursue both of two alternative remedies in succession and that the recognition of a right to do so would be a unique incident in our procedure. I am accordingly relieved to find that such a right has not been recognised by authority. I agree with my learned brother in the order proposed by him.

Landlord and tenant—Occupancy holding—Rent, payment of, by tenant for himself and deceased brother—Lump receipt granted by landlord—Receipt, whether admission of tenant's succession to brother's holding.

The fact that a Zemindar gives a lump receipt for rent paid by a tenant for his occupancy holding as well as for rent on account of his brother's holding subsequent to the latter's death, is not tantamount to an admission by the landlord that the tenant has succeeded to his deceased brother's holding as occupancy tenant.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Meerut Division, dated the 13th of October 1919, in the case of ejection.

JUDGMENT.—The only ground urged in this appeal is that the landlord-respondent admitted the appellant-tenant to the occupancy holding of his brother Ude on the death of the latter, six years ago, and by the realization of rent acknowledged him as occupancy tenant of Ude's holding. It is not contended here that the appellant shared in his brother's holding. The case is distinguishable from the facts of Petition No. 3 of 1914-13, a case reported as Babu Ram v. Jait Ram (1).

In the present case there is nothing to show that any arrears due from Ude were realized from Bnola. There is no doubt that the appellant (who has a separate occupancy holding) did not share in his brother's holding.

In the case relied on, the evidence as to the collateral sharing in the cultivation was doubtful and the Member of the Board who decided the case held that the occupancy rights were admitted by the landlord, who had collected from the collateral arrears of rent due by the deceased.

In the present case there has been no such admission. The appellant was clearly not entitled to succeed and the fact that the Zemindar has given a lump receipt for the rent paid by the appellant for his own occupancy holding and the rent which he has paid for his brother's holding subsequent to

Hindu law—Antecedent debt—Necessity, proof of, whether necessary—Pious obligation of sons, extent of—Separation, whether affects obligation—Secured and unsecured debts, distinction between.

It is only when legal necessity cannot be established that the question of antecedent debt becomes material. [p. 221, col. 1.]

A pious obligation which arises only on the death of an ancestor and an antecedent debt which may support an alienation while the ancestor is alive, are distinct grounds on which justification for an alienation may be pleaded [p. 22, col. 2.]

There is no authority for the proposition that the pious obligation of a son or grandson to pay his ancestor's debts depends on whether the two were joint or separate in estate. The doctrine is founded on religious considerations to which the question of jointness or separation is entirely irrelevant. [p. 222, col. 1.]

Where a Hindu is under a pious obligation to pay a debt and pays it off by incurring another debt, the latter in turn becomes an antecedent debt binding on his sons. [p. 222, col. 1.]

Where the ancestor is dead, the pious obligation to pay his debts is not concerned with the question whether the debts are secured or unsecured, but only with the question whether they are lawful debts not incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose. [p. 222, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 29th March 1919.

Messrs. J. P. O. Bhattacharyi, and H. K. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Basudeo Lal, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

RAM SARAN v. MANGAL SINGH.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by Ram Saran, plaintiff, to enforce two simple mortgages by sale of the mortgaged property, which is the joint family property of the first defendant, Bhaya Mangal Singh, the executant of both mortgages, and his two sons, the second and third defendants, Thakur Prasad Singh and Shamsheer Bahadur Singh. The execution of the mortgages was not seriously disputed. Bhaya Mangal Singh did not appear. His two sons defended the suit and have defended the appeal on the ground that the mortgages are not binding on them or on the family property of which they are joint proprietors. The entire suit has been dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge except that he has given a personal decree against the first defendant.

The first mortgage, dated the 25th October 1911, was for a sum of Rs. 3,500 made up as under,—

	Rs.	A.	P.
1. Paid in cash before the Sub Registrar ...	2,260	7	6
2. Credited on account of a prior mortgage-deed of 3rd April 1911 executed in favour of the plaintiff's father by defendant No. 1 ...	1,239	8	6
Total ...	3,500	0	0

The plaintiff endeavoured to show that Rs. 940 of the amount paid before the Sub-Registrar was borrowed for an antecedent debt and the remaining amount of Rs. 1,320 for the purposes of a family business. The learned Subordinate Judge has disbelieved the evidence on this head and we agree with the reasons given by the learned Sub Judge for so doing. The evidence regarding the shop is of the most flimsy description. It had to be admitted by the witnesses in cross examination that the shop belonged to one Raghubar Dayal, the fact which they for the most part suppressed in examination in chief. This Raghubar Dayal might have been called but was not. In fact, in regard to each of these three items the plaintiff has preferred to rely on worthless evidence, when, if his claim was true, good evidence was available. Rs. 540 is said to have been paid to one Dhondhe, but though the document in favour of Dhondhe is said to have been returned to the first defendant after satisfaction, the defendant was not called on to produce it. As for Dhondhe himself, we agree with the Subordinate Judge that he is a partisan and worthless witness. The other item is said to have been paid as rent of the Balrampur Estate. That Estate keeps regular accounts but no witness representing the Estate was called to prove the payment, nor was any siaha or other account called for. It is unnecessary to say more regarding these items.

The learned Subordinate Judge, though he has not given any clear finding, appears to have accepted the evidence that Rs. 1,239-8 6 were credited in satisfaction of an earlier mortgage of the year 1911 which is on the record as Exhibit 8. We are satisfied with the truth of the evidence to this effect, which, indeed, has not been seriously contested before us. That mortgage carried a personal liability to re-pay the amount borrowed and, therefore, is within the rule laid down by this Court in Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (1) as to the effect of the Privy Council judgment, in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2). This rule has been recently affirmed by this Court in First Civil Appeal No. 127 of 1918, Ram Dei v. Suraj Bakhsh (3). It may be added that this debt would be binding on the sons on any view of the Privy Council judgment, since almost the entire amount of the deed of 1911 was borrowed to re-pay money debts not secured on the joint family property. Apart from the representation in the deed there is the evidence of the witnesses who proved it that it was executed in lieu of the prior bonds. The ground on which the learned Subordinate Judge has rejected this item is to be found in his remark that the plaintiff should have proved that all the antecedent debts, in lieu of which the mortgage deed purported to have been executed, were taken by defendant No. 1 for legal necessity justifiable under the law. This is a mistaken view of the law. It is only when legal necessity cannot be established that the question of antecedent debt becomes material.

The second deed was executed on 12th May 1915 for a sum of Rs. 8,000 the whole of which was paid before the Sub-Registrar. This sum is said to have been made up of three items:—

	Rs.	A.	P.
1. Paid to the Balrampur Estate in satisfaction of a foreclosure decree	7,017	7	9
2. Paid in lieu of a prior debt to Musammât Gaya Dei ...	653	3	5
3. Paid to Ram Het in lieu of a prior debt ...	346	0	0

We are fully satisfied with the genuineness of the first two items. A decree held by the Balrampur Estate against Bhaya Mangal Singh and others has been put in, as also the receipt for the amount paid which has been verified by the evidence of Saiyed Jafar Tyar (P. W. No. 14.), the General Agent of the Estate. The copy of the receipt put in shows that the payment was certified to the Court under Order XXI, rule 2.

As regards the second item, not only has the deed been put in but Musammât Gaya Dei's General Agent has deposed to the receipt of the money and has proved a registered receipt for the amount given by him to the first defendant only six days after the execution of the deed in suit.

The deed was a simple mortgage carrying a personal liability to re-pay which was not extinct when the amount was re-paid.

The third item we consider unproved. No deed was produced in support of it. The only evidence is that of the alleged creditor, Ram Het. He declares that Mangal Singh had taken a loan from him and re-paid it by instalments and that this sum of Rs. 346 was the last instalment. He admitted in cross examination that he made no endorsement of the payment on the back of the deed and gave no receipt. We are not prepared to accept his evidence.

The debt in respect of which the foreclosure decree was obtained was originally incurred by Kishun Dat Singh, the grand-father of the first defendant. The special grounds on which the learned Subordinate Judge has disallowed this item are four in number,—

1. That the decree was against three other persons besides the first defendant and, therefore he was not liable to pay the amount of Rs. 7,017 out of Rs. 11,286.

2. That Kishun Dat was separate from his grand-son and that a grand-son is not liable for the debt of his separated grand-father.

3. That the second and third defendants are Kishan Dat's great grand-sons and as such are not liable for the debt of their great-grand-father.

4. That a foreclosure decree cannot constitute antecedent debt.

The first objection is not easy to understand, in view of the fact that the learned Subordinate Judge had himself admitted in evidence, rightly or wrongly an agreement under which the debts of Kishun Dat were partitioned between his descendants and this debt fell to the share of Mangal Singh. It was objected in this Court that the agreement in question was not legally proved and the objection appears to be correct, but the fact that there had been an agreement appears from the mortgage-deed. The evidence shows that the plaintiff made enquiries and satisfied himself of the existence of this decree against the plaintiff and this is sufficient. The decree was, moreover, a joint decree against all four defendants and it is proved that Kishun Dat was dead when the deed in suit was executed and when the decree was paid off. A pious obligation on his sons and grand-sons to pay his debts had, therefore, arisen. The Privy Council, in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2), has distinguished between a pious obligation which arises only on the death of the ancestor on the one hand and antecedent debts which may support an alienation while the ancestor is alive on the other, as distinct grounds on which justification for an alienation may be pleaded.

The learned Subordinate Judge's second objection is based on an isolated remark in Trevelyan's Hindu Law to the effect that "the Hindu Law imposes upon a son and grand-son the duty of paying the debts of his father and paternal grand-father from whom he has not separated" (2nd Edition, page 308). The words italicised are taken from an obiter dictum in a judgment of the Allahabad High Court in a case in which a creditor was seeking to recover a debt of the father from the property of his separated sons [Fakir Chand v. Daya Ram (4)]. The only issue actually before the Court was one of limitation. Apart from this doubtful dictum, there appears to be no authority for the proposition that the pious obligation of a son or grand-son to pay his ancestor's debts depends on whether the two were joint or separate in estate. The doctrine is founded on religious considerations to which the question of jointness or separation is entirely irrelevant. As was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (5):

BAI SHIRINBAI v. RATANBAI.

"By the Hindu Law the freedom of the son from the obligation to discharge his father's debt has respect to the nature of the debt and not to the nature of the estate."

In his third objection, the learned Subordinate Judge appears to have fallen into some confusion of thought. The question is not whether a great-grand-son is liable to pay the debt of his great-grandfather. If the debt was one which Mangal Singh himself was under a pious obligation to pay, then the debt which he incurred to pay it off becomes antecedent debt binding in turn on his sons.

The fourth objection would have had great weight if Kishun Dat Singh had been alive. But where the ancestor is dead, the pious obligation to pay his debts is not concerned with the question whether the debts are secured or unsecured, but only with the question whether they are lawful debts not incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose. Moreover, the purpose for which this amount was paid would appear to constitute legal necessity. As the mortgage was made by the first defendant's grand-father, the property was ancestral property in the hands of his descendants and, but for the payment made by Mangal Singh, it would have been irretrievably lost to the family under a final foreclosure decree.

These are the only points which have been argued. For the reasons given above, we allow the appeal in part and decree the plaintiff's claim in respect of Rs. 1,239 8 6 out of the first deed with proportionate interest thereon, and in respect of Rs. 7,670 11-2 out of the second deed (Rs. 7,017-7-9 in respondent of the Balrampur decree and Rs. 653 3 5 paid to Musammat Gaya Dei in satisfaction of an antecedent debt) with proportionate interest thereon. The plaintiff and the contesting defendants will pay and receive costs in both Courts in proportion to success and failure. The decree will be prepared in accordance with Order XXIV, rule 4. No appeal has been preferred against the personal decree passed by the lower Court against defendant No. 1, and that decree will be maintained in respect of the remaining portion of the consideration of the two deeds, i. e., Rs. 5,324-12-8 with costs and interest as given in the lower Court's decree.

The plaint also contained a prayer for a personal decree under Order XXXV, rule 6, in case the mortgaged shares proved insufficient. We think it would be premature to grant this relief now. There will be time enough for the plaintiff to make an application for such a decree when the circumstances described in the rule have arisen.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

January 8, 1921.

Present:—Viscount Haldane, Viscount Cave, Lord Sumner, Lord Parmoor and Sir John Edge.

BAI SHIRINBAI—APPELLANT

versus

RATANBAI AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Will, construction of—Gift for life to widow with direction "duly, and as I have directed her orally", to make a Will—Direction, whether void for uncertainty.

A testator by his Will appointed his wife executrix with full powers of management, gave her his estate for life and empowered her "duly, as I have directed her orally, and according to the times, to make her Will." He also made a gift over in case his wife should die without making her Will:

Held, that the words cited gave the wife a general power of testamentary disposition and not merely a power exercisable in the manner specified in the oral directions: and that, therefore, the power was not void for uncertainty. [p. 225, cols. 1 & 2]

Hetley, In re, Hetley v. Hetley, (1902) 2 Ch. 866; 71 L. J. Ch. 769; 87 L. T. 265; 51 W. R. 202, distinguished.

Appeal from a decree of the Bombay High Court, (Scott, C. J., and Macleod, J.), dated September 3, 1915, reported as 51 Ind. Cas. 209, affirming with variations a decree of Beaman, J.

FACTS of the case and the material parts of the Will are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment. On this appeal—

Mr. Upjohn, K. C., (with him Mr. E. B. Rakes) for the Appellant, submitted that on the true construction of the Will the widow, Kuvarbai, though she had not absolute property, had a life-interest, with power to dispose inter vivos, and also a power of testamentary disposition. This latter power might be either general or special—limited to a power of selection amongst "heirs" and "heirs of heirs"—but, in the events which had happened it did not matter which it was. The Courts below had erred in holding that there was an intestacy and that the power of testamentary disposition was void for uncertainty. The case of Hetley, In re; Hetley v. Hetley (1), on which they had relied, was easily distinguishable: in that case, to see how the power of appointment was to be exercised, you had to ascertain what were the testator's wishes, verbally expressed by him to his wife, and it was held that parol evidence of these was inadmissible: here, on the other hand, the words "as I have directed her orally," are merely testator's reason for giving her the power, and do not limit the mode of exercise. The testator here goes on to dispose of his property in the event of his wife's not having disposed of it, that is inconsistent with his having told his wife how she was to dispose of it. [Reference was made to Thomson's Estate, In re; Herring v. Barrow (2): same case, Thomson's

Estate, In re; Herring v. Barrow (3) and Pounder, In re; Williams v. Pounder (4)].

Mr. E. B. Rakes, followed, and with regard to the meaning of malik mukhtiyar referred to Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (5).

Mr. Tomlin, K. C., (with him Mr. C. V. Rawlence), for the Respondents, submitted that the wife had not power to dispose of the corpus inter vivos: the words malik mukhtiyar simply refer to powers of management. If there is any power of testamentary disposition, it is bad. If the power is a special one, you have to find what the subjects and objects of it are: and you cannot define the objects by looking at the instrument which purports to execute it. The objects must be those defined by oral directions. You have to go to those directions to decide,

1. Whether the power is general or special.

2. If special, what the objects are.

The scheme of the Will is to keep the property together for the benefit of the family.

An express conferment of power plus the expression of a wish may be good: but here you cannot sever the conferment of the power from the words of direction. You must give some effect to those words: and the moment you have to find out what they were, the power fails: it is bad for uncertainty, as pointed out in Hetley, In re; Hetley v. Hetley (1) (supra), which was a very similar case, though the words there were less ambiguous.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C., replied.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT Cave.—This appeal, from the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, raises questions as to the construction of the Will of one Bomanji Kaikbushro Modi, who died in or about the year 1875. The parties are Parsis to whom the Indian Succession Act No. 10 of 1865 applies.

The testator made his Will, dated the 9th January 1872. By clause 3, after reciting that he had two sons, named Nuseerwanji and Sorabji, and a wife, named Kuvarbai; he appointed his wife as his executrix with full powers of management. By clause 4, after referring to his immovable and moveable property of all kinds, he proceeded:

"Of all that I duly make my wife, the said Kuvarbai, 'malik mukhtiyar' (absolute owner) during her life, just as I am the owner, and during her life none of my other heirs, representatives or relatives or kinsmen can question her in regard to any matter whatever."

Clause 7 was as follows:—

"7. Agreeably to what is written above, my wife shall, during her lifetime, duly carry on vahicat, (i.e., management) in respect of every kind of my property and effects and make expenses on auspicious and inauspicious occasions just as I (have been doing). And in her lifetime keeping God and Meher Daver (the Dispenser of Justice) before her mind, my wife shall duly, as I have directed her orally, and according to the times, make her Will, and all my heirs and the heirs of my heirs shall duly act agreeably to the same."

Clause 8 commenced with the following words:—

"Should my wife, that is to say, executrix, die without making her Will, that is to say, testamentary writing, as mentioned in paragraph seven above, then both my sons, Nusserwanji and Sorabji, shall duly become malik, (i.e., owners) in equal shares of all kinds of my property and effects, and both of them shall duly take certificate (that is, obtain Probate) from the Court," and there followed directions to the sons to pay out of the property which they might take certain sums to the testator's daughters and their children. Clause 10 contained certain dispositions which were to take effect if the testator's wife died without making a Will and if any of his sons should die before his wife. The Will concluded as follows:—

"I have made this Will of my free will and pleasure and while in sound mind and consciousness. My wife and children, that is to say, heirs, all shall duly act agreeably to the same."

The testator died, as above stated, in or about the year 1875. The testator's son Nusserwanji died in or about the year 1904.

It appears that the testator's widow, Kuvarbai, during her lifetime made over certain parts of his estate to her surviving son, Sorabji. Kuvarbai made her Will, dated the 16th May 1905, and thereby appointed her son Sorabji her executor, and after certain dispositions in favour of her other issue, concluded as follows:—

"With regard to my remaining immovable or moveable property and moneys in cash, &c., whatever there may be and wherever the same may be, and whether the same may be mine or whether the same may have been received by me on behalf of (from) my husband, or which I myself may have been authorised according to my husband's Will to give away, I make over the whole thereof (i.e.,) everything to my said son Sorabji Bomanji Modi."

This Will evinced a clear intention on the part of the widow to execute the power given to her by her husband's Will. Kuvarbai died in 1906 and Sorabji in 1915.

Shortly after the death of Sorabji this suit was commenced by Ratanbai, daughter and representative of Nusserwanji, against Shirinbai, daughter and representative of Sorabji, and other members of the family, alleging that the property made over by Kuvarbai to Sorabji remained part of the testator's estate and that Kuvarbai had no power to make a Will dealing with the testator's estate, and that the whole of such estate was divisible on the death of Kuvarbai either under clause 8 and the succeeding clauses of the Will or among the testator's heirs as on an intestacy, and claiming administration of the estate on the above footing. The defendant, Shirinbai, by written statement has denied the plaintiff's claim and alleged that Kuvarbai took an absolute interest under the Will, or a life-interest with power to dispose of the corpus during her lifetime or by Will. She also pleaded the Statute of Limitations. The other defendants who appeared supported the plaintiff's claim.

The Trial judge, Mr. Justice Beaman, held on the construction of the Will, (1) that Kuvarbai took a life estate with an uncontrolled power of disposition by acts inter vivos; (2) that the power given to her to dispose of the testator's estate after her death was not a general power but a special power enabling her to dispose of it in accordance with directions which he had given to her orally, that parol evidence was inadmissible to show the nature of the directions so given, and accordingly that the power was void for uncertainty [Hetley, In re; Hetley v. Hetley (1)]; (3) that as Kuvarbai had made a Will, although such Will was ineffectual to dispose of the testator's estate, yet she had not, within the meaning of clause 8, "died without making her Will," and accordingly that clause 8 and the subsequent clauses failed to take effect, and the testator's estate became distributable on the death of Kuvarbai as on an intestacy; and (4) that the suit was not statute-barred; and he made a decree for administration on that footing.

On appeal to the High Court, the learned Judges of that Court (Scott, C. J., and Macleod, J.) held that Kuvarbai took a life-interest without power of disposition by acts inter vivos, and varied the decree accordingly; but in other respects they affirmed the judgment of the Trial Judge. Thereupon, this appeal was brought by the defendant Shirinbai, the plaintiff and the other defendants being made respondents.

Their Lordships think it plain that Kuvarbai took a life interest only, and not an absolute interest, under the Will and it is convenient, before considering the nature and incidents of such life-interest, to consider the second question dealt with by the Trial Judge, namely, the nature of the power of disposition given to Kuvarbai by clause 7 of the Will. The relevant words are:—

"And in her lifetime, keeping God and Meher Daver (the Dispenser of Justice) before her mind, my wife shall duly, as I have directed her orally, and according to the times, make her Will, and all my heirs and the heirs of my heirs shall duly act agreeably to the same."

It is plain from the direction to the testator's heirs to act agreeably to his wife's will, as well as from the gift over, that these words were intended to give to the testator's wife some power of testamentary disposition over his estate; and the question is whether he meant to give her a general power of disposition or only a power exercisable in manner specified in his oral directions. In other words, did he mean that she should, in accordance with his oral directions, make her Will disposing of the property as she should in her discretion think fit, or did he intend that she should by her Will dispose of the property in accordance with his oral directions? In their Lordships' opinion, the former is the true view. The structure of the sentence favours it; for, if the testator had intended that his wife's disposition should be in accordance with his oral directions, the words "as I have directed her orally" would properly have followed and not preceded the words "make her Will." The direction that the wife's Will shall be made "according to the times," or (as Mr. Justice Macleod translates the Gujarati words) "according to the circumstances," and the reference to the "Dispenser of Justice," show that she was to have a discretion; and, although it may be conjectured that the testator had explained to his wife his reasons for giving her a power over his estate and had enjoined her to exercise it if occasion should arise, there is nothing in the Will to show that he had attempted by any oral directions to prescribe the manner in which the power should be exercised. Indeed, the latter clauses of the Will afford a strong indication to the contrary effect; for, if the testator had intended that his Will should be declared by his wife, he would hardly have proceeded himself to make a declaration of his wishes. The language of the Will in this case is very different from that used in the case of Hetley, In re; Hetley v. Hetley (1) (supra), upon which the respondent relied, where the testator, after giving his property to his wife for life, desired and empowered her to dispose of his estate "in accordance with his wishes verbally expressed by him to her" and made no other disposition.

For the above reasons, their Lordships are of opinion that, upon the true construction of the testator's Will, his widow Kuvarbai took a general testamentary power, which was duly exercised by her Will. If so, the questions raised at the trial as to the widow's right to dispose of part of the capital of the estate in her lifetime, as to the construction of the gift over in the event of her not making a Will, and as to the Statute of Limitations, do not call for a decision. Their Lordships accordingly express no opinion upon these questions.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be allowed and the decree of the High Court set aside, except as to costs, and that it should be declared that the testator's widow had power by Will to dispose of his estate. No order for administration appears to be required, but the plaintiff and the other persons entitled as legatees under the Will of Kuvarbai will have liberty to apply as to their legacies. The respondent, Ratanbai, will pay the costs of this appeal.

ATRA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

A lease fixed a monthly rent and provided for ejectment of the tenant on failure to pay rent. Rent was, however, made payable annually :

Held, that lease was a monthly one and did not require registration.

Second appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 11th June 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Class, Moga, District Ferozepore, dated the 7th March 1919.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sundar D.s., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for recovery of rent and possession of the house from the tenant. The Court below has dismissed the suit on the ground that the entry in the plaintiff's bahi is a lease from year to year that it should have been registered and, not being registered, is inadmissible and also excludes oral evidence.

It may exclude oral evidence of the contract but it does not exclude evidence of plaintiff's title.

AMEENAMMAL v. MEENAKSHI.

However, in my opinion the document, which may be treated as a very crude lease, did not need registration.

It is a lease of the hut or house for Rs. 0 8 0 per mensem, with a provision for ejectment if the rent be not paid. There is also a provision that, though the rent is payable monthly, it shall be actually paid at nimani each year; the first payment of Rs. 6 was to be made some five or six months after the commencement of the lease.

I do not think that this stipulation converts the monthly terms into annual terms. The lease was monthly at annas 8 per mensem but Rs. 6 had to be paid each nimani. There was nothing in the lease to prevent plaintiff from ejecting the defendant at the end of any month for which the rent had not been already paid, nor from giving him notice of the termination of the lease.

For these reasons, I accept the appeal, set aside the lower Appellate Court's decree and remand for a decision on the merits. Costs to follow final event. Stamp to be refunded.

Where a transaction of mortgage has become fully ripened, so that the rights and liabilities of the parties can be dealt with by the Court before which the suit is brought in respect of that transaction, whether the suit is for foreclosure by the mortgagee or for sale by the mortgagee, or in the alternative for foreclosure or sale by the mortgagee, or for redemption by the mortgagor, all questions, including even claims for rent due on transactions inseparably connected with the mortgage, relating to the taking of accounts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, ought to be decided in one and the same and in the very first suit and no second suit can be brought by either party for any claim arising out of that same transaction of mortgage [p. 224, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. (Both plaintiff and defendant are women). The facts out of which this suit has arisen may be shortly stated thus. The plaintiff was the simple mortgagee of certain lands under a bond of 1899 executed by third persons to her predecessors-in-title. She hypothecated that hypothecation right and other properties to the defendant in 1908 for Rs. 200. The hypothecated hypothecation right became barred in 1911, owing to a suit not having been brought against the third persons either by the plaintiff (the mortgagee under it) or by the defendant (who obtained transfer of that mortgage from plaintiff by way of security). Then the defendant brought a suit in 1915 against the plaintiff on her (defendant's) own mortgage of 1908 for recovery of the amount due to her. The defendant in that suit, (namely, the present plaintiff) pleaded that the present defendant (plaintiff in that suit) having by her default failed to sue for and recover from the third persons the money due under the bond of 1899 left with the defendant as security, she (the defendant) was liable to account to the plaintiff for much more than the amount sued for, on the bond of 1908 and that, therefore, the suit ought to be dismissed. That plea of the defendant in that suit (the present plaintiff) was accounted therein. It was found that more money was due to the present plaintiff by reason of the defendant's accountability for her default than was claimable by the defendant under the bond of 1908 and the defendant's former suit was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiff brought the present suit to recover the difference between the amount alleged by her to be due to her as damages, caused by the defendant's default and the amount due to the defendant under the mortgage of 1908. Several defences were raised in this suit. One of the contentions put forward by the defendant before us, namely, that the plaintiff has no cause of action and no right to claim damages for the defendant's default in suing the third persons (mortgagors of 1899) cannot be accepted, as the plaintiff's right to claim such damages was established in the former suit and is, therefore, res judicata.

The only defences which need be considered are: (1) that the suit is barred by limitation; and (2) that the suit is barred by res judicata, by reason of the decision in Original Suit No. 226 of 1915, that is, the suit brought by the present defendant against the present plaintiff for recovery of her mortgage amount and sale of the mortgaged properties. The District Munsif decided the question of res judicata in favour of the plaintiff but decided the question of limitation against the plaintiff and dismissed her suit.

As regards the question of res judicata the District Munsif's reasoning was that the causes of action in the two suits were different and, therefore, there was no res judicata. The lower Appellate Court did not go into the question of res judicata but decided the suit solely on the question of limitation holding that either Article 65, or Article 115 of the Limitation Act (three years period) applied and that Article 116, relied on by the plaintiff and providing a period of six years, did not apply. I do not think it necessary to go into the question of limitation, as I am satisfied that the District Munsif is wrong in his decision on the point of res judicata and the plaintiff's suit must fail on the decision against her on that point. The first suit was brought on the transaction of mortgage between the two parties entered into in 1908. The present suit was also based on that same transaction, namely, on the alleged obligation of the defendant created by law under the same transaction. The cases in Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Macnaghten (1), (1) 16 C. 682 (P. C.); 16 I. A. 107; 13 Ind. Jur. 133; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 345; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 451.

Vinayak v. Dattatraya (2), Rukhminibai v. Venkatesh (3), Satyabadi Behara v. Harabati (4), clearly establish, in my opinion, that where a transaction of mortgage has become fully ripened, so that the rights and liabilities of the parties can be dealt with, by the Court before which the suit is brought in respect of that transaction, whether the suit is for foreclosure by the mortgagee or for sale by the mortgagee, or, in the alternative, for foreclosure or sale by the mortgagee, or for redemption by the mortgagor, all questions (including even claims for rent due on transactions inseparably connected with the mortgage) relating to the taking of accounts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee ought to be decided in one and the same and in the very first suit, and no second suit can be brought by either party, for any claim arising out of that same transaction of mortgage. I shall only quote a few sentences from two of these decisions. In Vinayak v. Dattatraya (2), it is said: "Now, the question is one which arises directly out of the mortgage transaction, which was the subject matter of the litigation in the former suit. But the decree in a suit for redemption must be such as to enable the Court to do complete justice;...and, 'as far as it is possible, the Court endeavours to make a complete decree that shall embrace the whole subject and determine upon the rights of all the parties interested in the estate'...So in this case the claim on which we are now asked to adjudicate is one that could and ought to have been advanced in the former suit. Without a determination on it, there was not a complete adjustment of the rights of the parties.....Where a given matter becomes the subject of litigation in, and of adjudication by, a Court of competent jurisdiction, the Court requires the parties to that litigation to bring forward their whole case, and will not (except under special circumstances) permit the same parties to open the same subject of litigation in respect of matter which might have been brought forward as part of the subject in contest, but which was not brought forward only because they have from negligence, inadvertence or even accident, omitted part of their case. The plea of res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points upon which the Court was actually required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce a judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time.....The comprehensive character of suits relating to mortgages and the obligation incumbent on litigants to see that the decrees in them covers all their rights has been repeatedly recognised by the Courts."

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar attempted to distinguish this and some other cases on the ground that the first suit in those cases was a suit for redemption and not for sale and that there was a distinction between those two classes of suits, because Order XXXIV, rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure gives the mortgagor the right to recover moneys due by the mortgagee on taking of accounts as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, only in a suit for redemption. I am unable to accept this distinction as based on any intelligible principle. The fact that Order XXXIV, rule 9, expressly gives the plaintiff in a redemption suit the right to recover money due by the mortgagee, does not at all imply that if the mortgagor happens to be a defendant in a suit for foreclosure or for sale (or either in the alternative) he could not and ought not to claim the moneys due to him by the mortgagee plaintiff and the Court is not entitled to give him such a decree. On the other hand, in the case in Satyabadi Behara v. Harabati (4), the decision says at page 233: "The provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, which we have already analysed, plainly indicate, that in a redemption suit, the whole of the accounts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee must be taken. As was observed by Mr. Justice Poulter in Doolie Ohand v. Omda Khanum (5) the essence of foreclosure and redemption suits is, that in such suits, each party is entitled to enforce his rights; a plaintiff claiming foreclosure is bound, upon the accounts being taken, if the balance is against him, to pay that balance;...unless this were so there would be a multiplicity of suits ; to avoid this, it is necessary under a decree for foreclosure or redemption, that the accounts between the parties should be settled and discharged; if the balance is against any party, he must pay it." This is a well established principle of jurisprudence on which Order XXIV, rule 9 is based and it is not confined to cases where the mortgagor sues as plaintiff for redemption, but it applies to all suits in which accounts as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee have to be taken once for all. I do not think it necessary to go in detail into the questions of legal set-off and equitable set-off elaborately argued on both sides. No doubt, in a case of strict legal set-off the defendant is not bound to put forward his counter claim and a separate suit by him, will not be barred. But if he did put forward such a counter-claim by way of legal set-off and if the whole of that counter-claim was within the competence of the Court to decide, he cannot afterwards sue for any portion of that claim, if he did not get a decree for that portion in the first suit, in which he put forward that counter-claim. The cases in which the counter-claim is beyond the competence of the Court in the first suit, for example, where the first suit was brought in a Small Cause Court which could not exercise jurisdiction over the counter-claim, are irrelevant in the consideration of the point in dispute. As regards an equitable set-off, it arises out of the same transaction in most cases and it not only might but ought to be made the basis of a counter-claim in the first suit itself. The argument based on the language of Order VIII, rule 6 (2), that because it is stated that the written statement pleading a legal set off shall have the same effect as the plaint in a cross-suit, therefore, the Legislature impliedly said, that the Court in which an equitable set off is pleaded cannot give the same effect to that claim, as if it was a plaint in a cross-suit is based on a fallacy similar to that which I have already referred to, when considering the argument based on the language of Order XXIV, rule 9. These statutory provisions are based on general principles and the express recognition of those general principles in particular statutory provisions dealing with the particular cases cannot be treated as a direction to the Court to discard those principles in other cases. Then, some argument was based on a meticulous examination of the language of section 11, Civil Procedure Code. As I am clear that the counter-claim in the former suit is a cross-suit, not only allowed by the law, but required by the law to be prosecuted as a counter-claim by the defendant at the risk of her being debarred from setting it up afterwards, there is nothing in this contention. Even if section 11 did not strictly apply, the principle of res judicata is one based upon much wider considerations of general jurisprudence than are covered by section 11 and the authorities, which I have already referred to, clearly indicate that those principles, even if section 11 did not strictly apply, prohibit the second suit in cases like the present. I should not, however, be understood as doubting that section 11 itself, even construed strictly, applies to this case.

In the result, I dismiss the second appeal with costs.

SPENCER, J.—I agree that this suit is barred by res judicata. In Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Macnaghten (1), there was a suit by the mortgagees and when that suit was brought, the mortgagees owed some amounts to the mortgagors for rent, which the mortgagees did not pay. When the mortgagees got a decree for the amount, and after the mortgaged property had been sold, the mortgagors brought a suit to have the sale set aside by getting the rents which had accrued in their favour set-off against the amount due under the mortgage. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that the proper occasion for enforcing this equity of set-off would have been in defence of the mortgage suit, and, therefore, the plea was one which ought to have been made a ground of defence in the former suit, between the same parties, and the plaintiffs who were appealing were debarred from putting forward their claim in a separate suit. Now, in the case before us, it appears that in the prior suit, Original Suit No. 225 of 1915 on the file of the Additional District Mansif's Court of Sivaganga, the present plaintiff was there found entitled to at least Rs. 1,072 against the amount of Rs. 634, found to be due to the present defendant, who was plaintiff in that suit and consequently the suit was dismissed. So this is a stronger case than that in Mahabir Pershad Singh v.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. SRINIVASA CHARARI.

Macnaghten (1), because not only might this plea have been raised in the former suit, but it actually was raised and the suit was dismissed in consequence. Under Order XX, rule 19, of the Civil Procedure Code, the decree in that suit might have stated what amount was due to the plaintiff and what amount was due to the defendant and either party might have been allowed to recover what was due to each. In that suit, the present plaintiff was content to have the suit dismissed; she apparently waived her claim to the balance that was due to her and she cannot now sustain the present separate suit for a relief which she might have got in the former suit.

I agree that the second appeal should be dismissed with costs.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE MADRAS HIGH COURT.

December 16, 1920.

Present:—Lord Moulton, Lord Phillimore, Sir John Edge, Mr. Ameer Ali and Sir Lawrence Jenkins.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—APPELLANT

versus

SRINIVASA CHARARI AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.

An inam grant may be no more than an assignment of revenue, and even where it is or includes a grant of land, what interest in the land passes must depend on the language of the instrument and the circumstances of the case. [p. 232, col. 2]

Without apt words such a grant does not pass the right to minerals. [p. 232, col. 2.]

Title-deeds issued by the Inam Commissioner in Madras can confer no higher title than was originally granted; they cannot vest in the Inamdars a subject-matter not already belonging to them. [p. 233, col. 2.]

The fact that the Madras Government in its standing orders at one time disclaimed the mineral rights in enfranchised inam lands does not preclude the Secretary of State from claiming those rights. [p. 233, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court, dated the August 7, 1916, reported as 39 Ind. Cas. 337, dismissing an appeal from the Letters Patent from a decree of a Divisional Bench of the said High Court, FACTS.—The sole question in this appeal was whether the respondents had the right to minerals in the village included in their grant.

The facts of the case will be found in the report of the earlier proceedings contained in 39 Ind. Cas. 337; 40 Mad. 266.

On this appeal

Mr. Dunne, K. C., and Mr. E. B. Raikes, for the Appellant, submitted that the minerals were never granted to respondents' predecessors. It was clear from the Parsana, which was the best evidence of the original grant, that Government had a reversionary right. The Inam Register shows that the assessment was fixed from the point of view of cultivation. A jodi or quit rent was charged. Subsequently, in 1865, documents were issued to respondents' predecessors confirming the inams to them in freehold but these enlarged the estate only and not the property: their tenure was made better but the subject matter of the tenure remained the same. Whatever may have been the case before, since Madras Act VIII of 1869, it is clear that nothing done under the Inam Commissioner could vest in the inamdars a subject-matter not already belonging to them. It was not till 1905 that respondents began to lease out this land for mining: and, though they make out a case by prescription, both Courts have held that they have no prescriptive right to the minerals. A grant of a tenure at a fixed rent, even if the tenure is permanent, heritable and transferable, does not carry a right to the minerals in the absence of express evidence to that effect.

v. Brojo Nath Bose (4) and Girdhari Singh v. Megh Lal Pandey (5)

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—The principle of all these cases is that a grantee must show express words in his grant conveying the minerals].

The High Court judgment is based on the assumption that the holding of an inamdar is the same as that of a Zamindar, but they are widely different: before 1865 an inamdar could not even alienate.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. O. (with him Mr. Kenworthy Brown), for the Respondents.—As to ownership of minerals, inamdars are on the same footing as Zamindars.

I am in the position of a proprietor of lakhiraj, not an inamdar in the sense of a grantee of the royal share of revenue. We were entered in the Register kept under Madras Regulation XXXI of 1802, section 15. That register relates to persons who were holding land exempt from revenue: it had nothing to do with tenants. It was a register made under the Permanent Settlement. That register shows I am a landed proprietor: as such I have the mineral rights.

[LORD PHILLIMORE.—If you are a landed proprietor under a particular title, we shall have to construe the document conferring that title.]

We filed our documents showing we were proprietors before the Inam Commissioner which recognised them and said the land would be our absolute property. We have a parliamentary title: what the Act of 1869 took away is what could not pass: our claim is based on the title deeds not the two Acts. On the original grant there was a grant of the land: the burden of qualifying it is on the other side.

The whole subject of coal mines in Bengal is dealt with in Durga Prashad Singh v. Brojo Nath Bose (4) and the conclusion is that Government cannot claim revenue from them unless reserved.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown followed.—Till resently, the Madras Government took the view that inamdars had the right to minerals; Orders of Board of Revenue, 1880, Volume I, page 31. Government also paid compensation for the stone in land acquisition proceedings.

Mr. Dunne in reply.—The mere fact that Government as a matter of expediency did not claim cannot affect their rights. In no case, even in Bengal, has the question been determined between Government and the Zamindar, the cases are all cases between Zamindars and tenure holders.

In Durga Prashad Singh v. Brojo Nath Bose (4) Government was not a party.

The respondent's present case that he is a lakhirajdar under a Regulation XXXI of 1802 is new—neither pleaded nor proved. In their case they rest their title on the parwana there mentioned. But the very register they refer to shows payment of jodi.

JUDGMENT.

SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—The suit out of which the present appeal arises was brought by the Shrotriendars of the village Kulloor in the Madras Presidency, in order to establish their unfettered right to quarry stone in the lands of the village without payment of any royalty in respect thereof. Their claim has succeeded in all the Indian Courts, and the present appeal has been preferred from an appellate decree of the Madras High Court, dated the 7th March 1916, by the defendant, the suit, the Secretary of State for India in Council.

The title alleged by the plaintiffs in their plaint is a grant about 160 years ago of the village as inam to their predecessors-in-title by the Government that existed prior to the British Government. The plaint then alleges undisputed enjoyment, an admission of their title at the time of the inam settlement of the village, the acquisition of a prescriptive right, and proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act.

On the strength of this grant, and these subsequent events, they claimed a decree "establishing the full rights of the plaintiffs, the shrotriendars of the said village," to the rocks and hills within its boundaries. The defendant, by his written statement, did not dispute that there was a grant of the village, but he traversed the statement that there was any conveyance of the right of the State to the minerals in the village. He also contested the other matters on which the plaintiffs relied.

In these circumstances, the suit came on for settlement of issues, and it was ordered that the following issues should be tried:—

"1. Was there an outright grant of Kulloor village as inam to the plaintiffs' predecessors-in-title by the Government prior to the British Rule as alleged, and did the grant include the right in regard to minerals also in the village? And is this grant, if true, binding on the defendants?"

"2. Was the exclusive right to take the minerals in the village free of taxation conferred expressly or by implication on the plaintiffs' predecessors-in-title at the time of the inam settlement; if this right had been conceded by the Inam Commissioner in excess of what had been allowed by the original grant, was it within the scope of the authority of the Inam Commissioner to have done so; if not, whether the action of the Inam Commissioner is binding on the defendant?"

There were other issues, but they need not now be considered.

The findings of the Courts on these issues, and their decrees, are in the plaintiffs' favour, and, in accordance with them, the appellate decree of the 7th March, 1916, was passed.

The burden of establishing the grant is on the plaintiffs, by whom it is asserted, and it is for them to show, that it contained terms apt to vest in their predecessors the quarries, and the full right to work them.

Though the grant is not disputed by the defendant, when it came to proving its terms at the trial, the plaintiffs were in this difficulty that the original grant could not be produced by them.

The defendant, however, produced a register containing an English translation of a parwana which purports to be a copy of a parwana written in 1750 (Exhibit 1). Its genuineness is conceded and the document was properly admitted in evidence by the Court of first instance as evidence of the terms of the original grant.

In the circumstances of this case, it is the best evidence of those terms, and it is on the true construction of the terms so evidenced that the rights of the plaintiffs must depend. And, in so saying, their Lordships do not overlook what has been urged as to the effect of subsequent proceedings and conduct.

The document recites, (1) that the entire village Kulloor had been enjoyed for a length of time by way of Shrotriem for a yearly sum; (2) that it was so enjoyed according to the sunnads of former Princes; (3) that it was granted as a subsistence to Letohmi Narasimachary, Zunardar; and (4) that the original sunnads had been lost. It then records that the village was restored to the said Zunardar, and that the purpose of the restoration was that, having appropriated to his own use the produce of the seasons each year, the Zunardar might be assiduous in offering up prayers for the lasting prosperity of the Empire. The obligation was then imposed on him of paying regularly to the Sirkar, the established amount of the Shrotriem. It was a condition of this restoration that the village had been enjoyed according to the mamool sh-edamed.

Can then the plaintiffs successfully claim that under these terms the full right to the quarries and mineral passed to them?

Their Lordships think not. The grant was of a village in inam, and the rules of English Law as to real property in England can afford no guidance as to what passed. A grant of this description may be no more than an assignment of revenue, and even where it is or includes a grant of land, what interest in the land passed must depend on the language of the instrument and the circumstances of each case. There is nothing here to suggest that the original grant contained words sometimes employed in Indian documents, where it is the intention that the inam grant of a village should create such an interest in land as would vest the minerals in the grantee. Nor does the language suggest that any further benefit to the grantee was contemplated or intended than such as might be derived from the ordinary use of the land for the purpose of cultivation. It was not a complete transfer for value of all that was in the grantor; the interest bestowed was merely something carved out of his larger interest which still remained in him as a reversion: the grantor was the ruling power, the grantee a Brahmin whose assiduous prayers were engaged: a joti was reserved and the purpose of the grant was to ensure the subsistence of the grantee by the appropriation to his use of "the produce of the seasons each year."

The interest thus created was inalienable and heritable only by lineal heirs, so that on any occasion of forfeiture or extinction of lineal heirs the grantor or some one deriving title under him would come in by virtue of the reversion which had not been transferred. It does not accord with the scheme of such a grant that any person taking under it should have the power to consume its subject-matter by quarrying operations, even if an interest in land was created.

But, then, it is urged that subsequent events show that the shrotriendars acquired in one way or another an interest in the land of the village that entitles them to work the quarries without any obligation to make any payment to the Government. In support of this argument their Lordships' attention has been drawn to many matters and, in particular, to the title-deeds of the A series of Exhibits, the extract from the inam register (Exhibit J), the Regulations, Acts and Standing Orders relating to inams and a land acquisition proceeding.

Had these materials stood alone, they might well have been urged as suggesting an inference that the original grant was in terms that supported the plaintiffs' claim as to what passed under it. But in the clearer light afforded by Exhibit I they lose their evidentiary value and leave the terms as shown by that exhibit in no degree obscured.

No doubt, words are to be found which are in a sense appropriate to the plaintiffs' claim but they are used in a context to which they do not belong. Thus, to speak of "freehold" in the connection in which it appears, is merely a piece of inapt drafting, and cannot be regarded as a correct description of the plaintiffs' rights in this village.

Even in this litigation there is the same incorrect use of words used, as where the payment demanded by the Government is spoken of as assessment, whereas the demand is for a payment in the nature of royalty for the use and consumption of that which belongs to the Government.

Inaccuracies of this class can in no way assist the plaintiffs.

Apart from the contention that these materials furnish evidence of the terms of the grant, it is contended that a title was thereby created in the Shrotriendars to the quarries. But it was rightly decided by the final Appellate Bench of the High Court that the title-deed of the Inam Commissioners conferred no higher title than was originally granted. There is language in the Act of 1862 that might possibly be read as having the effect for which the plaintiffs contend, but this was corrected by Act VIII of 1869, and it is now clear that, though a larger interest was created, nothing done under the Inam Commission could vest in the inamdars a subject-matter not already belonging to them.

The land acquisition proceedings do not carry matters any further, for even without any title to the quarries it may well have been thought expedient, especially in the view then held, to proceed under the Act for the purpose of acquiring such interest as the shrotriendars might have in the surface. And at most these proceedings can amount to no more than action taken under a misapprehension of the Government's legal rights, and this could not make the law one way or the other, nor could it affect the Government's title.

As affecting the quarries none of these matters had any creative or disenthaling force.

It must be conceded that expressions which are ambiguous and to some extent compromising, are used, and the reason for this is not far to seek.

The Government of Madras have not always adhered to the view they now hold. Thus, in the Standing Orders (Edition 1890), it is declared that "the State lays no claim to minerals in enfranchised inam lands." But this view was changed, and in the Edition of 1907 it is laid down that "claims should be made to the State's share in all mineral produce in lands held on inam tenure" of the description there given.

PERTAB BAHADUR SINGH v. RAM DAS.

Authorities dealing with the relative rights of a Zamindar in Bengal and those holding by subordinate tenure from him were brought to their Lordships' notice, and were claimed by the appellant as conclusive in his favour. They refrain, however, from discussing them as this case turns on the true construction of the particular grant which is the foundation of the plaintiffs' claim in this suit.

Their Lordships, therefore, hold that this appeal should be allowed. The ordinary consequence would be that the costs here and in the Indian Courts should be thrown on the unsuccessful respondents. But there are circumstances in this case which induce their Lordships to depart from this rule. The value of the subject-matter in litigation is far below the appealable value, and it was as a matter of favour that the defendant was permitted to appeal, as this apparently was regarded as a case of general importance. Moreover, the respondents' resistance to the Government's demand was not unreasonable in view of the latter's earlier attitude in reference to minerals.

Their Lordships, therefore, think that there should be no order as to the costs either here or below.

Their Lordships accordingly will humbly advise His Majesty to allow this appeal, and to dismiss the suit. There will be no order as to the costs of this appeal or of the lower Courts, except that each side must bear its own.

RAM DAS AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.
Gift, deed of—Attestation—Proof, nature of.

In order to prove a deed of gift the production of a witness who identified the donor and also the attesting witnesses when the deed was being registered, and who was known personally to the Sub-Registrar, together with an entry in favour of the donee in the village records in succession to the donor, is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the law.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 31st of October 1919, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—The first ground of appeal has not been argued in this Court, and the genuineness of the shankalapnama has not been questioned.

The point argued by the Counsel, namely, the respondents did not claim under proprietary rights by virtue of the shankalapnama and that consequently their claim must fail as being based on a transfer of an untransferable right, is not mentioned in the grounds of appeal. And clearly respondents' claim from the first has been that they are transferees from holders of an under-proprietary (shankalap) right.

The second ground of appeal is that the deed of gift has not been proved. The witness produced is the man who identified the donor when the deed was being registered and who signed at the back of the document. The attesting witnesses, Ram Saeht Shukul and Chauharja Singh, also signed at the time of registration. They were identified by Nagaishar Ram, the witness produced in Court, who was personally known to the Sub-Registrar. The donees were entered in the village records in succession to Sheobalak, and I think that there has been sufficient compliance with the provisions of the law. The point does not seem to have been argued before the lower Appellate Court when a defect, if one exists, could have been cured.

At first Settlement, Gobardhan, father of Sheobalak, and in whose favour the shankalapnama was granted, held 19 plots the equivalent of 18 new plots now in suit. For the rest, the names of other tenants are recorded. But at the recent Settlement, his son Sheobalak's name re appears for all 40 plots. I agree that this fact, and the fact that the rent Rs. 44 is the same as in the shankalapnama, warrants the inference that the names of other tenants recorded at first Settlement, were those of sub-tenants.

Certain numbers in suit are omitted from the deed of gift. There are Nos. 559, 571, 616, 627, 662, 665, 681, 682 and 688. These numbers were all in Sheobalak's names at the recent Settlement. The body of the gift-deed conveyed to the donee every description of property which the donor held in the village. It is evident, however, that the bottom of the deed has been torn away by accident, and it is a fair assumption that the missing numbers may have been entered in portion.

I agree with the lower Appellate Court that respondent has shown prima facie a title to under-proprietary rights in all plots in suit.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

The effect of a covenant for title implied by section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act can only be got rid of by the vendor indicating by clear and unambiguous expressions that he does not mean to guarantee that he has good title to the property and is entitled to convey the same. Mere knowledge on the part of the vendee of a defect in the title of the vendor would not by itself defeat the vendee's right on the basis of such a covenant. [p. 236, col. 2; p. 237, col. 1.]

The recital in a deed of conveyance of previous transactions which form the links in the chain of the vendor's title, has not the effect in law of warning the vendee that the vendor has a title liable to be defeated because of some hidden defect so as to exempt the vendor from all liability. [p. 236, col. 1.]

Where owing to a defect in the title of a vendor to convey, the vendee is dispossessed in execution of a decree obtained against him setting aside the conveyance, the starting point of limitation for a suit by the vendee for damages for breach of covenant, is the date of the original decree in execution of which he is dispossessed. The fact that there is an appeal and second appeal in the suit would not postpone the terminus a quo to the date of the appellate decree, because an original decree is not suspended by the presentation of an appeal, nor is its operation interrupted where the decree on appeal is one of dismissal. Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Rajahmundry, in Original Suit No. 9 of 1918.

Mr. P. Somasundram, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. Ramadoss (with him Mr. K. Venkatarama Raju), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Upon the construction of Exhibit A, which is a deed of sale in favour of the 1st plaintiff (1st appellant), by the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 3, the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that it did not contain any express warranty of title and that the warranty implied by section 55, clause (2), of the Transfer of Property Act was negatived by a specific contract to the contrary embodied in Exhibit A. Exhibit A, recites: "it has been settled previously to dispose of by sale to you for Rs. 2,800 my right, title and interest in the marginally noted 30 acres, 59 cents of land." Then it sets out the title of the vendor beginning with a deed of sale of 16th March 1875 executed by D. Suryanarayana Raju's wife Venkataramaniah alias Ramaniah in favour of Chinnakondaraju and next the sale dated 21st February 1878 by Chinnakondaraju to one Jagannadharaju who sold the property to the vendor under Exhibit A by a deed, dated 30th August 1878. It goes on to state that the vendee and others had been in possession of the land under a cumulo granted by the vendor and that "you (the vendee) shall henceforward be enjoying the same hereditarily and with right of alienation by gift, sale or otherwise as you please. Removing the hindrances to this arising from my agnates or King or neighbour, I shall see that the sale is given effect to in your favour without any obstruction."

MAHAMED ALI SHERIFF v. BUDHARAJU VENKATAPATHI RAJU.

We understand that the phrase, "free of obstruction arising from agnates, King, neighbour or others," is the usual covenant for title used in deeds of sale in Telugu Districts. But it is pointed out that if that phrase imports a general covenant for title we must hold that the omission of the word "others" was deliberate and meant to qualify that covenant. It is not possible to accept this contention unless the phrase was used as an absolute covenant for title; it is difficult to understand what else could have been meant by providing against obstruction from vendor's agnates, the vendor being a male or from his neighbour. In our opinion, the omission of the word "others" can make no difference in this connection. And this is made quite clear from the next clause: "I shall see that the sale is given effect to in your favour without any obstruction."

The argument which found favour with the lower Court was based on the fact that the previous deeds of sale of this land, including the one by Suryanarayana Raju's widow, are specifically recited and also on the statement in Exhibit A that the "right, title and interest" of the vendor in the land was intended to be sold. As regards the last, that must be construed with reference to the subject-matter of the conveyance. What the vendor clearly wanted to convey was the fee simple of the land to which he claimed to be entitled, and the phrase 'right, title and interest' does not mean 'right, title and interest, if any,' and the phrase could not be taken to protect a vendor who, it turns out, had no saleable interest at all in the property. The recital of the previous transactions which formed the links in the chain of the vendor's title has not the effect in law of warning the vendee that the vendor had no title or that he had a title liable to be defeated because of some hidden defect so as to exempt the vendor from all liability. We think Exhibit A contains an express covenant for title. Even supposing that it does not, still a contract on the part of the seller would be imported by virtue of section 55, clause (2), of the Transfer of Property Act to the effect that the interest which he professed to transfer to the buyer subsisted and that he had power to transfer the same. We have already indicated that, upon the terms of the document, the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that a contract to the contrary could be gathered from the terms of Exhibit A within the meaning of section 55.

The law is well settled that the effect of a covenant for title is not to be got rid of except by the vendor indicating to the purchaser by use of clear and unambiguous expressions that he did not mean to guarantee that he had a good title to the property and was entitled to convey the same. It will be sufficient, in this connection, to refer to the case of Seaton v. Mapp (1) where, at page 862, Knight Bruce, V. C., says: "When the vendor sells property under stipulations which are against common right, and places the purchaser in a position less advantageous than that in which he otherwise would be, it is incumbent on the vendor to express himself with reasonable clearness; if he uses expressions reasonably capable of misconstruction, if he uses ambiguous words, the purchaser may generally construe them in the manner most advantageous to himself," and to the case of Page v. Mullan Railway Co. (2) where it is stated: "If a vendor does not intend that his covenant for title shall extend to defects disclosed to the purchaser, whether on the face of the deed or aliunde, the vendor must take care not to word his covenant so as in terms to cover such defects, or he must insert some clause in the deed clearly explaining and controlling his covenant. This is in accordance with the ordinary rules of construction and with fair dealing..... There is no authority for not giving effect to the clear and express words of a vendor's covenant for title simply because a defect covered by them was disclosed by a recital in the conveyance." The same rule of law is laid down in Raga Aiyangar v. Samachariar (3) and Digambar Das v. Nishulala Deb (4).

Reliance was placed by the learned Vakil for the respondent on a judgment of Subramania Aiyer and Davis, JJ., in Subramania Aiyer v. Samintha Ayyar (5). We do not find that the law is laid down differently there. All that is laid down is that an express covenant will do away with the effect of all the implied ones and that the insertion of any express covenant on the part of the grantor would qualify and retrain the force and operation of an implied covenant within the import and effect of an express covenant. In that case it was held that there was a special contract by which the vendor bound himself to pay a fixed sum of money by way of damages and that the plaintiff, therefore, was not entitled to any other rights which the general law, but for this contract, would have given him. It must be taken to be well established that mere knowledge on the part of the vendee of a defect in the title of the vendor would not by itself defeat the vendor's right on the basis of a covenant implied by section 55, clause (2). See Subaraya Reddiar v. Rajagopala Reddiar (6), Thekkemannengath Raman v. Kakkestori Pathiyot Manakkal (7) and Vellayappa Rowthen v. Buva Rowthen (8).

The next question argued before us is one of limitation and the facts which gave rise to it are as follows:—The sale to the appellant, as already stated, was on the 5th May 1896. The reversioners to the estate of Suryanarayanaraju to whom this property belonged and whose widow made the sale on which the present vendor's title is based obtained a decree on 30th March 1911 setting aside the widow's sale. They obtained possession on 29th November 1911. An appeal having been filed from that decree by the present plaintiff the decree of the first Court was upheld by the High Court on the 7th October 1914. The present suit was instituted on the 6th October 1917. The learned Subordinate Judge overruled the plea of limitation, firstly, on the ground that Article 97, which lays down three years for a suit for money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards failed, from the date of the failure applied and, following the decision of this Court in Rajagopalan v. Tirupananthal

Thambiran (9), he held that time would be counted from the date of the decision of the High Court, that is, 7th October 1914, so far as Article 97 is concerned, according to a very recent decision of the Privy Council reported as Hukum Ohand Boid v. Pirthichand Lal Chowdhury (10), time would run from the judgment of the first Court and would not be postponed till the decision of the Appellate Court. Sir Lawrence Jenkins, who delivered the judgment of the Board, says at page 678*: "Both Courts have held that the failure of consideration was at the date of the first Court's decree. Their Lordships feel no doubt that as between these two decrees this is the correct view, for whatever may be the theory under other systems of law, under the Indian law and procedure an original decree is not suspended by presentation of an appeal, nor is its operation interrupted where the decree on appeal is one of dismissal." The ruling of this Court relied on by the Subordinate Judge and other rulings to that effect must, therefore, to this extent, be held not to be good law. But we think that the Subordinate Judge was right in applying Article 116, which allows six years for a suit for compensation for the breach of the contract in writing registered from the date of the breach. In this case there is not only an express covenant for title but also one for quiet enjoyment and that latter covenant must be taken to have been broken when the plaintiff was dispossessed and possession was given to the reversioners i. e., (on the 29th November 1911). In the case before the Judicial Committee above referred to it was also contended that the period of limitation should be taken to have begun to run when the plaintiff's possession was lost. But they held that the quality of possession acquired by the purchaser in that case (it was apparently merely formal and not actual possession) was such as to exclude the idea that the starting point was to be sought in the disturbance of possession. But that could not be predicated of the possession of the present plaintiffs, who were in actual possession and enjoyment of the property until dispossessed in execution of the decree obtained by the reversioners.

It has been held in some cases that, where a deed of sale is found to be void ab initio, the cause of action for breach of covenant for title arises on the date of sale, see Venkatanarasimhulu v. Peramma (11)], if the suit is one covered by Article 62. But in this case it could not be said that the cause of action for compensation for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment arose on the date of sale. The sale was not void ab initio but only voidable at the instance of the reversioners. The covenant for quiet possession could not be said to have been broken until the date of disturbance of the plaintiff's possession.

The appeal must be allowed and the plaintiffs will have a decree for damages which will be assessed as follows:—Rs. 2,800 the price which the first plaintiff paid for the property plus interest on that amount at 6 per cent. from the date of dispossession, namely, 29th November 1911 plus the amount of mesne profits which they had to pay under the decree in the reversioners suit, viz., Rs. 1,071 and also costs paid by them under that decree amounting to Rs. 1,272 10-0. The plaintiffs will have their costs from the respondents both in this and in the lower Court.

Suit to eject trespasser as tenant, maintainability of.*

Where a landlord chooses to treat a trespasser as a tenant and sues for ejectment, he is quite entitled to do so and section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act applies to such a case.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Meerut Division, dated the 8th of May 1919, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HARRISON, J. M.,—(November 5, 1919).—In this case the defendants-respondents were apparently in possession of the whole plot No. 852 which, however, belongs to the proprietors of three different *khata*s of the khewat. Khata No. 2 belongs to mahal Ram Saran of which the plaintiff appellant is the lambardar. It appears from the patwari's evidence that there was some boundary dispute between the owners of khata No. 2 and the other *khata*s interested in this plot and ultimately a portion measuring 7 biswas was marked off as the share belonging to khata No. 2. The defendants-respondents had been in possession of the whole plot No. 852 apparently as khudkasht and when this new boundary marking off these 7 biswas was erected, they ceased, of course, to hold the land as khudkasht, for it remained their own property no longer. The appellant, lambardar of the other khata, then sued to eject them with reference to section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act choosing to treat them as tenants. The Assistant Collector decreed the claim but the Commissioner reversed the decision on the ground that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties. It seems true that this is clearly a case to which section 34 applies and it has been repeatedly held that if the land-holder chooses to treat a trespasser as a tenant and sues for ejectment, he is quite entitled to do so. For this reason, I consider that the Commissioner's decision is wrong in law, and I would allow the appeal and restore the order of the Assistant Collector with costs to the appellant in all Courts.

Appeal against the decree of the City Civil Court, Madras, in Original Suit No. 306 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. R. Venkata Rama Sastriar (with him Messrs. T. Sunlara Row, Konnusawmy Aiyar, and Narainswamy Aiyar), for the Appellant.—The plaintiffs are entitled to the deposit amount by virtue of their having been nominated as payees by the deceased depositor. The very object of nomination and of changing the nominee at the pleasure of the depositor, is, under the rules of the Nidhi, to enable them to know beforehand to whom they should pay the money. Such provision exists in the case of Friendly Societies and Insurance Companies where the nominees were held entitled to the moneys. See Ashby v. Costin (1), Bennet v. Slater (2), Davies, In re; Davies v. Davies (3) and Florina Marties v. Pinto (4). In Florina Marties v. Pinto (4) there are observations to the effect that even where the nomination is ambulatory in character and the nominator has discretion to change his nominees, where the Society undertakes to pay a particular person, that person is entitled to the money.

Though the plaintiff's claim cannot be supported on the basis of a Will or a trust, it is sustainable in enforcement of a contract between the deceased Naganatha Tawker and the Nidhi that the deposit should be re-paid to the plaintiffs on Naganatha's death. The nomination would otherwise be a meaningless superfluity. The fact that the nominees were strangers to the contract does not affect the question, as the contract was for their benefit. Iswaram Pillai v. Taregan (5).

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar (with him Messrs. Nanabhoy Davey, A. V. Seshaya and M. Patanjali Sastri), for the Respondents.—The nomination is one of the formalities to be observed in fixed deposit applications to funds and Nidhis. It cannot operate or be enforceable as a Will. Plaintiff's right could be sustained only if they could produce a Will of the late Naganatha Tawker executed with due formalities. Even if the nomination could be treated as a Will it is unenforceable without Probate.

There is no question that the Nidhi is liable in any fiduciary capacity to account to the plaintiffs. No trust was created and none can be implied. The cases relied on by the other side bear on the construction of the Friendly Societies Act. In Ashby v. Costin (1) the Friendly Society could, under their rules, distribute the insurance money among the relations of the deceased. In Florina Marties v. Pinto (4), there was a special contract between the deceased and his nominee for consideration paid by the latter. In these Friendly Societies the money was not treated as the absolute property of the subscriber. Here, the deceased had absolute dominion over the property. He could renew or withdraw it without any consent by the Nidhi.

NANA TAWKER v. BHAVANI BOYER.

The nomination could not be treated as a contract with the Nidhi. There is nothing to show that the Nidhi undertook to pay the money to the plaintiffs. The deposit receipt, Exhibit II, contains no reference to it. The receipt is 'not transferable' forbidding assignment. Rule 36 deals only with change of nominees.

Even if the nomination is a contract plaintiffs were not parties to it and could not enforce it. See Shankar Vishwanath Wagh v. Umabai Sadashiv Wagle (6).

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—The deceased, T. Naganatha Tawker, on the 14th May 1913 applied by letter, Exhibit II, to the Nidhi, which is the first defendant in the case, and requested them to receive payment of Rs 200 for twelve months on fixed deposit. The application, which was made in a printed form provided by the Nidhi, contained certain particulars to be filled in by the depositor including the following :

"Name of the person entitled to receive the deposit paid by me after me, relationship, profession or occupation". Against this he entered the names of the present plaintiffs. "T. Nana Tawker, elder brother's son, T. Kripasunker Tawker, grandson." He then received from the Nidhi the fixed deposit receipt in the usual form, Exhibit I, which provided that interest would cease at the end of the twelve months, when the receipt should be sent for renewal of payment bearing a one anna stamp.

Article 36 of the Articles of Association of the Nidhi which was registered under the Indian Companies Act may be translated as follows: "If any accident should happen to one of the signatories in order to transfer the share, etc., to which he is entitled he must write giving specific details as to the person to be entitled to receive the money after his death or his heirs may receive it....Should any one desire to alter the names of the said persons it can be done on payment of a fee of annas two". It is stated by the learned Judge that the depositor was a member or subscriber of Nidhi, and this has not been questioned before us. Consequently, the Articles of Association were binding as between him and the company. It was also admitted, as stated by the learned Judge, that the nomination in Exhibit II must be taken to have been made pursuant to Article 36.

On these facts the learned Judge has held that the right to receive the deposit is in the second defendant, the heir of the deceased, and not in the plaintiffs, the nominees under Exhibit II.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri in support of the appellant's claim relied on Ashby v. Oostin (1), Davies, In re, Davies v. Davies (3), and Bennet v. Slater (2) Florina Marties v. Pinto (4). Bennet v. Slater (2) was a decision on the construction of section 15 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, and is of no assistance. In Ashby v. Oostin (1) the action was in respect of the insurance money which had been paid to the defendant by an unregistered Friendly Society to which the deceased belonged. The rules empowered the Society to distribute the insurance money among the relatives specified in such proportions as they should think fit, unless the deceased had otherwise bequeathed it and if the deceased left no such surviving relatives and had not made a Will they were only liable for his funeral expenses. Cave, J., held that, on the death of the subscriber, the Society, by the terms of the contract, were entitled to deal with the money in the manner provided in the rules. The decision in Florina Marties v. Pinto (4) was a similar case. In Davies, In re; Davies v. Davies (3), again, the case related to the insurance money payable under a policy entered into with an unregistered Friendly Society. Under these rules, the insurance money was payable to the nominee of the policy-holder and, in default of nomination, to his assignee and, in default of assignment, to his widow, and, if he left no widow, to his children living at his death in equal shares. This, again, was treated by North, J., as a contract with the society that the insurance money should be applied on the member's death in this way and as having authorised them to divide it among his daughters in the event which happened. Both these cases proceeded on the footing that, under the contract, the insurance money was not the absolute property of the subscriber. North, J., observing in the latter case that he had a contingent interest which would have become absolute on the happening of a certain event which, however, did not happen. It is, in my opinion, unnecessary to consider these decisions in the present case because here the fixed deposit all along formed part of the subscriber's estate, and was repayable to him at the end of each period of twelve months unless renewed. The case is just the same as if the Bank of Madras or any other Bank which takes fixed deposits were to require the appellant, as in this case, to fill in a form containing the name of the person to whom it was to be paid after the depositor's death. In such a case it might be said to be a term of the contract entered into between the parties that, if the fixed deposit became payable after the depositor's death, it should not go under the ordinary law of succession to his legal representative and, as regards the beneficial surplus, to the next of kin of the beneficiaries under his Will, but to some one else. The law, however, is that, in the absence of a Will, the next of kin are entitled to succeed and if any one desires that any portion of his estate should go to any one else, his only course is to make a Will in the proscribed form. The nomination in the present case cannot be enforced as a Will as it is not attested by two witnesses and Probate has not been obtained as required by the Hindu Wills Act in the case of Wills executed in a Presidency Town. Therefore, no effect can be given to it. This view is in accordance with a decision of the Irish Courts in Towers v. Hogan (7). A nomination of this kind, in the language of Lord Cozens-Hardy in Williams, In re, Williams v. Ball (8), "seems to be, if anything, in the nature of a testamentary instrument" and must, therefore, fail for want of due execution. There can be little doubt that there, as in the present case, the object was to avoid the trouble and expense of taking out Probate or Letters of Administration, but the method adopted is one which the law cannot recognize. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

KRISHNAN, J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the City Civil Court in Original Suit No. 306 of 1918 dismissing the plaint iff's suit. The facts of the case are undisputed. The first defendant is a Nidhi or Fund carrying on business in Madras and is registered under the Indian Companies Act. One Naganatha Tawker, a share-holder in it, deposited a sum of Rs. 200 in the Nidhi in May 1913 as a fixed deposit for a year under receipt, Exhibit I. That receipt is in the following terms:

"Received from T. Naganatha Tawker Rs. 200 only as a deposit repayable 12 months after date with interest at the rate of  $7\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. per annum.

"N. B.—Interest will cease at the expiration of the above period of 12 months when this receipt must be sent in for payment or renewal endorsed by the depositor."

It also adds "not transferable". This is the usual form of fixed deposit receipt that Banks and Funds issue. When making this deposit, Naganatha Tawker put in an application to the Fund for the purpose on a printed form as prescribed by the rules of the Fund. It is filed as Exhibit II. One column in it was headed "name of the person entitled to receive the deposit paid by me, after me, his relationship and profession or occupation"; under that heading Naganatha Tawker had filled up the names of the two plaintiffs.

Naganatha Tawker died sometime in 1915 without renewing the deposit or withdrawing the money. In this suit plaintiffs claim the money as the nominees in Exhibit II against Naganatha Tawker's heir at law, his daughter, the second defendant. The learned City Civil Judge held that the nomination gave the plaintiffs no right to recover the money and dismissed their suit and hence the appeal.

It is clear on the facts, and it is not denied, that the right to the deposit money continued to be in the depositor till his death and that he was entitled to deal with it or to withdraw it as he pleased. No consent of the Fund was necessary to enable him to exercise full dominion over the amount after the period of the fixed deposit was over. It was also open to him under rule 36 of the Articles of Association of the Fund to change his nominees as he pleased on paying merely a registering fee of 2 annas to the Fund, though he did not do so in the present case. In these circumstances, it was conceded by Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar for the appellant, that he could not support his client's claim on the basis of an assignment or of a trust. The retention of dominion over the money by Naganatha Tawker is altogether inconsistent with either position. See Warriner v. Rogers (9) as to trusts. The arrangement as one intended to take effect after the death of Mr. Tawker is clearly in the nature of a testamentary disposition and could have been well supported as a Will if the formalities required by law for a Will had been complied with. As Exhibit II was executed in Madras, the Hindu Wills Act will apply to it and if it is to be treated as a Will, it should have been attested by two witnesses at least but unfortunately for the plaintiffs it is only attested by one. It, therefore, fails as a Will, and even as a valid Will there is the farther difficulty in their way that no Probate or Letters of Administration has been obtained to enable them to maintain a suit on it.

Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar, therefore, conceded that he could not support his client's case on the basis of a Will either, but, as I understood him, he contended that it was a part of the contract of deposit between Naganatha Tawker and the fund that the latter should re-pay the money to the plaintiffs in the event of the former's death without having withdrawn it or changed, the names of his nominees and, as that event has happened, the plaintiffs, as such nominees, became entitled to the money as against the heir-at-law of Naganatha Tawker. For this argument he has first to establish that the Fund had undertaken to pay the nominees as alleged; or, in other words, the payment to the nominees was a part of the contract between Naganatha Tawker and the Fund. I am not satisfied that this has been proved. The receipt, Exhibit I, which contains the terms under which the deposit was made makes no reference to payment to nominees. In fact, it expressly provides for the depositor to endorse and return it for payment or renewal and excludes by the words "not transferable" any assignee claiming the money. We have not been referred to any rule in the Articles of Association of the Fund requiring the deposit to be repaid to the nominees on the depositor's death. Rule 36 merely deals with the change of names of the nominees or heirs and rule 37 has reference only to share monies and not to any deposit. Therefore, no term can be imported into the contract of deposit as implied by the rules, to re-pay to the nominees. No doubt, the deposit was made in pursuance of the application, Exhibit II, but there is nothing in Exhibit II to show that the Fund was bound to pay or undertook to pay the nominees or that the statement in it was anything more than a mere representation by Naganatha Tawker to the Fund as to who he wished to be treated as the heir to this money on his death, which the Fund may or may not act upon as they choose. Even if it is treated as a direction or mandate to the Fund to pay to the nominees, it will still fall short of a contract and the fact that it was open to Naganatha Tawker to change his nominees at any time as he pleased without the concurrence of the Fund and to withdraw the money if he chose is rather in favour of the contention that there was in reality no contract as to payment to the nominees. If the contract is not proved the first plaintiff's argument based on the existence of such a contract must fail. Treated as a mandate, it was of no effect as it became revoked by Naganatha Tawker's death. See Williams, In re, Williams v. Ball (8),

But even if we take it that the nomination of the plaintiffs was sufficient in law to make the payment to them of the deposit money on Tawker's death a part of the contract between him and the Fund, I think we should still hold that the plaintiffs, who were no parties to that contract, obtained thereby no right to the money. To hold otherwise will be, it seems to me, to allow a testamentary disposition of property to be made in the form of a contract and thereby enable parties to dispense with the formalities of the Hindu Wills Act and the necessity to take out Probate or Letters of Administration to the estate of the deceased and lead practically to a repeal of that Act for the agreement to pay to the nominees did not admittedly come into operation till Tawker's death. A somewhat similar attempt was made in the case of Towers v. Hogan (7) where a person invested monies in a Fund, and wrote a letter to another asking him to distribute it to certain persons in a certain manner after his death, this was done statedly for the purpose of saving the trouble and expense of taking out Administration. The learned Judges in the first Irish Court held that the letter had no legal effect to pass the property to those persons and they observe that to hold otherwise will lead to the Statute of Wills being practically repealed. In the case of William, In re, Williams v. Ball (8) already cited, where a policy-holder made an endorsement on the policy authorising his housekeeper to draw the insurance money in case he predeceased her, the Court of Appeal held that she had no right to the money. Lord Cozens-Hardy, M. R., says in his judgment: "it seems to me to be extremely difficult to say that this document, which did not confer on the assignee any power or right during the assignor's lifetime, was an assignment of the policy or anything else than an attempt to give her an interest at his death in the event of his predeceasing her. If that be so, ... the assignee's claim cannot be supported on any ground," the testamentary disposition failing as not being properly carried on. In the case of Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association (10) it was held that on a policy taken out by the husband for the benefit of his wife and so stated in the policy itself the wife obtained no interest in it apart from the Married Women's Property Act. That case was no doubt complicated by the wife having murdered the husband but that did not affect this part of the case. Lord Esher, M. R., says on page 152: "I think that, apart from the Statute, no interest would have passed to the wife by reason merely of being named in the Policy." Lord Justice Fry observes, on page 151: "Independently of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the effect of this transaction was, in my opinion, to create a contract by the defendants with James Maybrick (the husband) that the defendants would, in the event which has occurred, pay Florence Maybrick (the wife) £2,000 assured, it would be broken by non payment to her; but the cause of action resulting from such breach would vest in the executors of the assured, and not in the payee. She was, independently of the Statute, a stranger to the contract." This case was cited at length and followed in Oriental Government Security Life Assurance Company Limited v. Vantelu Ammiraju (11) in which it was held by this Court that, where the assured does not, in his lifetime, create any trust in respect of the insurance money under a policy for the benefit of the wife and children they get no interest and that the money forms part of the assured estate and is recoverable by his legal representatives. This case was no doubt overruled by the Full Bench in Pokkunuri Balamba v. Krishnayya (12) but only on the question whether section 6 of the Married Women's Property Act, III of 1874, applied to a Hindu's wife and children or not, the Full Bench holding that it did. This question, however, does not arise for our consideration in this case, but on the point before us, speaking of the case in Pokkunuri Balamba v. Krishnayya (12), White, O. J., says: on page 506* "If the view taken by the learned Judges as to Married Women's Property Act was right, I should agree with their conclusion that no cause of action arose to the beneficiaries and that the policy moneys formed part of the estate of the assured, notwithstanding that, under the contract, the money was payable to the beneficiaries in default of trustees."

A similar view was taken in Bombay in Shankar Vishvanath Wagh v. Unabai Sadasiv Wagle (6). It was held in that case that, though the policy was a contract expressed to be for the benefit of the wife, nevertheless she got no interest in the insurance money thereby as she was a stranger to the contract.

Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar has, however, drawn our attention to the ruling in Florina Marties v. Pinto (4) and the cases cited in it as in favour of his argument. But on examining that case it will be found that the decision was based on the ground that there was an agreement for consideration paid between the policy-holder and the nominee that the bonus should belong to the latter. This agreement is referred to a second time by the learned Judge in distinguishing the case before him from the insurance policy cases above.

mentioned which were cited to him. He says: "In a case like this, where the nominee by agreement with the nominator was entitled to the money, there can be no question that as between the estate of the nominator and the nominee the latter is entitled to it." That is a position that does not exist in the present case; in fact, the nominees here did not know of their nomination by Tawker till sometime after the latter's death. The decision is, therefore, clearly distinguishable from the present case. But Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar has relied on the dictum of the learned Judge where he says, referring to the English cases which I shall presently consider "In all these cases the principle adopted was that if, under the contract between the member and the Society, the Society undertakes to pay a particular person, that person is entitled to the money, though the member may have the power to select any person he chooses and though the nomination may be ambulatory in character so as to enable the member at his entire discretion to change the nomination or even to make the Fund his own by merely observing the formalities prescribed by the rules." With all respect to the learned Judge, it seems to me that this dictum is not borne out by the cases cited and is inconsistent with the view expressed in the cases I have referred to above and I am unable to follow it. Turning now to the cases cited, it will be seen that in the case of Ashby v. Costin (1) Cave, J., based his judgment on the fact that the money in question was not the money of the deceased at any time though payable out of a Fund to which he and others contributed. He might have made it part of his assets by Will but he did not do so. The learned Judge points out that the Society had full discretion, in the circumstances that happened, to determine which of the relatives of the deceased should get the allowance and in what proportion. It was, in these circumstances, that the administrator's suit against the sister who had been selected by the Fund for payment was dismissed, as manifestly he would have no rights in the money paid to her. That case is entirely distinguishable from the case before us inasmuch as here the money belonged to Tawker and continued to be his till his death and there was no payment by the Fund to any one. The next two cases of Davies, In re, Davies v. Davies (3) and Bennet v. Slater (2) were, as observed by the learned Judge himself, cases of Societies registered under the Friendly Societies Act. The latter case proceeded purely on a construction of section 15 of the Act of 1875 and there is no general principle stated in it which is applicable here. In the former case the facts were that the testator, Mr. Davies, did not deal with the policy money in his Will. But under the rules of the Society which were incorporated in the policy and formed part of the contract the money was payable to the plaintiffs, his daughters, and not to the defendant, his son's widow. North, J., meeting an argument that the contract with the Fund was against public policy as withdrawing the money from his creditors and that it was perfectly legal and that, "as against persons who claim under the Will, the contract must be effectual." This has to be read with the context and it must be remembered the case was one to which the Friendly Societies Act applied. There is no decision in it that, apart from the Act, the daughters were exclusively entitled to the money and there was no question of any nominees taking. I do not think, therefore, that these cases in any way support the dictum in Florina Marties v. Pinto (4), or are authorities against the view I am inclined to take.

Our attention was also drawn to several cases dealing with the general question whether a person who is a stranger to a contract can enforce it at all and, if so, in what circumstances. That is a question on which judicial opinion has differed: See Mannath Veetil Itti Panku Menon v. Dharman Achan (13). The general rule is that a stranger to a contract cannot take any rights under it and cannot enforce it. The exceptions are stated by Tyabji, J., in the case in Iswaram Pillai v. Taregan (5), where the authorities are considered and the question is discussed at length. I do not, therefore, propose to consider the authorities cited in detail. None of the exceptions stated seems to me to apply to the present case. There is no charge or trust created here and the only possible suggestion that can be made is that the contract was for the benefit of the plaintiffs. That, however, is not so, as the deposit was not made for their benefit but for the depositor himself as he retained the right to draw out the money. As pointed out by Tyabji, J., following the opinion of Bowen, L. J., in Gandy v. Gandy (14), "It is only if the true intent and effect of a contract is to give to third parties a beneficial right under it, that is to say, to give them a right to have the covenants in the contract performed—and this can only happen, as pointed out by Sir George Jessel in Kempess Engineering Co., In re (15),—'when the parties have no power of coming to a new agreement the next day, releasing the old one,' then the stranger may be allowed in a Court of Equity to enforce his rights under the contract; but that the whole application of this doctrine depends on its being made out that upon the true construction of the contract such a beneficial right is given." Lord Justice Cotton says in the same case: "If the contract, although in form it is with A, is intended to secure a benefit to B, so that B, is entitled to say he has a beneficial right as c'estui que trust under that contract then B, would in a Court of Equity be allowed to insist upon and enforce the contract." Accepting the exceptions thus engrafted on this general rule, they do not cover the present case.

I, therefore consider, for the reasons above-stated, that, by their nomination, plaintiffs obtained no interest in the deposit money and that their suit was rightly dismissed and I agree, therefore, that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

HARSARAN DAS—APPELLANT

*versus*DEBI SINGH alias DEBI SAHAI—

RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 10—Ex-proprietary tenant, right of, to surrender holding.

There is nothing to prevent an ex-proprietary tenant from surrendering his holding, but if he does not do so, he cannot contract himself out of the provisions of section 10 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Meerut Division, dated the 20th of August 1919, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HARRISON, J. M. (February 12, 1920.)—This is a second appeal by the Zamindar in an ejectment suit.

The facts are that one Bhagwan Sahai mortgaged his property with possession to the appellant on the 3rd of January 1911. Two days afterwards, Bhagwan Sahai executed a deed of relinquishment of his sir lands. On the 1st of July following, his son Debi Singh executed a kabuliyat for these same sir lands as an ordinary tenant for seven years. Bhagwan Sahai was still alive when this kabuliyat was executed. In 1913, there were proceedings for correction of the papers (that is two years later) and Bhagwan Sahai himself freely admitted the relinquishment and Debi Singh admitted himself to be holding under the kabuliyat. The Assistant Collector ordered the sir entry to be expunged and the tenancy of Debi Singh to be recorded. Nothing more was heard of the matter until the revision of records in 1916 when an attempt was made to get the name of Balak Ram, a brother of Debi Singh, recorded as a joint tenant with Debi Singh. Debi Singh, however, protested and the Assistant Record Officer cut out Balak Ram's name and left the holding in the name of Debi Singh alone. As the term of the lease was about to expire, the mortgagee landholder sued for ejectment and it was only then that another brother of Debi Singh and Debi Singh himself contended that ex proprietary rights had accrued. The Commissioner has held (disagreeing with the Assistant Collector) in favour of the tenant, on the ground that the family, including Bhagwan Sahai and his sons, had never lost cultivating possession of the land in suit. It seems to me impossible, in the particular circumstances of this case, to support the Commissioner's finding. No doubt, as he remarks, the family had been, and still is, joint, but no sort of claim was ever made to ex proprietary rights in the beginning and even two years after the relinquishment. Debi Singh has obviously been hitherto holding out as the sole tenant of the land. Legally, I think the Zemindar has an indisputable case that the ex-proprietary right was fully extinguished.

I would, therefore, set aside the decree of the Commissioner and restore that of the Assistant Collector with costs to the plaintiff-appellant in both Appellate Courts.

HOPKINS, S. M. (March 19, 1920.)—I regret that I am unable to agree with my colleague in this case.

The execution by Bhagwan Sabai of a deed of relinquishment two days after his execution of the mortgage was clearly a transaction entered into to avoid the provisions of section 10 of the Tenancy Act. It was not accompanied or followed by actual relinquishment of the land. The lease in favour of Debi Singh, a member of the same family, six months later, was merely a continuation of the same transaction. The Commissioner has found as a fact that there has been no change in the cultivating possession of the holding. There has, therefore, been no effective relinquishment of the land. An ex-proprietary tenant cannot be prevented from surrendering his holding, but if he does not surrender it he cannot contract himself out of the provisions of section 10.

The present case seems to me precisely one of those which were condemned in forcible language by the Privy Council in Moti Ohand v. Ikram Ullah Khan (1).

PORTER, J. M.—The order of the Commissioner must, therefore, be upheld, and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Adoption by minor widow, validity of—Right of widow to dispute and claim against adoption—Estoppel—Suit by widow for herself and for co-widow impleaded as defendant—Decree for whole property, whether can be passed.

An adoption by a minor widow who has not attained sufficient maturity of understanding to appreciate the nature of her act is invalid. [p. 248, col. 2.]

In such a case there is no personal estoppel preventing the widow from disputing the validity of the adoption and recovering her husband's properties from the adoptee unless the latter's position has been prejudiced. [p. 248, col. 2.]

Where a widow sued for the recovery of her husband's properties both for herself and her co-widow, impleading the latter as a defendant, the Court can pass a decree for the entire property if the co-widow assents to such a course during the trial. [p. 249, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Madras, in Original Suit No. 22 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs S. Erinitasa Aiyangar and K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The plaintiff having been a party to the adoption and acted on independent advice is personally estopped from impugning or claiming any rights under the invalid adoption.

The decree for the entire property was wrong. Only the plaintiff's half share should have been decreed. The second defendant expressly stated in the pleadings that she would file a separate suit for her share.

Mr. O. V. Anantakrishna Aiyar, (with him Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar), for the Respondents.—The adoption was by widows under 12 years of immature understanding who could not understand the nature of their act. Such an adoption is invalid, Kovvidi Sattiraju v. Patamsetti Venkataswami (1), Tayammaul v. Sashachalla Naiker (2).

As to the estoppel, it would only arise when the plaintiff did anything to prejudice the adopted boy or when the status of the latter was so radically changed as to put him at a disadvantage. Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna Rau (3), Vaithilinga Mudali v. Munigan (4). Here the plaintiff did nothing. She never looked after the boy but was content to receive the stipulated maintenance after becoming a major.

As to the form of the decree, it gave plaintiff the relief which she claimed. Though the second defendant said in her written statement that she would recover her share in a separate suit she ultimately consented to the entire claim of the plaintiff being decreed.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the appellants. The tenth defendant is the natural father of the 1st defendant. The plaintiff is the widow of a Sourasthra Brahmin, Sundararamier, who died in April 1906, when he was about 22 or 23 years old. The plaintiff was the second wife whom he had married, when she was a girl aged about 12 years. The marriage took place only 17 days before his death, though he had already another girl-wife, the second defendant, living. The tenth defendant is the elder brother of the plaintiff's husband. The plaintiff's husband seems to have been a wild young man who, as soon as he attained majority, about 1902, demanded partition from his elder brother and obtained his share of the ancestral property, worth about Rs. 50,000. Since then, he seems to have been addicted to strong drink (foreign liquors) and, as I said already, he died when he was comparatively young. The plaintiff's case is that the death was sudden and that it was caused by heavy drinking.

The case of the first defendant and his natural father, the tenth defendant, is that, while plaintiff's husband was doubtless addicted to drink, he also suffered from fever for about a week before his death and the direct cause of the death was the fever. It has, however, to be remarked that, though he was a rich man, no medical attendance worth the name seems to have been secured for his treatment during his alleged illness. He died at about 10 p. m. and the body was cremated next morning. Shortly before his cremation, the tenth defendant gave the first defendant in adoption to the plaintiff and to her co-widow. Both are girls of 12 who had not attained puberty, and the evidence is that, after the adoption, the funeral ceremonies of the deceased were performed by the tenth defendant for his natural son, the first defendant. Shortly afterwards, another adoption was alleged to have taken place of another boy, the son of a brother of the tenth defendant, (which brother, Venkatachallapatty, had been adopted away to an agnate). The first defendant was about a year old at his adoption and the other boy seven or eight years old. Quarrels arose soon after between the natural fathers of the two adopted boys, and in July 1906 the natural fathers, acting for their respective sons, divided the moveables and some other properties between themselves under the lists A and B. Then, in August 1907, the plaintiff's father and guardian gave notice to the tenth defendant demanding possession of the moveables of the plaintiff's husband which the tenth defendant was in possession of on behalf of the first defendant. This notice, of course, ignored the adoption of the first defendant.

Then, in October 1907, the plaintiff's father, who seems to have been a man of no property, (and who did not scruple to give his daughter as second wife to a dissipated young man while the first wife was living), executed the agreement, Exhibit I, on her behalf, the other party to the agreement being the tenth defendant acting on behalf of the first defendant. Under this agreement, plaintiff's father gave up, on behalf of the plaintiff, all right to question the adoption of the first defendant, on plaintiff being allowed a monthly allowance of Rs. 14 with a house to live in and with the use of certain vessels and jewels. That maintenance was received by him on behalf of the plaintiff till she attained majority, which was about 1912. Then she herself received that maintenance till April 1915. Then she was advised that she might repudiate the factum of adoption and she might also contend that, even if the adoption took place, it was legally invalid. So she brought this suit in pauper form in October 1910 on behalf of herself and her co-widow, the second defendant, for possession of most of the immoveable properties left by her husband excluding one dwelling house. (It is not clear why that dwelling house has been left out. It may be that, as suggested, the reason is that the house is in the possession of the plaintiff.) It is unnecessary to consider the case of the defendants other than Nos. 1, 2 and 10, as they do not claim any independent rights in the properties. I might also at once state that the other alleged adopted son and his natural father are not parties to this suit and are, of course, not bound by the decision in this case. There was some controversy in the lower Court as to whether the two boys were adopted at the same time, or whether one was adopted on the day of the cremation and the other the next day. I am, however, satisfied from the evidence that the first defendant was adopted at first. It is, however, unnecessary to pursue the subject, as, though the first defendant's adoption may not be invalid on the ground of the impropriety of two simultaneous adoptions, it is clearly invalid on two other grounds; namely, (1) that the widows who adopted the first defendant were minors who had not attained sufficient maturity of understanding; see Korvidi Sattiraju v. Patamsetti Venkataswami (1), and (2) that it has not been proved by any reliable evidence that the plaintiff's husband (whom no one expected to die suddenly, when he was quite a young man and who even contracted a second marriage 17 days before his death) gave oral authority to his girl wives to adopt a son after his death. The evidence on this point as to authority has been carefully discussed by the lower Court and I agree with its conclusion on that point. No doubt, there are admissions of the plaintiff's father and of the plaintiff as to the first defendant being the plaintiff's husband's adopted son, in the receipts executed for them, for the maintenance amounts received by them. That admission must, no doubt, be taken as an admission, both of the factum and of the validity of the adoption. In that view, the burden of proving that the adoption of plaintiff is not a valid adoption may be said to lie on the plaintiff. We have, however, at this stage of the litigation, to arrive at a finding on that question on the evidence as a whole, and I entertain no doubt on the evidence that there was no authority given by the plaintiff's husband to make an adoption. Further, on the admitted fact the widows being girls of 12 or 13, the adoption is wholly invalid. An invalid adoption cannot be ratified by mere admissions and acquiescences.

The only remaining question is, whether there is a personal estoppel which prevents the plaintiff herself from disputing the validity of the adoption. The cases of Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna Rau (3) and Vaithilinga Mudali v. Munigan (4) make it clear that, unless the status of the alleged adopted boy has been so radically changed that he could not go back to his natural family, it is difficult to sustain the plea of estoppel by the conduct of the adopting party. It may be that the decision in Parvatibayamma v. Ramakrishna Rau (3) laid down the law in too broad language. (See Mayne, paragraph 209). Where the adopted mother herself made representations that she had authority to adopt and then adopted the boy, when she secured a wife for him according to her own inclinations and ideas, when she changed his status from that of a boy in a family of peasants to that of a son of an aristocratic Zemindar's family, and when the adopted boy incurred debts and changed his mode of life on the faith of representations (made to his natural father) as regards the alleged authority to adopt, those expenses having been incurred to defend his status against others, it may be that the adoptive mother herself would be personally estopped, as held by the Privy Council in Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (5), (though the observations as to estoppel in that case are obiter dicta.) But in the present case the plaintiff was a child-widow when she made the adoption. The boy was nominally adopted to his own paternal uncle. The girl (adoptive mother) never interfered with the estate and did not look after the boy at all and all that she did was that, after she became a major, she received the maintenance amount, which her father had secured for her, when she was a minor. The money which she got as maintenance was her own money, if the adoption (as I hold) was invalid. There is no allegation in the written statement that the plaintiffs made any representations on the faith of which the adoption took place, or the first defendant has been prejudiced. I, therefore, agree with the lower Court that there is no question of estoppel. I might further state that, on the principle of the decision in Seshappaya v. Venkatramana Upadya (6), there can be no estoppel, where the other side knew the full facts. The first defendant's father knew all the facts and knew that the girls were only 12 years old when the adoption was made.

Finally, an argument was put forward that the plaintiff could sue only for a half share of the properties and not on behalf of the second defendant also, for the whole property. Some stray observations unconnected with the context were quoted from certain decisions in support of this contention. But I am satisfied that there is nothing in this contention. The Court has full power to give a decree on the facts found in favour of one or more of the parties who are entitled to such decree, provided they do not object to be ranged as plaintiffs. In the present case, the second defendant is willing to be made a co-plaintiff. Of course, the Court should not ordinarily give a decree for reliefs not asked for, without directing the plaint to be amended. In this case, the relief given by the decree does not go beyond the relief asked for in the plaint. No doubt, the second defendant said in her written statement that a separate suit has to be filed for obtaining possession of the half share due to her. But, as I said, whatever she might have said in the written statement, provided she now agrees to be co plaintiff with the plaintiff on record I see no objection to the upholding of the decree of the lower Court.

In the result, there will be an order to make the second defendant a co-plaintiff and the lower Court's decree will be confirmed with costs of the plaintiff payable by the appellants.

SPENCER, J.—I agree that, upon the evidence in the case, there is no satisfactory proof, either that the deceased gave authority to the plaintiff to make an adoption or that she was of a sufficient capacity to understand the nature and consequence of her act or that she voluntarily took the boy in adoption. I think that if the deceased Sundaramier was conscious of his approaching decease, he would either have made the adoption himself of the son he desired to take in adoption, or he would have given some written authority to one or both of his wives to adopt a suitable boy after his death, and, in doing so, he would not have neglected to make some provision for his wives whose parents were present at his death-bed. The plaintiff, at the time of her husband's death, was a minor of the age of 12, as she did not attain majority till October 1911, and the death took place in April 1906. In order that an adoption should be valid, it is necessary that the adopting parent should have such intelligence as to appreciate the nature of the act and to take an intelligent part in its performance. [See Tayammaul v. Sashachalla Naicker (2)]. The alleged adoption followed so closely on the heels of the giving of the authority to adopt and the minor plaintiff was represented by her father and surrounded by relatives so that the transaction had all the appearance of being a concerted family arrangement. In this respect this case resembles the above case which went on appeal to the Privy Council.

I am also satisfied that there is no case of estoppel here. In order to make an estoppel it is necessary to show that the first defendant's position was in some way changed to his disadvantage in consequence of the adoption so as to render it inequitable that the adoptee should be restored to his place in the natural family [See Vaithilinga Mudali v. Munigan (4)]. It was pointed out in that case that an invalid adoption per se does not destroy the adoptee's rights in his natural family. The circumstances of the case in Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (5) were different. In that case the Privy Council found that the adopted son had undergone a change of social status which had so altered his mode of life as to make his return to the former condition a hardship. Also expenses had been incurred in the maintenance of the privileges of his position as a minor Rajah, and he had married in faith of the adoptive mother's word, and creditors had lent him money.

In the present case it is not explained in the written statement how the first defendant has been prejudiced by the plaintiff's conduct, and from the record it does not appear that she has done anything beyond receiving a small amount of maintenance out of the family property for her own support, when she would have been entitled to receive a far larger amount, if she had not made any adoption. I, therefore, consider that no estoppel arises out of the plaintiff's action in signing Exhibits IV and IIq to IIg which were receipts executed by her after she attained majority.

Before attaining majority she could not be estopped by anything done on her behalf which, as a minor, she was not competent to do for herself.

I agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Raja SRI KRISHNA DUTTA DUBE—APPELLANT

versus

JAGESHAR UPADHIA—
RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 22—Occupancy holding—Successor of tenant—Admission of stranger to share in cultivation, effect of.

The mere admission by the successor of an occupancy tenant of a person who is not a tenant to a share in cultivation does not operate to transfer to the latter any right in the tenancy.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 8th of July 1919, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOPKINS, S. M.—(April 5, 1920).—This was the occupancy holding of Bhagwan who was succeeded by his son Harihar. Harihar was succeeded by his mother, Musammât Bhagwanti, wife of Bhagwan, and Jageshar, the present respondent. Bhagwan's sister's son joined her in the cultivation of the holding. It is undisputed that Jageshar and Musammât Bhagwanti have been in possession of the holding for more than 12 years. The question arises whether Harihar died before the Tenancy Act came into force, in which case his mother would have succeeded to the tenancy, or after that date, in which case she would be excluded from inheritance by section 22 and must be deemed to have been cultivating in her own right.

The Commissioner found, "there is no proper evidence that the death (of Harihar) did not occur during the currency of the present Act and I hold accordingly that, on her death, there being no section 22 heir a new tenancy by Bhagwanti and Jageshar arose which has now by lapse of time given occupancy right to the survivor Jageshar."

The Commissioner has overlooked the fact that Jageshar himself pleaded in his written statement that Harihar died in 1308 Fasli. Respondent points to the fact that in 1903 the appellant filed a suit for enhancement of rent in which the defendant was described as Harihar qabiz Bhagwanti but this description implies that Harihar was dead though still recorded as tenant. The question, in my opinion, is concluded against Jageshar by his own plea. Musammât Bhagwanti, therefore, succeeded to the tenancy on Harihar's death and the admission by her of Jageshar to a share in the cultivation could not operate to transfer to him any right in the tenancy [section 9, Act XII of 1881 and Babu Banshidhar v. Musammât Rawantia (1)].

I would allow the appeal with costs and restore the order of the Assistant Collector. An appearance has been made before me for Bhinak who was a rival claimant in the Trial Court, but he did not appeal to the Commissioner and has no locus standi in this Court.

PORTER, J. M.—(April 8, 1920).—I agree.
Appeal allowed.

ADIT NARAYAN SINGH—APPELLANT

versus

MAHABIR PRASAD TIWARI—

RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Succession—Bandhus, rule of succession as between different classes of—Mother's paternal aunt's son, whether to be preferred to mother's sister's grandson—"Sons", whether include grandsons.

In the Mitakshara system bandhus are of three kinds: related to the person himself, atma bandhus, to his father, pitri bandhus, or to his mother, matri bandhus. The right of succession among these three classes is governed by the propinquity of the class, no pitri bandhu succeeds until the class of atma bandhus is exhausted and no matri bandhu succeeds until the classes of atma bandhus and pitri bandhus are exhausted. [p. 254, col. 1.]

The rule is not dependent on individual propinquity or on the efficacy of offerings to a deceased person. A bandhu must, in order to be heritable in a female line, fall within the fifth degree from the common male ancestor, and must be so related to the deceased person that they were mutually sapindas of one another; but if these conditions are satisfied the rule takes effect. For instance, a mother's sister's grandson, being an atma bandhu, would succeed in preference to a mother's paternal aunt's son being a matri bandhu. [p. 254, cols. 1 & 2.]

The word "sons" in Mitakshara, II, 6 (1) includes "grandsons." [p. 254, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Patna High Court, (Chamier, C. J., and Jwala Prasad, J.), dated August 7, 1916, reported as 35 Ind. Cas. 687, affirming a decree of the Third Subordinate Judge, Patna.

FACTS of the case are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment.

On this appeal

Mr. Dube, for the Appellant, submitted that appellant being in possession, it was for respondent, who sought to oust him, to prove conclusively that he had bought from the rightful heirs, i.e., that Hanuman's sons were entitled to succeed Dhanukdhari on Monakka Kuar's death. We say they were not, because of the existence at that time of two nearer heirs, 1. Jagdeo, 2. Rajendra. As to Jagdeo, the Courts below wrongly assumed that he was dead at that time: they ignored the evidence to the contrary.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—Are there not concurrent findings that he was dead?]

I submit those findings are against the evidence, which is all one way. It was for respondent to prove he was dead, not for us to show he was alive. But anyhow, Haribar's son, Rajendra, was alive, and he had a prior right to Hanuman's sons or indeed Hanuman himself. The whole subject of succession among bandhus is discussed in Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (1). That case is conclusive that he is a heritable bandhu within the Mitakshara: he is only four degrees from the common ancestor, and in the Mitakshara you count up to seven degrees through males and five degrees through females.

The text of the Mitakshara, Chapter II, 6 (1) cited at page 208* of that report, lays down that there are three classes of bandhus, viz., atma bandhus, pitri bandhus and matri bandhus. Hanuman was only a matri bandhu: he was the mother's father's sister's son of Dhanukdhari and that relative is named in the Mitakshara was a matri bandhu. On the other hand, all the authorities agree that Rajendra was an atma bandhu. You cannot go to the more distant line till you have exhausted the nearer: that has been laid down by the Mitakshara itself at the passage cited, and is also the decision of this Board in Muthusami Mudaliar v. Simambedu Muthukumaraswami Mudaliar (2). In that case the loser was a pitri bandhu.

The same view has been taken by the Madras High Court in Krishna Ayyangar v. Venkatarama Ayyangar (3), where it is laid down that "the nearest line excludes the more remote."

The Bombay High Court have held the same under the Mayukha, which on this point has in terms adopted the text of the Mitakshara: Chamanlal v. Ganes Motichand (4).

In a later Bombay case, on similar grounds, a mother's sister's grandson has been preferred to the paternal grandfather's sister's son's daughter: Bai Vili v. Bai Probhulakshmi (5).

ADIT NARAYAN SINGH v. MAHABIR PRASAD TIWARI.

It is true that Rajendra is not specified as an atma bandhu, in the Mitakshara text: only the mother's sister's son is mentioned, and he is the mother's sister's son's son. But the enumeration of bandhus as heirs in the Mitakshara is not exhaustive.

Muthusami Mudaliar's case (2), and in a similar context "son" has been held to include grand-son.

Buddhi Singh v. Lattu Singh (6).

Rajendra is shown as an atma bandhu in the table in Dr. Bhattacharyya's Commentaries on Hindu Law, 2nd Edition, 1893, pages 455, 450; there he is No. 23: but that table is in some respects inconsistent with the Mitakshara as it places in front of him two who are really only matri bandhus.

[LORD SOMNER.—Do you contest that Hanuman's offerings would be more beneficial than Rajendra's?]

No.

[LORD SOMNER.—Do you contest that that is a test of deciding who is to succeed?]

Yes: it is a test only as between members of the same class. That was laid down by the Madras High Court in Muttusami v. Muthukumarasami (7), which came on appeal before this Board in Muthusami Mudaliar v. Simambedu Muthukumaraswami Mudaliar (2).

The respondent did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—The suit in which this appeal has arisen was brought on the 22nd April 1911 by Mahabir Prasad Tiwari, who is the respondent to this appeal, against Adit Narayan Singh, who is the appellant here, and others, who were not necessary parties. It is a suit for the possession of Mauza Bariapur, in the District of Patna. The Mauza is in the possession of the defendant-appellant under a usufructuary mortgage for Rs. 200 which was granted to him on the 1st September 1902 by Monakka Kuar, the widow of Dhanukdhari, who was a separated Hindu of a family governed by the law of the Mitakshara, and at his death was proprietor of the Mauza. He died about 1863 without issue. His widow, Monakka Kuar, died on the 13th September 1902. She had power as a Hindu widow to grant the usufructuary mortgage. The heir of Dhanukdhari at his death or his successor-in-title was, when this suit was brought, entitled to possession of the Mauza on payment to the defendant-appellant of the Rs. 200 mortgage-money. The plaintiff on the 1st September 1908 purchased such right, title and interest as Devaki Nandan Tiwari and his brothers had in the Mauza. They were the sons of Hanuman, who was living when Monakka Kuar died, but had died before the purchase. The question of title on which this suit depends is, whether Hanuman was at the time when Monakka Kuar died, the heir of her deceased husband Dhanukdhari. If Hanuman was not then the heir of Dhanukdhari, no title to the Mauza passed to the plaintiff by the purchase from his sons, and it is established in this suit that the plaintiff had no other title. As the defendant-appellant was in possession it was for the plaintiff to prove a title to the possession of the Mauza.

The case for the defendant-appellant was that, on the death of Monakka Kuar, the heir of Dhanukdhari was not Hanuman, and was either Jagdeo or Rajendra. The following short pedigree will show the relationship of Dhanukdhari, Jagdeo, Rajendra and Hanuman to each other:—

(7) 16 M. 23; 2 M. L. J. 296; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 724.

ADIT NARAYAN SINGH v. MAHABIR PRASAD TIWARI.

The Trial Judge considered that it was not proved that Jagdeo was living when Monakka Kuar died. It was for the plaintiff to prove that Jagdeo had died in the lifetime of Monakka Kuar. The High Court found that Jagdeo had died before Monakka Kuar. Having regard to these findings, their Lordships assume that Jagdeo had died before Monakka Kuar.

The pedigree shows that Rajendra is the mother's sister's grand-son of Dhanukdhari and that Hanuman was Dhanukdhari's mother's paternal aunt's son. Rajendra and Hanuman were bhinna gotra sapinda bandhus of Dhanukdhari.

The Trial Judge found that Hanuman was, on the death of Monakka Kuar, the heir of Dhanukdhari, and made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for possession of the Marja on payment to the defendant appellant of the Rs. 200 mortgage-money. From that decree the defendant-appellant appealed to the High Court at Patna. The High Court, in its view of the law of the Mitakshara, came to the conclusion that on the death of Monakka Kuar the heir of Dhanukdhari was Hanuman, and was not Rajendra, and by its decree dismissed the appeal. From that decree of the High Court this appeal has been brought.

There has been much discussion and much divergence of opinion in India as to how the right of succession amongst bandhus subject to the law of the Mitakshara is to be ascertained; the subject was by no means an easy one, but their Lordships consider that it has now, to a large extent, been settled by decisions of the Board.

According to the text of Manu, which is the foundation of the rules of inheritance of the Hindus, "the property of a near sapinda shall be that of a near sapinda." Vijnaneswara in his Commentary, which is known as the Mitakshara, in giving the rules for the succession of cognate kindred, bandhus, in Chapter II, section 6, as translated by Colebrooke, said:—

"1.—On failure of gentiles (gotrajas) the cognates (bandhus) are heirs. Cognates (bandhus) are of three kinds; related to the person himself (atma bandhu), to his father (pitri bandhu), or to his mother (matri bandhu), as is declared by the following text: "The sons of his own father's sister, the sons of his own mother's sister, and the sons of his own maternal uncle must be considered as his own cognate kindred (atma bandhus). The sons of his father's paternal aunt, the sons of his father's maternal aunt, and the sons of his father's maternal uncle must be deemed his father's cognate kindred (pitri bandhus). The sons of his mother's paternal aunt, the sons of his mother's maternal aunt, and the sons of his mother's maternal uncles must be reckoned his mother's cognate kindred (matri bandhus)." "

"2.—Here, by reason of near affinity, the cognate kindred of the deceased himself (his atma bandhus) are his successors in the first instance; on failure of them, his father's cognate kindred (pitri bandhus); or if there be none, his mother's cognate kindred (matri bandhus). This must be the order of succession here intended."

With reference to these texts from the Mitakshara which are above quoted, the Board in Muthusami Mudaliar v. Simambedu Muthukumaraswami Mudaliar (2) held that:—

"To whatever extent rules of succession may have been founded on religious observances, or may now be explained by them, it is clear that fixed rules of law for succession have been established for ages, and equally clear that the Mitakshara professes to express such rules in the quoted text. Taking it to mean what it says, the question is whether its omission to mention a maternal uncle signifies that he is excluded from the first class of bandhus, or whether the writer is not rather classifying by sample without attempting to specify every member of each class.

"Their Lordships are of opinion that, even if the quoted text (section 6 of Chapter II) stood alone, the only admissible construction would be the latter one; for no rational ground can be assigned for excluding the maternal uncle of the deceased while his more remotely allied sons are admitted to succeed. But in fact the text does not stand alone, and whatever difficulty might at one time have been felt in applying it, it has now been removed by judicial decision.

"In the case Gridari Lall Roy v. Government of Bengal (8) the person claiming to be heir was the maternal uncle of the deceased's father. The High Court of Calcutta decided against his claim on the ground that he was omitted from the quoted text. On appeal, this Board referred to a passage in the Mitakshara which is not translated by Colebrooke, but which was translated and used for the purpose of that suit. In that passage, which deals with the property of a trader dying abroad, his maternal uncle is included among bandhus capable of succeeding, though the order of succession is not there stated. The Board also referred to a passage of the Viromitrodaya as a work of high authority at Benares, and properly receivable to explain things left doubtful by the Mitakshara. That passage states that maternal uncles are to be comprehended in the quoted text; noting how objectionable it would be to exclude them while admitting their sons. This Board held that a grand-uncle fell within the same reasoning, and upheld the plaintiff's title."

Having regard to this decision, it appears to be clear that in families governed by the law of the Mitakshara the right of succession amongst the three classes of bandhus mentioned in the text is governed by the propinquity of the class; and accordingly that a pitri bandhu does not succeed until the class of atma bandhus is exhausted and a matri bandhu does not succeed until the classes of atma bandhus and pitri bandhus are exhausted. In the present case Hanuman was a matri bandhu, the son of a mother's paternal aunt, being expressly included in that class. Harihar, as a son of a mother's sister, was an atma bandhu; and the question to be determined is whether his son, Rajendra, was also included in that class. In their Lordships' opinion he was. The word "sons" in a similar context has been construed in a generic sense and has been held to include a grandson [Buddha Singh v. Lattu Singh (6)] and, in any case, the grandson of a mother's sister falls within the general description of an atma bandhu, a person related to the propositus himself, and is not to be excluded only because he is not mentioned among the illustrations in the text of the Mitakshara. A similar view was taken in Krishna Ayyangar v. Venkatarama Ayyangar (3) where a father's sister's daughter's son was held to be an atma bandhu and to have priority over the paternal grand-father's sister's son and in Bai Visli v. Bai Prabhalakshmi (5) where a mother's sister's grand-son was preferred to the paternal grand-father's sister's son's daughter.

The learned Judges of the High Court appear to have been influenced in arriving at their decision of the appeal to their Court in this suit by opinions which they expressed in their judgments to the effect that Hanuman could have made efficacious offerings to the maternal great grand father and the maternal great great grand-father of Dhanukdari and that Rajendra could make no offerings to any ancestor of Dhanukdhari. It is not necessary for the decision of this appeal that their Lordships should express any opinion as to the right, if any, of Hanuman and Rajendra, respectively, to make efficacious offerings to any ancestor of Dhanukdhari, as Rajendra is of the class of atma bandhu, and Hanuman was of the class of matri bandhu, and the rule of succession as between them is the rule of the Mitakshara which has been cited above. That rule is preferring the nearer to the more remote class of bandhus, is not dependent on individual propinquity or on the efficacy of offerings to a deceased person. Of course, a bandhu must, in order to be heritable in a female line, fall within the fifth degree from the common male ancestor and must be so related to the deceased person that they were mutually sapindas of one another, that is to say, where the Mitakshara applies, persons connected by particles of one body (see Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (1); but if these conditions are satisfied that rule takes effect. What the rule of succession under the Mitakshara may be as between bandhus of the same class, it is not necessary to decide.

In this case Rajendra is an atma bandhu and is within the fifth degree of descent from Ghanu Misra. Rajendra and Dhanukdhari were mutually sapindas of each other, within the meaning of that term as used in the preceding paragraph, and Rajendra was the heir of Dhanukdhari on the death of Monakka Kuar. Hanuman was a matri bandhu and consequently was not entitled as heir on the death of Monakka Kuar as Rajendra was then living.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed with costs, and that the decrees of the Courts below should be set aside and the suit dismissed with costs.

A suit to recover any additional sum which a tenant agrees to pay for his use and occupation of land is cognizable by a Civil and not a Rent Court.

Reference made by the Commissioner, Benares Division.

JUDGMENT.—I do not think there is sufficient cause for interference on revision in this case. The rent payable in 1324 F was Rs. 33. This was paid by 30th September 1917, and an acquittance in full was given. There were no arrears of rent due, when the agreement of October 1st, 1917, was made. Only arrears of rent can be recovered under the Tenancy Act, and if the tenant subsequently agreed to pay an additional sum for his use and occupation of the land in 1324 F. that might be recoverable in a Civil but not in Rent Court.

It also appears doubtful how far an agreement for enhancement of rent can be given retrospective effect. The tenant might, e. g., in a conceivable case, lose the benefit of section 47.

I would, therefore, reject the application for revision.

A payment made by a mortgagor to the mortgagee without notice of a prior assignment of the mortgage is, in the absence of collusion, binding on the assignee, even where by an arrangement between the mortgagor and mortgagee under which the latter agreed to receive a certain sum in full settlement of the mortgage-debt, the payment amounts to a discharge of the mortgage-debt. [p. 527, col. 1.]

No inference of constructive notice of the assignment by a mortgagee of the mortgage can be drawn against the mortgagor by the mere absence of the mortgage-deed from the possession of the mortgagee at the time of receiving payment of the mortgage-debt. [p. 257, col. 1.]

A document which merely evidences the receipt of a sum of money in full discharge of a mortgage-debt, the payment of the balance of interest being excused, is not affected by section 17 b of the Registration Act, and, even if unregistered, is admissible in evidence. [p. 257, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Ganjam at Berhampore, in Appeal Suit No. 358 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Berhampore, in Original Suit No. 209 of 1916.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 2nd October 1919, before their Lordships, Spencer and Krishnan, JJ.

FACTS.—The question was whether a plea of discharge could be pleaded as against the transferee of a mortgage right the alleged discharge having been made after the transfer to the representatives of the transferor, provided that the mortgagors had no notice.

Mr. Z. S. Narayana Aiyangar for Mr. O. S. Venkatchariar, for the Appellant.—A mortgage is not an actionable claim and hence no notice is required on transfer. It is an interest in immoveable property. See sections 3 and 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Law of England is different where it is regarded as a 'chose in action.' See Ghose, Volume I, page 340. Jones v. Gibbons (1). In Subramania Aiyar v. Subramania Pattar (2) a set off available against the mortgagee was not allowed against his assignee. See also Chundooru Lakshmana Setty v. Duggisetty Chenchuramayya (3). In the case of sub mortgages, a different rule prevails. See Poosaria Ohinnaswamy v. Kattamoori Venkata Rama Krishnayya (4). But the bona fides of the payment has to be proved. See as to the transfer of an actionable claim, Ismail Mollah v. Jadu Nath (5).

In the present case, the mortgage-deed was with the assignee. Hence the mortgagors had constructive notice of the assignment. See Maxfield v. Burton (6), Oliver v. Hinton (7).

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Respondents.—It is always open to a creditor to remit the whole or part of the debt due to him. The payment proved in the present case has been accepted as full satisfaction of the debt due under the mortgage. I submit that the principle of Norrish v. Marshall (8) applies. See Namagiri Lakshmi Ammal v. Srinivasa Aiyangar (9), Chundooru Lakshmana v. Setty Duggisetty Chenchuramayya (3). See also Papala Ohakrapani v. Lachumiachi (10). See also XXI Halsbury, p. 179. The receipt is evidence of the discharge of the debt due under the mortgage. Registration thereof is unnecessary as what it purports to discharge is only the debt and not the security. See Seshayya v. Subbamma (11), Uppalakandi Kunhi Kutti Ali Haji v. Kunnam Mithal Kottapraath Abdul Rahiman (12).

Mr. Narayan Aiyangar in reply.—There is a distinction between discharge by payment and discharge by agreement. Srinivasaswami Aiyangar v.

Athmarama Aiyar (13). In the latter case I submit that the receipt is inadmissible in evidence. Farther, under section 17 of the Registration Act, where a receipt extinguishes a mortgage it has to be registered.

JUDGMENT.—We must accept in second appeal the findings of fact of the learned District Judge that the mortgagors made the payment they pleaded to the mortgagee, and that they did so without notice of the prior assignment of the mortgage to the plaintiff. We think the learned Judge is right in holding that on the above findings plaintiff was bound by the payment so made.

The English Law on the point is quite clear. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XXI, page 179, paragraph 334 it is stated "that the mortgagor is entitled to make payments to the mortgagee, whether of principal or interest, and to have credit for them as against the transferee after the transfer until he has received notice of it". And several English cases, including Bickerton v. Walker (14) and Dixon v. Winch (15), are quoted.

There does not seem to be any good reason why that rule, which is founded on principles of equity, should not be followed in this country. It is true that, after the amendment of the definition of the term "actionable claim" by Act II of 1900 so as to exclude mortgage-debts, section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882) does not apply to mortgage-debts, and the statutory provision in it that the payment to a transferor will be valid against a transferee save when the debtor is a party to the transfer, or has received notice thereof does not apply ex proprio vigore. But this rule itself is based on the equitable principle referred to and recognised in the English cases, and it subsists apart from the section itself. We think, therefore, the principle is applicable to payments by mortgagors though the section does not.

It is true that notice is not necessary for the validity of the assignment of a mortgage. Govindov v. Ravi (16). But that is not the question before us. No doubt, "where a mortgage is transferred without the privity of the mortgagor, the transferee takes subject to the state of account between mortgagor, and mortgagee at the date of the transfer" as observed by Oczens Hardy, J., in Dixon v. Winch (15) above referred to. See Turner v. Smith (17). But that observation also has no reference to the present question.

No Indian case has been cited to us on the exact question before us. But Dr. Ghose in his book on the Law of Mortgages in India, Volume I, page 530, observes: "It is also well settled that a payment made by the mortgagor to the mortgagee after, but without notice of, a transfer must, in the absence of collusion, be allowed to the mortgagor as against the transferee." We accept this as a correct statement of the law, so far as it goes.

It was then argued that the mortgagors were guilty of negligence as they did not make proper enquiries of the transferor about the absence of the mortgage deed from his possession. The learned Judge, however, finds that the mortgagors did make enquiries and they were given an explanation which they believed. We see no reason to suppose that the mortgagors acted negligently in these circumstances and no inference of constructive notice of plaintiff's assignment can be drawn against them.

The next question raised is, that the mortgagors can get credit only for what they actually paid though that payment was accepted by the mortgagee in full settlement of the debt due, and not for the whole mortgage-debt. As the mortgagors were entitled to deal with their mortgagee as if no assignment took place when they had no notice of the transfer, we think that the arrangement set up must be held to be binding on the transferee.

It is next argued that Exhibit I, which evidences the payment pleaded by the mortgagors, is inadmissible in evidence, as it is unregistered and as it purports, according to the plaintiff's Vakil, to extinguish the mortgage. On a reference to Exhibit I we find it to be merely a receipt for money actually paid, which was taken in full discharge of the mortgage debt, the payment of the balance of interest due being excused. There is nothing in the document to show that the mortgage-interest was expressly extinguished by it; it is only a discharge of a mortgage-debt. We think there is a clear distinction between the discharge of a debt and the extinguishment of a mortgage-interest though one may be the result of the other. Where a receipt, in terms, only discharges the debt, it cannot be brought under section 17 (b) of the Registration Act (Act XVI of 1908). In this particular this case is distinguishable from the case of Namagiri Lakshmi Ammal v. Srinivasa Aiyangar (9), where there was an agreement to cancel and return the mortgage-deed. In Mallappa v. Matim Nogu Ohetty (18) also cited, there was only an oral agreement to take a smaller sum for the mortgage, amount and the question raised was quite different from the one before us. In the case of Chundogru Lakshman Setty v. Duggisetty Chenchuramkoyya (3), also, the agreement was not merely to receive the Rs. 3,000 in full settlement but also to return the documents, that is, the mortgage-deed and the title-deeds. There was, therefore, in it a proposal to extinguish the mortgage-interest.

All the points raised against the mortgagors, respondents Nos. 1 to 10, thus fail. It is finally urged that a decree for money should be given to the plaintiff against the representatives of the original mortgagee, who is found to have received the mortgage-money from the mortgagors after the transfer to the plaintiff, as the money had and received for his use. In view of the findings come to by the learned District Judge, we think the question whether any relief, and, if so, what relief, should be given to the plaintiff against those representatives should have been considered. The fact that they were exonerated in the first Court, and that the plaintiff filed no appeal or memorandum of objections against such exoneration in the Appellate Court, will not stand in the way of plaintiff being given relief now under Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code. As there is no finding by the lower Appellate Court on the point, we must call for a finding on it and allow fresh evidence, as the point, though in a manner raised in Issue No. V, does not seem to have been properly tried. Finding in two months; objections, seven days.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the District Judge of Ganjam at Berhampore submitted the following

FINDING.

In this appeal, I have been called upon by the High Court to receive fresh evidence and to submit a finding on the question whether plaintiff was entitled to any and what relief against the representatives of the deceased 12th defendant.

It was urged that the amount claimed from the legal representatives was in the nature of an Avyavalarika debt, inasmuch as 12th defendant was guilty of fraud in receiving payment after assigning the mortgage-bond. The decision in Hanmant Kashinath Joshi v. Ganesh Annaji (19), is against any such contention. It was also contended that the claim was barred by limitation. But P. W. No. 1 has stated that he became aware of the receipt of the money by 12th defendant, only when the written statements were filed.

My finding, therefore, is that the son of the deceased 12th defendant, viz., the 19th defendant in this case, would only be liable for Rs. 350 received by his father under Exhibit I, on 30th November 1911, and that the other legal representatives, viz., defendants Nos. 15 to 18, are not liable.

This second appeal came on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court.

JUDGMENT.—As against the 19th defendant, the son of 12th defendant, the deceased assignor of the plaintiff, the plaintiff's suit for money had and received is barred under Article 62, Limitation Act Sriramulu v. Ohinna Venkatasami (20)]. We do not pronounce on any other cause of action that the plaintiff may have against this defendant.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs of respondents Nos. 1 to 10.

A person who occupies land on sufferance without payment of any rent does not acquire occupancy rights as a tenant and is liable to ejectment as soon as the land-holder withdraws his sufferance.

Revision of the order of the Commissioner, Meerut Division, dated the 21st of August 1918, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HARRISON, J. M.—(November 7, 1919).—This is an application for revision in an ejectment suit. The defendants have apparently held the land for over 20 years and they claimed occupancy rights. There was no proof, however, that they had ever paid rent and the Commissioner only noted that one respondent stated that he paid Rs. 3 rent. That, of course, is valueless. In the written statement in the first Court there was an issue on the question and a definite finding that no rent was fixed. But it will be observed that they claimed to be tenants and to have occupancy rights.

The Commissioner felt that they must have had the consent of the former Zemindars to occupy and held that the respondents were not required to prove payment of rent. I cannot accept this view, especially having regard to Babu Sat Narain Prasad v. Kam Kumar (1) and Murlu Parshad v. Lal Mani Pandey (2). These seem to me to fit the case exactly and I hold that the Commissioner has acted with material irregularity in ignoring Selected Decisions of the Board which were clearly in point. I would, therefore, set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and would decree ejectment with costs to applicant in all Courts and Rs. 25 Pleader's fees in this Court.

FERARD, S. M.—(November 13, 1919).—I agree. Respondents can only be regarded as occupying on suffer-

As they have not been paying rent, they have not acquired the occupancy right as tenants and are liable to ejectment as soon as the land-holder withdraws his sufferance.

The appeal allowed under Order XLIII, rule 1 (w) of the Civil Procedure Code is an appeal from the order granting the application for review and not an appeal from the final decree passed in the suit, such an appeal must be limited to the grounds mentioned in rule 7 of Order XLVII of the Code. [p. 259, col. 2.]

It would be absurd to allow a second appeal on the merits against a decree passed in a small cause suit of value less than Rs. 500 merely because the decree is one which has been passed on review. [p. 259, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Shabpur at Sargodha, dated the 24th February 1920, reversing that of the Mansif, First Class, Sargodha, dated the 20th January 1919.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Lala Ram Chand Mochanda, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case sued for Rs. 443-0-6. The first Court dismissed the suit but left the parties to bear their own costs. The plaintiffs appealed to the Senior Subordinate Judge who, on the 31st of May 1919, dismissed the appeal with costs, holding that the plaintiffs' suit was time-barred. The plaintiffs presented an application for review, which was granted, and the Senior Subordinate Judge gave a decree for Rs. 175 and Rs. 80 interest, total Rs. 255, basing this decision on a statement, dated the 3rd October 1918, made by the defendant Kanshi Ram to the effect that, if two items of Rs. 200 and Rs. 150 had not been credited to the plaintiffs in Gobind Ram's khata, he was ready to pay. The Senior Subordinate Judge held that only half of these items had been allowed in Gobind Ram's account, and that the defendant, according to the undertaking, must pay the remaining half. The defendant Kanshi Ram appeals to this Court. The appeal has been presented and registered as a second appeal, but as the suit is a Small Cause suit and under Rs. 500 in value, no second appeal lies. But under Order XLIII, rule 1 (w) an appeal does lie from the order granting the application for review. The appeal, however, must be limited to the grounds mentioned in Order XLVII, rule 7. My authority for saying this is Hari Charan Sahu v. Baran Khan (1). It seems to me obvious that it would be absurd to allow a second appeal on the merits against a decree passed in a Small Cause suit of value less than Rs. 500 merely because the decree is one which has been passed in review; and I note, too, that the appeal allowed under Order XLIII, rule 1 (w) is only an appeal from the order granting the application for review, and not an appeal from the final decree passed in the suit.

It is not shown to me that the provisions of Order XLVII, rule 2 or rule 4, have been infringed; so the only question remaining is whether the application for review was presented after the expiration of the prescribed period of limitation.

The decree which the plaintiff sought to have reviewed was passed on the 31st May 1919 and the application for review was presented only on the 7th October.

The period of limitation prescribed by law for an application for review of judgment is 90 days. Counting from the 31st May 1919, the 90 days would expire on the 29th

(1) 25 Ind. Cas. 903; 41 C. 746.

BHAGWATI MISIR v. JHALAI CHAMAR.

August 1919. Section 12 of the Limitation Act lays down that, in computing the period of limitation prescribed for an application for review of judgment, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree sought to be reviewed and also the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded shall be excluded. Dr. Nand Lal urges that an application for review may be presented without copy of judgment. But a man may require copy in order to take advice as to what course of action he should next take. And I cannot refuse to observe the clear provisions of section 12. In the present case I find that the plaintiffs applied for a copy of the judgment and obtained it and presented it to Court on the 5th of October. The endorsement on the back of the copy shows that it was complete and ready for delivery on the 23rd June 1919. The endorsement does not show precisely on what date the copy was applied for as the day of the month is not given but only the month itself, namely, June 1919. It is, however, manifest that at least one day must be allowed for obtaining the copy. So this brings us up to the 30th August 1919. That day was a last Saturday in the month, on which day the Courts are always closed. The next day was Sunday and then began the September vacation. The Courts are closed during the whole of September. The first six days of October were Muharram holidays, and the Court re-opened on the 7th October. Section 4 of the Limitation Act lays down that where the period of limitation expires on a day when the Court is closed, the application may be made on the day that the Court re-opens. I find, therefore, that the application for review was not time-barred.

In conclusion, I note that Dr. Nand Lal asks me to interfere on the revision side, as no appeal lies on the merits from the final decree passed in the suit. I see, however, no sufficient reason to suppose that the order passed on review is not an equitable one, and I consider that there is no good ground for proceeding on the revision side.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

An agreement to pay enhanced rent which is not registered as required by section 47 of the Agra Tenancy Act is invalid, and cannot be pleaded in answer to a suit for ejectment.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 21st of June 1919, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—(February 8, 1920).—The plaintiff appellant is landlord. Both the lower Courts have found that he is in possession and is actual rent-collector. He sues to eject Jhalai Chamar, defendant-respondent, his 10 years' non-occupancy tenant. He admits a stamped but unregistered agreement between himself and the defendant respondent under which the latter agreed to pay enhanced rent of Rs. 2 8 0 instead of Rs. 2, and he agreed not to eject him except for arrears of rent on penalty of a certain grain compensation if ejectment should take place.

The agreement was not valid as one for enhancement of rent, as section 47, Tenancy Act, which, under Kaizyab Khan v. Nizam ud-din (1), is equally binding on both parties, should have been registered.

It was also not valid as a lease for an indefinite period, as, under section 17 (d), Registration Act, such leases require registration.

The only question is whether estoppel operates and this is what the Commissioner evidently means when he says there is a personal bar which prevents plaintiff appellant from ejecting Jhalai, whose Pleader cites Gulzari Lal v. Musammatt Furan Kunwar (2) in support. I do not agree. The tenant cannot benefit by the evasion of the Law of Registration as laid down in section 47, Tenancy Act. As he failed to comply with the registration condition in that section, he was not and is not bound to pay more than Rs. 2 per annum as rent, but he cannot plead the invalid agreement as good ground for holding on.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Bareilly, dated the 26th April 1917, confirming the decree of the Additional City Munsif, dated the 13th January 1917.

Messrs. L. M. Banerji and Parva Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. P. Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of the following circumstances. In 1884 the defendants sold their Zemindari in a certain village with two groves situate therein to the predecessor in title of the plaintiff. It is alleged that in the year 1914 the defendants ejected the plaintiff's lessee from one of the groves, whereupon certain proceedings were taken in the Criminal Courts which ultimately ended in the acquittal of the defendants. It is not denied that, so far as the other grove is concerned, the defendants have ever since the sale of 1884 continued in possession thereof. The plaintiff's allegation is that, in the year 1916, the defendants again attempted to take possession and hence he brought the present suit for a declaration that he is the owner of the grove No. 174 and that the defendants have no right to, and possession over, it. In the alternative, the plaintiff prayed for possession if the defendants dispossessed him during the pendency of the suit. The defence was, as usual, a denial of all the statements in the plaint, the contention put forward in the additional pleas being, first that the sale deed of 1884 related to the Zemindari only and did not effect the groves; and, secondly, that even if the plots on which the groves stood be considered to have been included in the Zemindari sold, the contesting defendants were ex-proprietary tenants. It was further contended that as the plaintiff or his predecessor in title had not been in possession of the grove in suit within the twelve years preceding the institution of the present suit, the claim was barred by the rule of twelve years limitation. Other pleas were raised but we are not concerned with them. The Munsif in a very perfunctory judgment decided the first issue against the plaintiff; the first issue being:—"Was the father of the plaintiff the purchaser of the grove in suit and, if so, did the defendants retain the rights of ex-proprietary tenants as to it?" It is curious to find no decision whatever of the real question as to whether the sale deed of 1884 passed the groves to the plaintiff's predecessor in title. He assumes that the groves were sold and then refers to the entries in the revenue papers showing that the defendants were entered therein as ex-proprietary tenants. The same unsatisfactory state of affairs is to be found in his decision on the second issue as to whether or not the plaintiff or his predecessor in title had been in possession of the grove in suit and if the claim was barred by limitation.

However, he came to the conclusion that the suit was so barred. On appeal the lower Appellate Court has found, first, that the predecessors in title of the defendants sold this grove and another grove to the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title by virtue of the sale deed of 1884. He also found that the defendants were in possession as ex-proprietary tenants of the plaintiff and were so entered in the revenue papers continuously since 1308 Fashi, and that this entry has existed ever since the last Settlement. The conclusion to which he arrived after this finding was, "that the defendants have been in possession as ex-proprietary tenants of the land in suit adversely to the plaintiff..... at least since the time of Settlement which was much more than twelve years before the institution of the suit." It is difficult to understand what the word "adversely" in this part of the judgment means. If the learned Judge meant to say that this assertion of ex-proprietary rights was adverse to the Zemindar's right to immediate possession, one might be able to follow it, but in that case we think that, of necessity, a declaration should have been given to the plaintiff that he was, as Zemindar, the owner of this grove. On the other hand, if the learned Judge meant that, because the defendants had acquired a right adverse to that of the Zemindar, it would be a contradiction in terms because a tenant's possession could never be adverse to his own landlord. We take the first meaning to be which the learned Judge probably intended, and in that case, on the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court, we think, on the authority of Balmukund v. Dalu (1), that this is a proper case in which the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration that he is the owner of the grove in dispute but he is not entitled to immediate possession over it so long as the ex-proprietary tenancy of the defendants subsists. As the plaintiff has failed to substantiate that the defendants are trespassers pure and simple and the relief we are granting to him is simply to avoid further litigation, we think that the plaintiff is not entitled to his costs but must pay the costs of the defendants-respondents throughout. In the result, the decrees of both the Courts below are modified and in lieu thereof we substitute a decree in favour of the plaintiff as stated above.

Decree modified.

An appeal under section 177 of the Agra Tenancy Act does not lie to the District Judge in a case in which no question of jurisdiction is in effect decided and in which it is not necessary to have any specific issue on that question.

Revision of the order of the Commissioner, Meerut Division, dated the 2nd of April 1919, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HARRISON, J. M.—(February 14, 1920).—This is an application for revision in a case in which the Commissioner, Mr. Raw, dismissed the first appeal of the appellant on the ground that the Assistant Collector had decided a question of jurisdiction and that the appeal, if any, lay in the Court of the District Judge.

In the first place, when the Commissioner held as he did, it was his duty to return the memorandum of appeal to the appellant for presentation to the proper Court.

In the second place, I am of opinion that there was no real question of jurisdiction involved. The defense of the appellant in the Assistant Collector's Court practically amounted to this that the land from which it was sought to eject him was grove land from which he could not be ejected in a suit under section 58 of the Tenancy Act as a tenant from year to year. All that the first Court really had to decide in this connection was whether the land in suit was technically "land" within the definition of the Agra Tenancy Act; and it would have been more appropriate to put the issue in that form rather than the form actually adopted, namely, "is the suit cognisable by this Court?" The whole tenor of the written statement was to the effect that the holding being grove, the defendant was not liable to ejectment. As a matter of fact, the Assistant Collector found that the land was a beri orchard which, under the rulings of the Board, is not ordinarily subject to the restrictions governing grove land. I would hold, therefore, that no question of jurisdiction was in effect decided and that it was not necessary to have any specific issue on the question of jurisdiction and, consequently, in my opinion, the appeal did not lie under section 177 of the Tenancy Act to the District Judge but was properly filed in the Court of the Commissioner.

I would, therefore, set aside the Commissioner's appellate order and direct the present Commissioner to re-admit the appeal and dispose of it on the merits. In the circumstances, the parties may bear their own costs of this application.

HOPKINS, S. M.—(March 8, 1920).—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

F. W. C. T., J. C.—These two appeals have been heard together. They arise out of certain transactions connected with one Gangabai, of whom the appellant Lalsing is the step-son and the main respondent Girdharidas a nephew by his marriage with Gangabai's sister's daughter. Gangabai had a deposit account with Girdharidas, father Sobhrai, which she used to draw. She also got money from Sobhrai on *hundi*s that were executed first by her husband, Mulsing and then by her step-son, Lalsing. The plaintiff, Lalsing, brought a suit claiming a certain sum as balance due on the deposit account and there was a cross-suit by Girdharidas claiming a sum of Rs. 800 from Lalsing on the strength of a hundi executed by him. The accounts which Sobhrai had kept were produced and have been examined by the two lower Courts.

Mr. Tahiram for the appellant says that there is no clear finding showing that Gangabai's withdrawals on the *hundi*s were not also debited in her deposit account, and that the decree against him on the strength of the hundi is, therefore, open to objection. There are, no doubt, in the judgments some sentences which afford, at any rate, some basis for contending that the two accounts may have been connected. But, on the other hand, we have clear findings of both the lower Courts that the hundi account was entirely separate and distinct from the deposit account, and it is difficult to believe that if there was any real basis for the suggestion that the hundi had been twice debited and that there had been a mixture of the two accounts in the way suggested, that this would not have been brought to the notice of the lower Court and discussed in the judgment. Moreover, the memorandum of appeal contains no such contention and the appellant is not entitled to be heard upon this objection. I do not, therefore, think that in second appeal we should go into this question and delay the settlement of this litigation on account of a mere suggestion of this kind.

Coming to the other points that have been taken in the appeals the main one is, whether the appellant, Lalsing, is, in any way, entitled to claim the amount due as balance, on Gangabai's deposit account from the respondents. Mr. Tahiram's contention is that this money constituted non-technical stridhan of Gangabai, which, under the Maynka Law, will descend in the first place to her sons. Alternatively, he says that if it is technical stridhan, it will under the category of gifts from the husband which, under the same law, descends in the first place to the sons and unmarried daughters taking together in equal shares. The District Judge has held that, even supposing that the Mayuka Law applies and that the property was stridhan descending to Gangabai's sons, yet the plaintiff-appellant is excluded because he is only a step-son and not a natural son of Gangabai. Mr. Tabilram admits that he can cite no direct authority showing that 'sons' in the case now under consideration includes step-sons, and there are certainly authorities, namely, Bhimacharya v. Ramacharya (1), Mathura Naikin v. Eru Naikin (2), Gangadar Bogla v. Hira Lal Pogla (3) which go against any such view. It seems to me that, in determining the succession to stridhan, both the Mayuka and the Mitakshara contemplate clearly the issue of the female who has stridhan, and, in the absence of any clear authority to the contrary, I can see no sufficient ground for saying that 'sons' in these two cases include step-sons. I, therefore, agree with the view taken by the District Judge that the appellant has no legal claim in respect of the deposit account, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to decide to what class of stridhan the property belongs, and whether the Mayuka or the Mitakshara should be recognized as prevailing in Sind.

Mr. Tabilram has contended that, as Gangabai's son Sandersing was a co-plaintiff and is a party to this appeal, a decree should be given in regard to his right as representing this son of Gangabai. It appears, however, from the plaint in Suit No. 470 of 1917 that he was then described as 17 years and it does not appear that a guardian has been appointed for him under the Guardians and Wards Act. He is presumably, therefore, now a major. It is also stated by the Pleader for the respondents that Sandersing has dissociated himself from the plaintiff's claim, and though he has in one of these appeals been joined as respondent, he has not appeared either in person or by a Pleader.

Accordingly, I do not think that the appellant is entitled to any relief on this ground.

I would, therefore, dismiss both these appeals with costs.

KENNEDY, A. J. O.—I agree.

It is not open to one of two recorded proprietors of a holding in respect of which proceedings in partition are pending to maintain a suit against a tenant for ejectment.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 25th of July 1919, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOPKINS, S. M.—(April 13, 1920).—The appellant resists ejectment on the ground that the respondent, Ram Das, was not competent to file the suit alone. The land in suit is situated in khata khunt No. 1, the recorded proprietors of which are Ram Das and Ajudhya Prasad. Ram Das and Ajudhya Prasad, on 30th October 1905, executed an agreement of partition under which the holding in suit was allotted to Ram Das. No effect was, however, given to that agreement in the revenue papers. Ram Das admitted in the witness-box that he had made three applications for correction of the papers which were all dismissed. On the 18th December 1917, the present suit having been filed on 25th September 1917, Ram Das brought a suit against Ajudhya Prasad in the Civil Court to enforce the agreement of the 30th October 1905 on the ground that Ajudhya Prasad had resiled from it. That suit was decided on the 7th May 1919, under a compromise by which the parties agreed to abide by the agreement of 13th October 1905. Proceedings for partition in the Revenue Courts are, according to the evidence of Ajudhya Prasad, now pending. It is perfectly clear from this recital that the khata to which the holding in suit appertains was, at the time of the institution of the suit, joint and that there had been no effective division of it. The Commissioner's finding on the point is, "there is good evidence that the parties to the partition are in separate possession and appellant (Ram Das) is accordingly entitled to proceed alone."

So far from there being good evidence that the parties to the partition are in separate possession, the only evidence on the subject which I can find is that of Ram Das himself, which is nullified by his own admissions.

The Commissioner's finding is not based upon any judicial consideration of the evidence. I would accept the appeal with costs and, setting aside the decree of the Commissioner, would restore that of the Assistant Collector.

I call the attention of the Commissioner to the fact that the records of other Courts, including one of the Civil Court, have been summoned wholesale in this case. This practice has been frequently condemned. Parties should produce certified copies of documents or judgments on which they rely and should not be allowed to summon whole records.

PORTER, J. M.—(April 21, 1920).—I agree with the proposed order.

During the pendency of an appeal by a judgment-debtor, W stood surety for the payment of the decretal amount. The appeal was dismissed and the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree. In this application he specified the names of the judgment-debtor and the surety, but sought execution only as against the property of the judgment-debtor. More than three years after the date of this application, the decree-holder applied to execute the decree as against the surety:

JUDGMENT.—In this case Hari Ram, on the 31st October 1913, obtained a decree against Umar Baksh. The latter lodged an appeal and, while the appeal was pending, Wazir Baksh stood surety for payment of the decretal amount. The appeal was dismissed. The date of dismissal is not clear, but it was sometime in the year 1916. On the 27th February 1917 the decree holder put in an application for execution of the decree. In column 9 of this application he gave the names of both the judgment-debtor and the surety as the persons against whom the decree was to be executed, but in column 10, which is the column showing the mode in which execution is sought, he asked merely for attachment of the property of the judgment-debtor. Notice issued to the judgment-debtor but not to the surety. On the 12th March 1917 the decree-holder put in a receipt for Rs. 16-8-0 realised from the judgment debtor and stated that the case might be consigned to the record room. This was accordingly done.

Now, on the 7th January 1920 he applied for execution against the surety. The first Court dismissed the application as time-barred, relying on Narayan v. Timmaya (1), and holding that the application of the 27th February 1917 was not an application for any steps to be taken against the surety. The learned District Judge, on appeal, held that the application of 1917 must be regarded as an application presented against both the judgment-debtor and the surety. The District Judge, therefore, decided that the present application was within time. The surety appeals to this Court.

On behalf of the decree-holder it has been urged before me that a decree-holder is not bound to specify in column 10 all the steps which he wants taken in execution of his decree and that had the decree-holder, during the course of the execution proceedings in 1917, made a further application to the Court to take steps against the surety, such an application for execution would have been regarded as dating back to the beginning of the execution proceedings, i. e., 27th February 1917. This is probably correct, but the fact remains that the decree-holder did not make any application throughout the former execution proceedings against the surety, and I cannot see that the mere inclusion of his name in column 9 can be regarded as an indication that the decree-holder wanted to execute the decree at that time against the surety, seeing that in column 10 he clearly specified the steps that he wanted taken, viz., the attachment of the property of the judgment-debtor, and never subsequently throughout those proceedings made any additional application. Counsel for the respondents has referred me to Syud Mahomed v. Syud Abedoolah (2) as an authority for the proposition that an application not made in the form prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code still counts as an application for the purpose of saving limitation. But the application of February 1917 was made in the form prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code, and I do not see how the ruling quoted helps me in my decision in the present case. In Mathura Prosad v. Anurago Koer (3) an application for execution was returned for amendment and not re-presented until after limitation for execution had expired; it was held that the original presentation was sufficient to save limitation. This ruling also seems to me to have no bearing on my decision in the present case. Counsel for the respondents next refers me to Ramachandra Naidu v. Tirupathi Naidu (4), which lays down that an application for execution will save limitation even though the relief asked may be one which is not allowed by the terms of the decree. This ruling, again, seems to me irrelevant to the present case. In Samia Fillai v. Ohockalinga Ohettiar (5) an application for execution named by mistake the deceased judgment-debtor as the person against whom the decree was sought to be executed, and it was held that this was sufficient to save time as against his legal representatives. This ruling, also, seems to me irrelevant to the present case, which is not one of any person having been named by mistake. In my opinion, although the name of the surety was shown in column 9 in the proceedings of 1917, no steps can be said to have been asked for against the surety in those proceedings, and I consider that those proceedings do not save limitation so far as the surety is concerned. The ruling Narayan v. Timmaya (1) is applicable to the present case, and, following that ruling, I consider that the present application for execution against the surety is time-barred.

The learned Counsel for the respondents argues that, according to the terms of the surety-bond, the decree could not be executed against the surety until after steps against the judgment debtor had failed. He urges, therefore, that limitation should not be counted from the date of the decree or even from the date of any previous application. In fact, he argues that Article 181 and not Article 182 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act is applicable to the present case. I can only say that the application is obviously one for execution of a decree. The decree was certainly not passed against the surety, but, by reason of section 145, Civil Procedure Code, it can be executed against him, and so the decree-holder has applied for execution of the decree as against the surety. The limitation for such an application is laid down by Article 182 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, and the decree-holder cannot break away from that Article.

I accept the appeal and, reversing the decision of the learned District Judge, I restore that of the first Court, dismissing the application for execution against the surety. The decree-holder must pay costs in the District Court and in this Court.

Minor—Suit against minor on pro-note—Burden of proof of minority—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115.

Where a defendant, in answer to a claim on a pro-note, sets up the plea of minority, the burden lies on him of establishing it.

A minor who obtains a loan on the representation that he is of age, is estopped from pleading his infancy as a defence to a suit on the loan.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Lahore, dated the 12th July 1920.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Petitioner.

Khalifa Shuja ul-Din, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit on a pro note the defendant put forward the plea of infancy and the Court below, placing on plaintiff the onus of proving that at the date of the contract the defendant was of full age, held that the onus had not been discharged. It also held that if the onus had been on the defendant the proof of minority would have been insufficient. In my opinion, the contract was, on the face of it, valid, and his infancy was a fact within the special knowledge of defendant and, therefore, the onus of proving it lay upon him. He has not proved his infancy at the date of contract.

Moreover, on his own showing he could not have been more than six weeks short of t age of 18 years at the date of contract; on that date he gave the plaintiff's assignor reason to believe he was of age, and consequently he is estopped under section 115, Evidence Act, from pleading his infancy.

On the question of consideration, however, I do not think the plaintiff should succeed.

There is evidence that no money passed and was not to pass unless a post was secured for the defendant. The actual lender of the money was not called by the plaintiff, and the fact that the pro note was transferred to the plaintiff, who is a clerk and not a money lender, arouses further suspicion as to the passing of consideration.

For these reasons, I refuse to interfere but leave parties to bear their own costs.

An order directing the return of a memorandum of appeal for presentation to the proper Court is not a "final order", nor is the Court making the order "the Appellate Court," within the meaning of Article 182 (2) of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and the decree-holder is not in such a case entitled to sue for interest on the decree for execution.

JUDGMENT.

PERD, J.—The first question raised is this appeal is whether the plaintiffs, mortgagors, are entitled to execute their decree, one for redemption, by asking the Court to sell the mortgaged property. It is prima facie concluded in their favour by Gwinla Taragan v. Veeran (1), since we have been shown no case in which that decision has been doubted, and one Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 99 of 1915, in which it has been followed, and since Mr. Anantha Krishna Iyer for defendants declined to argue against its correctness. He has relied only on the fact that the decree provides for a sale at the instance only of the mortgagee. But that appears to have been the case also in the decision referred to. This objection to the order under appeal must, therefore, be disallowed.

The more important contention before us is, however, that the plaintiff's application for execution was made too late; and certainly it was so, unless time ran, as they contend, from the date, 10th February 1915, on which an order was passed by this Court returning their memorandum of appeal against the decree for presentation to the District Court, as the proper Court to entertain it. Was the High Court, in these circumstances, "the Appellate Court" and was this its "final order" within the meaning of Article 182 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act.

This Court's order in no degree decided the appeal; and its final character has been supported mainly by comparison of its effect, with that of the withdrawal of the appeal, reference to which as a starting point was introduced into the Article by its amendment in 1908. But this argument is unsustainable, if, as in Peria Kovil Ramanuia Peria Jeeyangar v. Lakshmi Dow (2), and Faiz ur Rahman v. Shah Muhammad Khan (3), which were reproduced in the amendment, there is, besides the withdrawal, an order dismissing the appeal as withdrawn. Further, there is an order of the Appellate Court, such as the Article contemplates directly. And it may be doubted whether there can be cases of withdrawal without such an order. For the procedure for withdrawal of a suit with leave to sue again under Order XXIII corresponds with nothing in the specification of the powers of the Appellate Court in section 107, Civil Procedure Code. But it is useless to consider further the applicability of the reference in the Article to withdrawal, or the analogy between it and the order in question at present when, in my opinion, plaintiffs must fail, because this Court was not the Appellate Court, inasmuch as the proceedings before it were not within its jurisdiction.

In Akshoy Kumar Nundi v. Ohunder Mohun Chathati (4) it was held that an appeal is presented, for the purpose of the Limitation Act, when it is presented to the proper Court and in the present case in which this Court returned the appeal memorandum for want of jurisdiction, there was no legally constituted appeal and no final order by the Appellate Court. It is suggested that the order of return was final so far as this Court was concerned, and that it was the order of the Appellate Court because this Court has appellate powers, a distinction being attempted between failures of jurisdiction on territorial grounds and on the pecuniary grounds referred to in this Court's order. I am unable to follow that distinction and it was supported by no authority. The remainder of the argument is inconsistent with reference to 'the' not 'an' Appellate Court in the Article and its best support was the reference to Krishnasami v. Kanakasabai (5) and the cases therein cited. But the principle for which plaintiffs contend was referred to only obiter in this Court's decision and was applied in Matra Mondal v. Hari Mohun Mullick (6) and Nidhi Lal v. Maszar Hussain (7) to proceedings actually completed in the wrong Court, through mistake and without objection and was authorised by the reference in the various Civil Courts Acts concerned to the jurisdiction in question as concurrent. Here we are concerned with the more general principle that no party shall be allowed to obtain a longer period of limitation, on the ground of his own mistake, and no attempt has been or, indeed, could fairly be made to invoke section 14 or any other provision of the Limitation Act, by which exceptions to it are recognised as authorising plaintiff's contention. As there was no final order of the Appellate Court, time cannot be calculated from one, and the application was, therefore, cut of time and should have been dismissed.

The appeal is allowed, the lower Appellate Court's order being set aside and that of the Subordinate Judge being restored with costs throughout.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The decree under execution is one for redemption and was passed on the 19th March 1898. The time fixed for payment expired before the new Civil Procedure Code came into force. An appeal was preferred to the High Court within the time limited by law. It was returned on the 10th February 1915 for representation to the proper Court, as the High Court was of opinion that the appeal lay to the District Court and not to itself. The present application for execution was made on the 21st September 1916 for sale of the mortgaged property.

Two objections were taken to it. The first was that, under the decree, the mortgagor is not entitled to apply for sale. The second is that the application was barred by limitation. The District Judge overruled both these objections.

The first point is covered by Govinda Taragan v. Veeran (1). In that case the learned Judges were of opinion that although express power was given by section 93 of the Transfer of Property Act, only to the mortgagee to apply for sale, the mortgagor has also an inherent right to apply for a similar order. This decision was followed in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No 99 of 1915 to which my learned brother was a party. Speaking for myself, I should have required more argument to convince me of the correctness of the view taken in these two decisions and would have suggested a reference to the Full Bench, if our decision depended upon the first point alone. Notwithstanding the argument addressed to us by the learned Advocate General regarding the procedure adopted in England by which power is reserved to the mortgagor to apply for sale where a decree for redemption is passed, I am not convinced that we should read into section 93 of the Transfer of Property Act or into Order XXXIV, rules 7 and 8 such a power. However, as the conclusion which I have come to is not dependent upon the view I take on the first point, and as Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, who appeared for the appellant, did not ask us to dissent from the view in Govinda Taragan v. Veeran (1), but only attempted to distinguish that case from the present, I do not propose to say anything more about it.

The second question is practically bare of authority. The point for determination is, that where an appeal is presented to a Court to which appeals do not ordinarily lie and that Court ultimately passes an order returning the appeal for presentation to the proper Court, whether such an order is within Article 182 (2) of the 3rd column of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. That clause runs thus: "Where there has been an appeal, the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court or the withdrawal of the appeal." The words "or the withdrawal of the appeal" were inserted by the Amending Act of 1905. Is the order of the High Court returning the plaint for presentation to the proper Court, an order of the Appellate Court or can it be regarded as a withdrawal of the appeal?

Under the Civil Courts Act, III of 1873, section 13, the Legislature has prescribed which shall be the Appellate Court and the circumstances under which appeals from one Court can lie taken to another.

In conformity with that Act, in the present case the view of the High Court was that the subject-matter of the Original Suit was above Rs. 2,500 and below Rs. 5,000 in value and that, consequently, an appeal lay to the District Court and not to the High Court. The language of the second clause of Article 182 which I have quoted refers to the Appellate Court. In my opinion, that language means that the Appellate Court should be the proper Appellate Court, not any Appellate Court which a party bona fide or otherwise has chosen to file an appeal in. The learned Advocate General, who appeared for the respondent, contended that the High Court has a general power of hearing appeals from the Subordinate Courts. It is true that, by virtue of section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code, the High Court can withdraw any appeal in any of the Subordinate Courts and hear it itself but the disposal of an appeal in the exercise of the powers given by section 24 would not constitute the High Court the Appellate Court as contemplated by clause

MAHOMED ABDUL KADIR V. SAMI PANDI TEVAR.

(2) of Article 182 of the Limitation Act.

It was also contended before us that all appellate authorities must be regarded as possessing fundamental jurisdiction to hear appeals. The argument was as was held in Krishnasami v. Kanakasabai (5) as there is a general power in a Subordinate Judge or District Judge to hear suits which originally, a District Munsif alone can try; similarly, there is a general power in the High Court to hear the appeals, which would be heard only by a District Judge or a Subordinate Judge.

The language of section 24, which contemplates an order of transfer, does not indicate the existence of such a general power. The right of appeal is the creature of the Statute, and the right to resort to particular grades of the tribunals, is equally a statutory right and not a common law right. It is because of the powers of supervision which are vested in the High Court under the Charter Act and by the Letters Patent Act that the Legislature has enacted, under section 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that the High Court can withdraw to its own file appeals pending in the lower Courts. Moreover, section 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it. In my opinion, this provision is applicable to appeals also.

Section 26 of the Code provides that an appeal shall lie from every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction to the Court authorised to hear appeals from the decision of such Court. I take it that the authorisation herein referred to is what is contained in the Civil Courts Act of each of the Presidencies. Apart from authority, therefore, on the construction of the above sections and on general principles of jurisprudence, I am of opinion that clause (2) of Article 182 should be interpreted as referring to the Appellate Court which ordinarily is empowered to hear appeals from the Subordinate Courts. If we make a departure from this rule, there is nothing to prevent a suitor from claiming that the time during which an appeal has been pending in a Revenue Court in which he has wrongly filed an appeal should be deducted in computing the period of limitation.

In this connection, I am not clear that, even if the High Court can be regarded as the Appellate Court within the meaning of that expression in clause (2) of Article 182, the order directing the return of the plaint for presentation to the proper Court is within the same clause. I attach no importance to the fact that the order itself was not complied with, as the appeal was never presented to the Subordinate Judge. As at present advised, I am of opinion that the order contemplated is one which disposes of the appeal on the merits in some form, and not simply one which intimates to the party that the appeal should be filed elsewhere. I may here refer to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Batuk Nath v. Munni Dei (8), where it was held that an order of the Privy Council dismissing an appeal for default of prosecution is not an order in Council, contemplated by Article 182. The reason for that dictum is that there was no adjudication on the merits. I confess that the introduction of the clause by the Amending Act "or withdrawal of the appeal" to some extent weakens this suggestion of mine, but in the case of a withdrawal—I take the withdrawal to be an unconditional one—there is an end to the litigation; but from the order returning the appeal for presentation to a proper Court, the same result does not necessarily follow. It is not a strained construction upon the second clause of Article 182 to say that the decree, order, or withdrawal contemplated must all have the effect of putting an end to the litigation. However that may be, as I am of opinion that the order in question was not passed by the Court contemplated in clause (2) the respondent is not entitled to claim that limitation starts against him only from the 10th February 1915 and not earlier. When we remember that, under the Indian Law, there is nothing to prevent a party entitled to a benefit under the decree from executing that decree, there is no necessity for reading into the Article words which are not to be found there. Wair Mahlon v. Lulit Sing (9) contains observations which, to some extent, support the respondent. The appeal in that case was certainly a competent one. I do not feel pressed by the obiter dictum contained in that judgment. Akshoy Kumar Nundi v. Chunder Mohun Chathati (4) is not entirely reconcilable with the observations in Wazir Mahton v. Lulit Singh (9) relied on by the District Judge. Very recently the Judicial Committee held that, where an application was presented bona fide to a Court which had no jurisdiction to execute a decree, the application was not one made to the proper Court in accordance with the law, within the meaning of these words in clause 5 of Article 182. The principle of that decision applies equally to the present case. Vide Setrucherla v. Maharaja of Jeypore (10).

For all these reasons, I am of opinion that the decision of the District Judge must be reversed and the execution application should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 10. Pre-emption, suit for, on ground of urgency:—Property transferred by pre-emptor to wife—Sale held to be valid as against creditors—Pre-emptor, whether creditor.

Plaintiff sued to pre-empt the sale of a house on the ground that he was the owner of an adjoining house. It appeared that the latter house had been sold by the plaintiff to his wife by means of a registered conveyance and that the wife had effected a mortgage of the house. The sale in favour of the wife had, however, been held to be ineffectual against the creditors of the plaintiff. The plaintiff now contended that he was still the owner of the house and was entitled to pre-empt the sale of the house in dispute.

Held, (1) that the judgment holding that as between the plaintiff's wife and his creditors the sale in favour of the wife was ineffectual proved no more than that the sale in favour of the wife had been questioned by the plaintiff's creditors; [p. 272, col. 1.]

(2) that as between the plaintiff and his wife the latter was still the owner of the house; [p. 273, col. 1.]

(3) that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to pre-empt the sale of the adjoining house on the ground of vicinage. [p. 273, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decrees of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, dated the 25th October 1916.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad, for the Hon'ble Mr. Fati Hassan, K. B., and Lala Mool Chand, R. S., for the Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shah, K. B., for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 20th April 1915, one Abdul Razak sold a house belonging to him to Sheikh Fazal Ilahi for Rs. 8,000. On the 18th April 1916 one Haji Abdul Razak, son of Haji Muhammad Baksh, instituted a suit for possession of the house sold by pre-emption. He alleged that the real price paid was Rs. 7,000, but that he was willing to pay the sum mentioned in the deed of sale, viz., Rs. 8,000. The house of the pre-emptor was said to adjoin that sold. Inter alia, it was pleaded by the vendee that the plaintiff had no right of pre-emption, inasmuch as the house on which he based his claim did not belong to him but to his wife. The Trial Court, after a consideration of this question, has come to the conclusion that this defence is correct and that the plaintiff was not the owner of the house adjoining that which has been sold. His suit having, therefore, been dismissed Haji Abdul Razak has come up to this Court in appeal and on his behalf we have heard Mr. Aziz Ahmad, while for the respondent Mr. Moti Sagar has addressed us.

The only question for our decision is, whether the house adjoining that sold belongs to the appellant or not. That at one time the appellant was the owner is not disputed. It is alleged, however, that on the 15th of June 1906 the appellant sold this house to his wife for a sum of Rs. 6,000. The consideration for the sale was Rs. 1,000, as part of the dower due to the wife and Rs. 5,000 to be paid by the wife to one Chhaban Lal, to whom the house had been mortgaged. On the 13th of February 1907, Chhaban Lal obtained a decree for Rs. 5,430 and costs with interest at five per cent. till realisation. On the 29th of June 1908, Chhaban Lal was paid Rs. 3,000, by Abul Haq, a brother of the appellant's wife, Musammat Allah Bandi. Musammat Allah Bandi, on the 1st of July 1908, executed a mortgage of half of the house in Abdul Haq's favour. Again, on the 5th of January 1909 Chhaban Lal was paid Rs. 3,200, the balance of his claim, by Abdul Haq, and Allah Bandi on the 8th of January 1908, mortgaged the other half of the house to her brother and her son in law, Zia-ud-Din. Subsequent to this, certain other creditors of the appellant attached this house in execution of a decree obtained in their favour. Musammat Allah Bandi filed objections to the attachment and sale, alleging that the house was hers, having been purchased by her from her husband as stated above. Her objections being disallowed, she brought a suit against the said attaching creditors in which she sought a declaration that this house, being her property, was not liable to attachment in execution of a decree passed against her husband. Her suit was finally dismissed by the Chief Court.

It appears that the appellant had dealings in Calcutta and he filed a petition in insolvency in Court at Alipore in 1909. In that petition he excluded specifically this house from his assets, stating that it belonged to his wife, Musammat Allah Bandi. For the appellant it has been argued by his learned Counsel that, in spite of this sale, which he characterises as fictitious, the ownership of the house remained with his client, and he drew our attention to the statement of the appellant and the appellant's wife in the Court below in which they both alleged that the house was now owned by the appellant. Mr. Aziz Ahmed sought to treat the judgment of the Chief Court as evidence in the case in support of the allegation that the sale to Musammat Allah Bandi was a mere paper transaction under which no property passed. We are, however, unable to regard this judgment as evidence of anything more than the fact that the ownership of Musammat Allah Bandi was challenged by a creditor of her husband's. The finding arrived at cannot be considered by us as evidence. In this view, we are supported by, inter alia, Guja Lal v. Fatt'h Lall (1) and Indar Singh v. Fater Singh (2), with which decisions we are in agreement. Turning to the statements made in the Court below, we find that, in the first instance, on the 19th of July 1916, the appellant stated that he had executed a sale-deed in favour of his wife which had, however, been cancelled by the Chief Court and that, therefore, he was not bound by the deed. He further stated that his wife also admitted that the sale did not stand any longer. On the same day he made a further statement in which he said that, as the Chief Court cancelled the sale-deed, he became the owner. He also stated that the sale was really a fictitious one and had been effected in order to defraud Nasir Ahmed, the troublesome creditor, and admitted that his wife had subsequently mortgaged the house in favour of her brother which mortgage, however, was fictitious. The appellant was later examined as a witness on behalf of the defendant. He more or less repeated his former statements and admitted that in the insolvency petition filed by him at Alipore he had not entered this house as being part of his assets. He also admitted that his wife had mortgaged, though fictitiously, this house to Abdul Haq and stated that Abdul Haq had paid off Chhaban Lal (the former mortgagee). Musammat Allah Bandi, examined as a witness for the appellant, stated that the house in question belonged to her husband and that the sale and subsequent mortgages were mere fictitious transactions. In re-examination she was asked whether the sale-deed executed by her husband in her favour was fictitious or genuine. Instead of giving a definite answer to that question, she replied that the sale-deed had been cancelled by the Chief Court of Lahore. She was then asked to whom the house belonged from that time, i. e., the cancellation of the deed, and her reply was that it belonged to her husband. In the deed of sale relating to the house now sought to be pre-empted, one of the boundaries is given as the house now in question and as belonging to the appellant. This fact does not appear to us as of any great probative value. This is all the evidence on the record and having regard to the fact that the deed of sale had been duly registered in favour of Musammāt Allah Bandi, and that subsequent to that deed of sale Musammāt Allah Bandi had been mortgaging the said house the onus of proving the fictitious nature of the transaction clearly lay on the appellant.

After a careful consideration of the evidence on the record, viz, the statements of the appellant and of his wife, we are unable to find that the conclusion arrived at by the Trial Court is incorrect. In our opinion, the sale to Musammāt Allah Bandi was genuine, in so far that it was intended by the parties to convey the ownership of the house to Musammāt Allah Bandi, and the fact that the sale would have been ineffectual against any creditor of the husband who might be able to show that it had been made with a view to defeating his claims does not render the sale inoperative or void as against the parties to the sale deed. In this view of the case, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Partnership, dissolution of—Receiver, appointment of—Suit against partners—Receiver, whether necessary party—Test.

Where in a suit for dissolution of a partnership a Receiver is appointed for winding-up the business and recovering the outstandings, he is not a necessary party to a suit brought against the partnership by a third party. The test in such cases is, whether the object of the suit is to interfere with the possession of the Receiver or the jurisdiction of the Court appointing him, if it is not, he is not a necessary party to the suit. JUDGMENT.—This is a suit filed by the plaintiff, Asudamal-Dwarkadas, against the firm of Choithram Gopaldas consisting of more partners than one and carrying on business at Karachi by their partners, Gopaldas Choithram, Jethanand Wadhmal, Lunidaram Sobhraj and Naraindas Wadhu-ram. It is admitted that, in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Sukkur, one of the partners in this firm has filed a suit against the other partners in the firm for dissolution of partnership and a Receiver has been appointed for winding-up the business and recovering the outstandings. In the written statement filed in this Court by the defendants the point was taken that as a Receiver in respect of the defendants' firm has been already appointed he is a necessary party to this suit. Accordingly, with the consent of the parties, a preliminary issue was framed as follows:—

"Is the Receiver a necessary party to the suit, if so, is the leave of the Court essential before he is joined as a party?"

It appears to me that, so far as this suit is concerned, there is nothing to prevent the plaintiff, in the event of obtaining a decree, proceeding with it to execution without the necessity of the Receiver being on the record as a party to the suit. In Jatindra Nath Chowdhury v. Sarfaraz Meah (1) it was held that, where property in the hands of the Receiver is intended to be affected by the result of the litigation, the Receiver is a proper and a necessary party to such a suit. In the case of Banku Eehary Dey v. Harendra Nath Mukherjee (2) expression was given to the same remark and it was further said that, although the appointment of the Receiver does not of itself debar the creditor of the person over whose estate the Receiver is appointed from suing for his claim, yet if the object of the suit is to interfere with the possession of the Receiver or the jurisdiction of the Court appointing the Receiver, leave of the Court must be obtained and the Receiver made a party to the suit. In my opinion these observations supply the test to be adopted in cases whether the Receiver is or is not a necessary party to the suit. It is obvious that in the present case the object of the suit is not to interfere with the possession of the Receiver, nor would it in any way interfere with the jurisdiction of the Court appointing the Receiver. Under Order XXI, rule 50 a decree, if passed as in this case against the firm, may be executed either against the property of the partnership or against any of the persons, who have appeared in their own name or who is adjudged to be a partner in this case. There would, therefore, be nothing whatever to prevent the plaintiff from seeking to execute the decree against the individual defendants in this case without being compelled to attach the property in the hands of the Receiver. Therefore, the result of this litigation would not necessarily affect any part of the property in the hands of the Receiver.

Under these circumstances, in my opinion, the Receiver is not a necessary party and, therefore, the preliminary issue raised must be answered in the negative. The suit must be set down for framing issues on the 17th October 1919.

APPELLANT

SAVI AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 104, 117, 120, 121, 122, 128, 129, O. XLI, r. 10, O. XLIX, r. 3—Letters Patent (Cal.), cl. 15—Letters Patent Appeal from decree on Original Side—Rules applicable—Failure to furnish security, effect of—O. XLI, r. 10, whether mandatory.

The Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, is framed on the scheme of providing generally for the mode in which the High Courts are to exercise their jurisdiction, whatever it may be, while specifically excepting the powers relating to the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction, to which the Code is not to apply. It confers a general-rule making power saving only what is excepted in the body of the Code. [p. 280 col 1.]

The Orders and rules made under the Code apply to the High Courts, unless the body of the Code contains something inconsistent with them. They are applicable to the jurisdiction exercisable under the Letters Patent, except that they do not restrict the express Letters Patent Appeal. [p. 279, cols. 1 & 2.]

There is a distinction between rules which take away existing rights of appeal and rules which recognise those rights but regulate the procedure of the Court in which such appeals are pending. This distinction has been overlooked in Sabhapathi Chetti v. Narayansami Chetti, 25 M. 556; 11 M. L. J. 346 and in Sesha Ayyar v. Nagarathna Lala, 27 M. 121 at p. 123. [p. 279, col. 1.]

Order XLI, rule 10 applies to appeals brought under the Letters Patent. The words of that rule, directing the Court to reject an appeal when an order for security for costs is made and is not complied with during the period fixed, are mandatory and not permissive. [p. 278, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Calcutta High Court (Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and Woodroffe, J.), dated the 23rd March 1915, refusing the appellant leave to continue in forma pauperis an appeal, under section 15 of the Letters Patent Act of 1865, against an order of Chandhri, J., and rejecting the said appeal.

FACTS of the case are fully stated in their Lordships' judgment.

On this appeal

Sir Erle Richards, K. O., (with him Dr. Majid), for the Appellant, submitted that the High Court were wrong in their view that if you wanted to appeal in forma pauperis you must do so when you lodge your memorandum of appeal: that, on the other hand, they had power to allow the continuance of the appeal in forma pauperis, even after it had been started in the ordinary way. They had based their order upon Order XLI, rule 10, but he submitted that neither the Code of Civil Procedure itself nor the Orders and rules made under it, were binding on the Court in appeals like this, under section 15 of the Letters Patent: alternatively, section 151 of the Code reserved the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice.

The provisions of the Code as to security for costs do not apply to proceedings under the Letters Patent:

SABITRI THAKURAIN v. SAVI.

Sesha Ayyar v. Nagarathna Lala (1),
Sabhopathi Chetti v. Narayansami Chetti (2).

Section 549 of the old Code, referred to in these cases, corresponds to Order XLI, rule 10. These cases show that neither that Order nor any of the Orders and rules apply to appeals under the Letters Patent.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—Do you say the High Court cannot require security for costs under the Letters Patent?]

They could require it under their inherent powers, but the rules of the Code do not apply.

The present appeal is not permissible at all under the Code. It is an appeal against an order not specified in section 104. That section cannot, however, be read as taking away our right of appeal under the Letters Patent.

[SIR JOHN EDGE referred to section 44 of the Letters Patent and observed that the provisions of the Letters Patent were subject to the Legislative powers of the Government of India.]

Those powers must be exercised by express terms.

There must be an inherent power in the High Court to allow our application, or you would shut out all cases where people become paupers after filing the memorandum of appeal, section 151 recognizes that power.

[LORD SUMNER.—Surely you must consider what Order XLIV says.]

Dr. Mauid followed. Part X of the Civil Procedure Code, sections 129—131, gives the High Court power to make rules for itself. The Civil Procedure Code is silent as to the continuance of an appeal in forma pauperis, so you must fall back on the general law, which permits of such continuance:

Doe d. Ellis v. Owens (3), Thompson v. Calcutta Tramway Company Limited (4), Revji Patil v. Sakharam (5).

Messrs. Kenworthy Brown and E. B. Raikes, for the Respondents, submitted that the Civil Procedure Code applied and made no provision for the continuance of an appeal in forma pauperis.

Sesha Ayyar v. Nagarathna Lala (1) (supra) related to the Code of 1882: section 104 of the new Code was different from the corresponding section of that Code (section 583) sections 116, 117, 121, 122, 123 and 128 of the new Code show that the Orders and rules made thereunder apply generally to the Chartered High Court: and Order XLIX, rule 3 places the matter, as regards Order XLI, rule 10, beyond doubt: it specifies that rule 35 of Order XLI shall not apply to a Chartered High Court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, thus showing that the rest of that Order does apply. As to section 151 of the Code, it cannot be contended here that the interests of justice make it necessary to grant the application: the Trial Judge did not believe the evidence for appellant.

Thompson v. Calcutta Tramway Company Limited (4) (supra) merely followed Nirmull Chandra Mookerjee v. Doyal Nath Bhattacharjee (6) and was based on a supposed practice of the Court: the existing rules must, anyhow, be now regarded as settling the present position.

Mr. Richards, K. C., replied. The sections of the new Code reproduce those of the old one with merely verbal alterations here and there, so the case in Sesha Ayyar v. Nagarathna Lala (1) is unaffected by the change of Codes and is still good law.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SUMNER.—The appellant in the present case presented a petition to the High Court at Calcutta on its Original Civil Side, in the exercise of its Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction, under the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, praying for administration, with a copy of his last Will annexed, to the property of her late husband. The grant was opposed by the present respondent, the manager of the deceased's property, who had applied to the Court of the District Judge of Bhagulpore for a grant of Probate under an earlier Will and entered a caveat to the widow's petition. Under the Will which she propounded she would be entitled to a life-interest in all the property of the deceased; under the earlier Will her interest was limited to a mere pittance.

The late husband of the appellant was a Brahman by caste and a man of considerable means. He is described as having been a man of progressive ideas but intemperate habits. For the first he was excommunicated by the members of his caste, and, owing to the second, he died an untimely death at his house at Garganibas, after a bout of conviviality which lasted about a week, leaving, as his widow alleges, the Will which she relied upon, bearing date about a fortnight before he died. On account of the excommunication of the deceased from his community, serious questions arose as to his cremation and sradh ceremonies and, during the widow's absence at Gaya for this purpose, the respondent, as she alleges, broke open the boxes belonging to the deceased and made away with this Will. Fortunately, a fair copy of it was forthcoming and she put it forward, relying upon the evidence of the attesting witnesses, two members of the Bhagalpore Bar.

(6) 2 O. 130; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 370.

SABITRI THAKURAIN v. SAVI.

The petition was heard by Chandhuri, J., who, after taking the evidence of the attesting witnesses and of the witnesses for the present respondent (two of whom are said to have been her late husband's boon companions and "inimically disposed to her because she stood in the way of her husband's leading a bad life and giving such pleasure parties"), rejected the evidence of the attesting witnesses and dismissed the petition.

From this decision Srimati Sabitri Thakurain appealed to the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction under section 15 of the Letters Patent of 1815. It was evident that, on the one hand, her own interest in the matter was very considerable and that, on the other, further litigation might involve the respondent in great expense with small prospect of being recouped if he won. The respondent accordingly petitioned the High Court on its Appellate Side for an order that the appellant should give security for costs under Order XLI, rule 10 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and on the 18th December 1914 an order was made, that the plaintiff appellant should within two months from that date furnish security to the extent of Rs. 5,000 to the satisfaction of the Registrar.

On the 17th February 1915 Counsel for the appellant appeared before the Registrar and offered that his client should furnish the security by executing a bond charging two properties, but as it was objected that the properties belonged not to her but to the estate, and there was no time left under the order to enquire whether she could charge them or not, the Registrar refused the offer and certified that the order had not been complied with.

On the same day the appellant filed a petition asking for three months' further time, which came on before the Court on the 18th February and was refused. Order XLI, rule 10 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, prescribes that if an order for security for costs is made and is not complied with during the period fixed by the Court, the Court "shall reject the appeal" and, accordingly, on the 22nd February the respondent filed a petition, alleging that his taxed costs amounted to Rs. 58,832.12 annas, 6 pies as between Solicitor and client, and Rs. 25,469, 8 annas as between party and party, and praying that the appeal might be dismissed with costs. Upon this the appellant for the first time sought to proceed in forma pauperis, and telegraphed to the Chief Justice begging for an opportunity of making an application for that purpose. She was given a week's time and filed a petition on the 23rd March 1915. On the same day an order was made refusing her application, and this is the order now under appeal. By a separate order the appeal against the decree of Chandhuri, J., was dismissed for failure to comply with the order for security. Leave to appeal against the refusal to allow the appellant to continue her appeal in forma pauperis was granted to the appellant by His Majesty in Council on the 29th December 1916.

When the High Court heard the application for leave to continue the appeal in forma pauperis, after some discussion of the question whether the appellant was really without means or not, objection was taken by the respondent that leave, if given at all, should have been given before the time for furnishing the security expired, to which the appellant's Advocate replied that the Court had jurisdiction to protect his client, her want of means having arisen since the date of the order for security. In giving the Court's reasons for dismissing the application, the Chief Justice

SABITRI THAKURAIN v. SAVI.

Sir Lawrence Jenkins, used the following language:—

"In our opinion this application for leave to continue the appeal as pauper comes too late. It should have been made before the order for security was passed. The result of that order for security is that which is prescribed in Order XLI, rule 10, that is to say, the appeal is rejected with the obligation imposed upon the Court by the Code."

The appellant has urged before their Lordships that the Court's sole reason for dismissing the application was the view, that it should have been made, under Order XLIV, rule 1, when the appeal was first lodged against the decree of Chaudhuri, J., no subsequent application to proceed as pauper being competent, and it is said that, having decided on a wrong construction of that Order, the Court should now have the matter remitted to it to consider whether or not leave should be given under the circumstances of this case.

In their Lordships' opinion it is clear that the appellant's argument completely misconceives the real meaning of the judgment in question. The High Court did not intend or purport to lay down the proposition that, under the Orders and rules or otherwise, an application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis must be made, when first the appeal is lodged or not at all, but to state what it conceived to be the effect of Order XLI, rule 10 (2) upon the facts of the present appeal. The learned Judges' proposition was, that under that rule they were bound, by words mandatory and not permissive, to reject the appeal under the circumstances of this case, and could not, therefore, grant a permission to continue it, which would in effect contradict the terms of rule 10 (2). Whether this view was right or wrong is the question now to be decided, and their Lordships do not propose to travel outside it.

The appellant argued strenuously that a Court of Appeal as such, unless restricted by the express language of the instrument which creates it, must possess inherent power over the terms as to costs, on which litigants are allowed to proceed before it, and this in order that complete justice may be done. Whether this contention is sound and whether a rule limiting the exercise of such power to applications contemporaneous with the institution of the appeal would be a valid exercise of a power to make rules regulating procedure are questions eminently deserving consideration when they arise, but they lie outside the scope of the present appeal.

The appellant further contended, broadly, that the Orders and rules made under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, have no application to appeals brought under the Letters Patent of 1865. This contention again is too wide. The real question is whether Order XLI, rule 10 applies to such appeals, as the High Court thought that it did, and to this question alone their Lordships will proceed to address themselves.

By section 117 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, the provisions of the Code apply to all High Courts established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, and therefore, to the High Court at Calcutta, and although section 129 saves the power of the High Court to make rules not inconsistent with the Letters Patent establishing it, for the purpose of regulating its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction and adds that "nothing herein contained shall affect the validity of any such rules in force at the commencement of this Code," there has been no exercise of this power to affect the present appeal. From section 120 it would further appear that the Act was intended to apply to the High Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction generally, for that section makes specific provision for certain sections of the Code which do not so apply. Again, Order XLIX, rule 3 specifically enumerates certain orders and rules, which are not to apply to a Chartered High Court in the exercise of its ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction, none of the Orders or rules now material being there enumerated, although it is noteworthy that another rule of Order XLI, namely, No. 35, is included in the enumeration. Order L also excludes from application to Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, and other similar Courts certain specified Orders and rules, including Order XLI.

The Orders and rules made under the Code are, by section 121, given the same effect as if they had been enacted in the Code, and therefore, Order XLI, rule 10, is one of the provisions of the Code. It applies to appeals in the High Court, including the present appeal, unless any particular section of the Act can be found to exclude it. Section 104 (1) is the section relied on for this purpose. It prescribes what orders shall be appealable and enumerates them, and among the orders enumerated there is not included such an order as that made by Chaudhuri, J. Out of the operation of section 104 there are, however, expressly excepted matters, which are otherwise expressly provided for in the body of the Code. In order to appreciate the full effect of section 104 it should be compared with the corresponding section of the Act of 1882, section 588. The earlier section enacted that appeals should lie in certain cases, which it enumerated, "and from no other such orders." This raised the question neatly, whether an appeal expressly given by section 15 of the Letters Patent and not expressly referred to in section 588 of the Code of 1882, could be taken away by the general words of section 588 "and from no other such orders." The change in the wording of section 104 of the Act of 1908 is significant, for it runs, "and, save as otherwise expressly provided . . . . by any law for the time being in force, from no other orders." Section 15 of the Letters Patent is such a law, and what it expressly provides, namely, an appeal to the High Court's appellate jurisdiction from a decree of the High Court in its original ordinary jurisdiction, is thereby saved. Thus regulations duly made by Orders and rules under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, are applicable to the jurisdiction exercisable under the Letters Patent, except that they do not restrict the express Letters Patent appeal. There is a fallacy involved in the appellant's argument that the Letters Patent right of appeal is limited and to a certain extent taken away by orders and rules, which prevent the High Court from permitting the continuance of such an appeal in forma pauperis at any stage for there is, of course, a marked difference between a right to appeal on ordinary terms and without special indulgence, and a power to relieve the appellant in the exercise of that right from the burden of the ordinary terms. The High Court order as to security for costs is not a limit on the right to appeal nor does it take the right to appeal away, but it is a rule of procedure now applicable to the appeal under the Letters Patent under the words "any law for the time being in force," which are contained in section 104.

The appellant puts the point in another way and says that under the Act of 1882 some Indian Courts, notably the Courts in Madras, had held the Procedure Code of 1882 inapplicable in toto to Letters Patent appeals; that the Legislature had these decisions before it when the Code was re-enacted in 1908; that the changes of form and language between the Act of 1908 and that of 1882 are not substantial, and that, accordingly, the Legislature must be deemed to have adopted the judicial interpretation of the language used in 1882, when it repeated that language in substance in 1908. Their lordships have already pointed out that the re-enactment is made not in identical language but with material differences, and it may be doubted how far this mode of construing a re-enacting Statute is in point, where all that has been decided is the effect of the older Statute upon the provisions of another legal instrument, and not the actual meaning of the Statute re-enacted itself. There is, however, a prior question, namely, whether the Indian Courts have really laid down the proposition contended for.

It is true that in Sesha Ayyar v. Nagarathna Lala (1) Ayyangar, J., said that in a Letters Patent appeal from a single Judge a respondent could not apply for security for costs, because section 549 of the Civil Procedure Code, which corresponded to Order XLI, rule 10 of the Code of 1908, applied only to appeals to the High Court from Subordinate Courts, and that in Sabhapathi Chetti v. Narayanasami Chetti (2) the Court said that the provision made by section 15 of the Letters Patent was entirely foreign to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to appeals from one Court to another, but both these cases followed and purported only to apply Chappan v. Moidin Kutti (7), a Full Bench decision of 1898, and Toolsee Money Dasse v. Suddevi Dasse (8). These are cases in which the point actually decided was that the appeal expressly given by section 15 of the Letters Patent is not interfered with by section 588 of the Code of 1882, on the principle generalia specialibus non derogant, following Hurrish Ohunder Chowdhry v. Kalisunderi Debi (9) in 1882. From a consideration of these older cases, which were very fully argued and considered, it appears that the decisions in 25 and 27 Madras laid down their effect much more widely than was necessary and overlooked the distinction between rules which took away existing rights of appeal and rules which recognise these rights but regulate the procedure of the Court in which such appeals are pending. It is also plain that the words in section 104 of the Act of 1908 are inserted for the purpose of given effect to the decisions of the Full Bench at Madras and of the High Court at Calcutta, for the excepting words "save as otherwise expressly provided by any law," cut down the general words, and thus carry out the very reasoning of those two judgments.

Further, where section 632 of the Act of 1882 enacted that "except as provided in this Chapter, the provisions of this Order apply to such High Courts" (i. e., such as the High Court at Calcutta), section 117 of the Act of 1908 says: "save as provided in this Part or in Part 10 or in rules, the provisions of this Code shall apply to such High Courts." Now Part 10 of the Code of 1908 enacts (sections 122 and 128) that rules made under the authority of the Code may provide for any matters relating to the procedure of Civil Courts subject to their not being inconsistent with the provisions in the body of the Code, that is to say, that, under the Act of 1908, rules relating to all procedure are competent unless the body of the Code contains something inconsistent with them, while under the Act of 1882 the provisions of the Code merely (and subject to exceptions, which are now immaterial) "apply to such High Courts," which leaves in doubt the point, which the Code of 1908 puts beyond controversy.

A further point is taken, that section 151 of Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, preserves the inherent powers of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice, and to this general saving section appeal is made to take the present case out of the operation of the Orders and rules, if they are applicable to Letters Patent appeals. How far a mere general saving clause gives power in effect to refuse to apply an appropriate rule, made in the exercise of other powers of the Court and having statutory force, is another question, but for present purposes it is enough to say that, in the terms of the section, the inherent powers saved are such as are used to secure the ends of justice. Now, the question is, whether or not the appellant should be assisted in prosecuting an appeal in a case which has been tried once and decided against her, where failure in her appeal will impose a heavy burden of costs on the beneficiaries under the earlier Will, and as to this question their Lordships have not the materials even for forming a prima facie view of the merits of the case or the probabilities of its issue. It is evidently one, which turns mainly on the facts proved, and these depend on the credibility of witnesses whose testimony has been rejected by the learned Judge who saw and heard them. Their Lordships are not in a position to say that justice requires the prosecution of an appeal on terms so onerous to the party, whom that learned Judge declared to be in the right.

In conclusion, there is no reason why there should be any general difference between the procedure of the High Court in matters coming under the Letters Patent and its procedure in other matters, and if this particular matter of security for costs is not dealt with in the Orders and rules made under the powers of the Code, when it arises in connection with the jurisdiction created by the Letters Patent, section 15, no rules procedure have been formulated with regard to it, though the High Court's power to regulate procedure in Letters Patent appeals is independent and has been preserved. The Code is framed on the scheme of providing, generally, for the mode in which the High Court is to exercise its jurisdiction, whatever it may be, while specifically excepting the powers relating to the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction, to which the Code is not to apply. It confers a general rule-making power saving only what is excepted in the body of the Code.

Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion that the High Court at Calcutta rightly conceived itself precluded from entertaining the appellant's application to be allowed to continue her appeal in forma pauperis, since to grant her application at that stage would in effect have been to keep alive an appeal which they were, by reason of her default in the matter of security, bound to reject. The consequence is that the appeal fails, and so their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty.

Execution of decree—Attachment, wrongful, of property—Damages, suit for, by rightful owner, whether maintainable—Appeal, second—Limitation, plea of, whether can be raised for first time—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 2.

Inasmuch as a decree-holder is responsible for the attachment of moveable property seized in execution of his decree as the property of his judgment-debtor, a suit by the rightful owner of such property is maintainable against him for wrongful attachment. The mere fact that there is a subsequent order that the property should not be released and returned to the rightful owner, pending the decision of a suit by the decree-holder that the property was liable to attachment, would afford no protection against a claim for damages. [p. 281, col. 2.]

A question of limitation cannot be raised for the first time in appeal; such question must, under Order VIII, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, be raised by the defendant in his pleading. [p. 282, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, 24 Parganahs, dated the 8th of January 1917, modifying the decree of the Munsif, First Court, Sealdah, dated the 31st of August 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babus Monmatha Nath Roy (with him Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy) for the Appellant.—The case is not one of trespass but is what is technically known as an action on the case. So that malice must be proved. Refers to Peruvian Guano Co. v. Dreyfus (1). I was not actuated by malice. I simply pursued my civil remedy. I never knew that the attachment was wrongful. It was only by a subsequent judicial determination that it was declared that the properties had been wrongfully attached. Refers also to Bishun Singh v. Wyatt (2). The present action is, therefore, not maintainable.

Then the lower Appellate Court ought to have held that the claim of the plaintiff was barred by limitation, if not wholly, at least in part. On this ground also, the decision of the Court below is erroneous.

Babu Baranasibasi Mukherjee, for the Respondent, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for damages for wrongful attachment of moveable property. The appeal had been referred to a Full Bench. [Narendra Nath Koor v. Bhushan Chandra Pal (3)] and has now come up for final disposal.

The defendant obtained a decree for money against the father and the brother of the plaintiff. In execution of that decree, he caused an oil mill to be attached which he alleged was the property of his judgment-debtors. The attachment was effected on the 22nd January 1911. The oil mill was taken to pieces and was brought into Court. The plaintiff thereupon preferred a claim on the allegation that the oil mill was his property, had been purchased with his separate funds, was in his possession and was not liable to be attached in execution of the decree obtained by the defendant against his judgment-debtors. The claim was duly investigated with the result that on the 1st April 1911 it was allowed. The Court found that the oil mill had been purchased by the plaintiff with his own money, was his exclusive property, was in his possession and was not liable to be attached in execution of the decree obtained by the defendant. The Court thereupon made an order that the property be released from attachment and be returned to the plaintiff. The order was made on a Saturday and the Court found it impossible to make over the moveable property to the plaintiff on that day. On Monday following, that is, the 3rd April 1911, the defendant instituted a suit for declaration of his right to execute his decree against the oil mill as the property of his judgment debtors. At the same time, he applied to the Court that the oil mill might be retained in the custody of the Court during the pendency of the litigation. The Court directed the plaintiff to furnish security, if he desired to have the oil mill restored to him pursuant to the order made in his favour two days previously. The plaintiff was unable to furnish the security demanded, an order absolute was consequently made that the oil mill was to continue in the custody of the Court till the suit instituted by the defendant was decided. That suit was ultimately dismissed by the Trial Court on the 31st May 1912, and the decree of dismissal was confirmed on appeal. On the 22nd January 1914, the plaintiff instituted the present suit for damages for wrongful attachment of his oil mill. He alleged that he had suffered considerable loss as his oil mill had been taken to pieces and had become useless, and he added that this injury had been caused by the defendant maliciously. The Courts below have decreed the suit. On behalf of the defendant appellant, it has been argued that the suit is not maintainable inasmuch as this is not a case of trespass to goods. We are of opinion that this contention is wholly unfounded.

The damage suffered by the plaintiff is attributable directly to the wrongful attachment effected on the 22nd January 1911. There can be no question that for that attachment the defendant is responsible. Order XXI, rule 12 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, provides that "where an application is made for the attachment of any moveable property belonging to a judgment-debtor but not in his possession, the decree-holder shall annex to the application an inventory of the property to be attached, containing a reasonably accurate description of the same." It is on the basis of this inventory that the attachment is effected in the manner prescribed in rule 43 which provides that: "Where the property to be attached is moveable property, other than agricultural produce, in the possession of the judgment-debtor, the attachment shall be made by actual seizure, and the attaching officer shall keep the property in his own custody or in the custody of one of his subordinates, and shall be responsible for the due custody thereof." It is plain, as pointed out by Norman, J., in Soobjan Pe bee v. Sheikh Shureentoollah (4), that for the attachment the decree-holder is responsible, because it is he who specifies the goods which are seized in execution as the property of his judgment-debtor. Consequently, the attachment in this case, on the facts found, was wrongful, and, in the words of Lord Watson in Kissari Mohun Eoy v. Harsu'h Das (5), "the illegal attachment was thus the direct act of the appellants for which they became immediately responsible in law."

But it has been argued that the position of the defendant was improved by reason of the subsequent judicial determination that the properties had been wrongfully attached, as they were not the properties of his judgment-debtors. His contention is that the subsequent order that the property should not be released and returned to the plaintiff was a judicial order which affords a protection against the claim for damages. In support of this position, reliance has been placed on the decision in Peruvian Guano Co v. Dreyfus (1). That case is clearly distinguishable. In that case, there was a judicial appointment of a Receiver who was authorized to take charge of the disputed property. In the present case, the root of the mischief was the wrongful attachment effected at the instance of the defendant, who pointed out the oil mill as the property of his judgment-debtors. The case is obviously one of trespass and falls within the principle laid down in Clissold v. Cratchley (6) which was followed in Bhut Nath Pal Mistry v. Chandra Benode Pal Chowdhury (7) and the suit is consequently maintainable. The decisions in Joykalee Dassee v. Representative of Chandmalla (8), Wilson v. Kanhya Sahoo (9), Raj Chunder Roy v. Shama Scondari Debi (10), Madras Steam Navigation Co. Limited v. Shalimar Works Limited (11), Mohini Mohan Misser v. Surendra Narain Singh (12) and Nanjappa Othettiar v. Ganapathi Goundan (13) are clearly distinguishable, as, on their special facts, they were not regarded as cases of trespass at all.

It has finally been argued that the claim is barred by limitation, if not in its entirety at least in part. No question of limitation, however, was raised in either of the Courts below, and we are of opinion that the appellant is not entitled to invite the Court at this stage to entertain the point. The principle applicable in circumstances of this character, under the Code of 1852, was laid down by this Court in Balaram Gantia v. Mangla Dass (14). It was there pointed out that section 4 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, which has been re-placed by section 3 of the Limitation Act of 1908, does not entitle the defendant to raise a point of limitation at the appellate stage, unless the Court can give effect to the contention without the determination of questions of fact, in other words, that the Court of Appeal is bound to entertain a new ground of limitation, only when the point appears, on the face of the record, to be supported by the evidence produced in the Court of first instance. The matter has now been placed beyond all doubt by Order VIII, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, which shows that the question of limitation must be raised by the defendant by his pleading. It is impossible for us to say that if the question of limitation had been raised in the Court of first instance, as it should have been, there could not have been a complete answer by the defendant. In our opinion, there is no doubt that the decree is correct and must be affirmed.

The appeal is dismissed with costs of two hearings before the Division Bench.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal comes before us from the judgment and decree passed by the learned District Judge of Shahabad and arises out of a mortgage action instituted by the appellant against the respondents. The appellant cited as defendants in the action the executant of the mortgage-bond as well as his sons who were defendants Nos. 1 to 7. He also cited as defendants one Makri Pandey and his sons as defendants Nos. 8 to 10.

The case of the plaintiff was that the defendants Nos. 1 to 10 constituted a joint family and that Bidyadhar, defendant No. 1, borrowed Rs. 250 from him for the benefit of the entire joint family. The defendants entered appearance and on behalf of defendants Nos. 8 to 10 it was urged that they were separate from Bidyadhar and his branch of the family and are, therefore, not liable for the mortgage-debt at all. On behalf of all the defendants objection was taken to the rate of interest and to compound interest.

The Courts below have concurrently come to the conclusion that the two families taken together constituted a joint family, but being of opinion that the particular transaction was a transaction of Bidyadhar's branch of the family, the Courts have dismissed the suit as against the defendants Nos. 8 to 10.

On the question of interest, both the Courts have come to the conclusion that there was undue influence exercised on Bidyadhar in respect of compound interest and they have accordingly passed a decree against Bidyadhar's branch of the family for Rs. 250 with simple interest at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum.

We are of opinion that the learned District Judge erred in law in dismissing the suit as against Makri Pandey's branch. We are also of opinion that he ought not to have dismissed the claim for compound interest.

On the first point it is sufficient to refer to the finding of the learned District Judge that the two families taken together constituted a joint family. No doubt the learned District Judge does say that each branch had transactions of its own. Now, it was open to the learned Judge on a consideration of all the facts to come to the conclusion that, as a matter of fact, the two branches were separate, but that is not the finding. The finding being that the two families taken together constituted a joint family, there is no escape from the conclusion that every one of them is liable for a debt binding on the joint family. It was, however, urged on behalf of the respondents that there is no finding that Bidyadhar was the karta of the joint family and that, therefore, the family is not liable for the debt incurred by one who was not karta of the joint family. With this contention I do not agree. If the debt was a debt binding on the joint family we must assume that there was an authority vested in Bidyadhar to borrow the money for what must now be considered to be a joint family necessity.

On the second point it was, of course, open to the learned District Judge to dismiss the claim for compound interest on the ground that there was undue influence exerted on Bidyadhar, but no case of undue influence is made in the written statement. The question of undue influence is a question of fact, and it is well established that undue influence being a species of fraud must be pleaded with precision. If a case of undue influence is not made in the pleadings such a case cannot be investigated by the Courts. That being so, the decision as regards compound interest is wrong.

I would set aside the judgment and decree passed by the Courts below and grant the plaintiff the usual mortgage-decree for Rs. 250 with compound interest at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum, with yearly rests. The appellant is entitled to costs throughout. The period for redemption will be six months from the date of the decree of this Court.

JUDGMENT.

IN S. A. No. 1501 OF 1919.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration that a tax assessed by the Taki Municipality upon him under section 85 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, is in contravention of law and is consequently null and void.

The Court of first instance upheld the contention of the plaintiff. Upon appeal, that decision has been reversed by the District Judge.

The determination of the question in controversy depends upon the interpretation of section 85 which provides for the imposition by a Municipality of two classes of taxes, namely, "(a) a tax upon persons occupying holdings within the Municipality according to their circumstances and property within the Municipality" and "(b) a rate on the annual value of holdings situated within the Municipality." The tax in the present case has been imposed under clause (a).

The contention of the appellant is, that the assessment has been made according to his circumstances and property, not within but outside the Municipality. In our opinion, the facts found leave no room for doubt that this contention is well founded.

The appellant has been assessed on the basis of a valuation of his circumstances and property at the sum of Rs. 1,440. But it is plain, from the facts set out in the judgment of the District Judge, that he could not have been assessed on the basis of a valuation exceeding Rs. 250, if his circumstances and property within the Municipality were alone taken into account. He holds his family dwelling house in Taki jointly with his nephews and looks after the property.

The family of his son, who is a Deputy Magistrate, sometimes lives with him. He and his two co-sharers get Rs. 660 as the net income of the property within the Municipality; this gives him Rs. 220. It is further conceded that his circumstances within the Municipality are worth another Rs. 30. But the Municipality has assessed him on Rs. 1,440 by taking into account his circumstances outside the Municipality. The question is, whether the Municipality was competent to take such circumstances into account.

The argument for the Municipality in substance is that, for practical purposes, an assessing body will consider the style of living of the assessee within the Municipality which they control, on the theory that a man's means can ordinarily be fairly and reasonably computed upon a consideration of his mode of life. It is manifest that this is an unsound basis for assessment, and if the claim of a Municipality to make assessment on these grounds were upheld, we should have to omit the words "within the Municipality" from clause (a). The Municipality has argued in effect that clause (a) has the same effect as if it had a right to impose a tax upon persons occupying holdings within the Municipality according to their circumstances and property, irrespective of the place where these circumstances and property might exist. A similar contention was put forward in the case of Chairman of Giridih Municipality v.

RAJENDRA KISHORE S. KAMAKHYA NARAIN SINGH.

Srish Ohandra Morumdar (1). There the question arose whether the resident was to be taxed on what he got or on what he spent in the Municipality. It was held that the measure of his liability was what he got and not what he spent within the Municipality. In that case, the contention was put forward that the tax should be determined on what he spent in the Municipality for the purpose of reduction of the assessment. In the present case, the same test has been applied by the Municipality to increase the amount of the assessment, because here the appellant spends more within the Municipality than what his property and circumstances within the Municipality are worth. The decision in Chairman of Giridih Municipality v. Srish Chandra Morumdar (1) accepted as correct the rule laid down in Rameshwar Pershad v. Chairman of the Bhabua Municipality (2), namely, that an assessment of tax under clause (a) of section 85 of the Bengal Municipal Act made in consideration of the assessee's "circumstances and property" (altogether or partly) outside the local limits of the Municipality is ultra vires and illegal. This Court was again invited to consider the same point in the case of Deb Narain Datta v. Chairman of the Baraipure Municipality (3), where Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., pointed out that the word "circumstances" in section 85 is equivalent to "means" and that the assessment under that section must be made according to the "means and property" within the Municipality; in other words, that for the purpose of assessment the means and property outside the Municipality cannot be taken into account. This principle has subsequently been applied in the case of Chairman of the Rajpur Municipality v. Nogendra Nath Bagchi (4). We are clearly of opinion that the construction which has been uniformly placed upon section 85 (a) during the last twenty years cannot be successfully questioned. That interpretation is that, for the purpose of assessment, the Municipality cannot take into account the "circumstances and property" of the assessee outside the Municipality, but must restrict itself to the "circumstances and property," that is, the "means and property" within the Municipality, and, further, that to measure the means and property within the Municipality, the test is, not what is spent, but what is earned within the Municipality.

On behalf of the respondent Municipality, the contention has been finally put forward that this interpretation, (which it is not disputed is the well recognized construction) is likely to embarrass it in its work. That is plainly a matter which the Court cannot take into consideration, where statutory provisions have to be construed. It is clearly a question of policy for the Legislature to consider, whether the tax should be based upon circumstances and property of the individuals concerned, irrespective of the place where such circumstances and property exist, or whether, in the process of assessment, only such portion of the circumstances and property should be taken into account as lie within the Municipality. The plain language of the Statute leave no room for argument as to what the Legislature intended.

The result is, that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. This order will carry costs both here and before the District Judge.

The same order will be made in the other two appeals which are accordingly decreed with costs.

123, applicability of—Patna High Court, rules of, whether ultra vires—Appeal dismissed in default—Order, whether appealable to Privy Council.

The provisions of sections 122 and 123 of the Civil Procedure Code have no application to the Patna High Court, and the fact that the rules made by the High Court were not submitted to any Rule Committee and that no Rule Committee is in existence in Patna would not make those rules ultra vires. An order dismissing an appeal in default of the appellant's compliance with the rules of the Court as to the composition of the paper-book in the case is not appealable to the Privy Council. [p. 286, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, O. J.—In this case an application is made for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from an order dated the 4th February 1920 dismissing the applicant's appeal in this Court for default in furnishing his list of papers to be printed in the paper-book. According to the Rules of this High Court the appellant preferring the appeal is required to prepare and deliver a list of the papers to be inserted in the paper-book to the Deputy Registrar, and by rule 8 of Chapter IX of the High Court Rules it is laid down that he shall within 30 days after service of the notice required by rule 6 deliver to the Deputy Registrar a list prepared in accordance with the previous rules. In the present case the appellant filed his memorandum of appeal on the 11th July 1919. Subsequently, he was notified under rule 6 requiring him to prepare a list of the papers. The exact date upon which that notice was issued does not appear, but on the 6th January 1920 the appellant appears to have been in default and on that day he was given until the 20th January, for filing his list upon an application to the Registrar. On the 22nd January, not having filed his list, a further application to the Registrar was made and he was given further time until the 2nd February. The order then, made was:—

"If not filed then, place before the Bench."

On the 4th February, the appellant was still in default with the preparation of his list and on that day the case came before the Bench for orders, and, as there was no explanation why the list was not ready, and as it appeared from the order-sheet that the appellant had been in default on a previous occasion in paying his Court-fees, the Court, considering that he was already a month overdue and had not yet started to prepare his list, dismissed his appeal for default, and the Court, as appears from their order, took into consideration the previous history of the case.

From that order dismissing the appellant's appeal he wishes now to prefer an appeal to His Majesty in Council and has filed the present petition asking for a certificate that the appeal complies with the provisions of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code. He contends, in the first instance, that the appeal involving a sum of over Rs. 10,000 ought to be admitted and that, notwithstanding that the order or decree from which he appeals is one affirming the decision of the Court below there is a substantial question of law to be decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council. For that purpose he relies upon the questions of law which had to be determined in the Court of first instance, questions which arise upon the merit of the case. It is quite obvious that, so far as the present appeal is concerned, no question of the merits of the case at all can arise until the Privy Council has set aside the order which was passed on the 4th February 1920 and, so far as this appeal is concerned, the only question which can go for determination to the Privy Council is the question of whether or not we were justified on that occasion in passing the order which we did dismissing the appeal for default. It is, therefore, in my opinion, idle for the appellant to contend that there is some question of law arising on the merits of the case. Those merits do not become the subject of appeal to His Majesty in Council. The only question is, as I have already said, which will have to be determined is the question whether or not our order was justified in the circumstances.

But the appellant contends that, even if the view just expressed is right, there is a substantial question of law which arises upon the order already made. He contends that the whole of the rules of the High Court at Patna made in 1916 when the

RAJENDRA KISHORE V. KAMAKHYA NARAIN SINGH.

Court was constituted ultra vires because they contravene or, at least, do not comply with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. He has referred to sections 122 and 123 of the Civil Procedure Code and contends that the High Court at Patna at the time it was established was one of the Courts established under the Indian High Courts Act of 1861 mentioned in that section. The earlier section provides that such Courts as well as the Chief Courts of the Panjab and Lower Burma may from time to time, after previous publication, make rules regulating their own procedure and the procedure of the Civil Courts subject to their superintendence, and may by such rules annul, alter or add to all or any of the rules in the First Schedule. He then refers to section 123 which provides that:—

"A Committee, to be called the Rule Committee, shall be constituted at each of the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Allahabad, Lahore and Rangoon."

It then provides that each such Committee shall consist of certain persons. Then he relies upon section 124 which provides that:—

"Every Rule Committee shall make a report to the High Court established at the town at which it is constituted on any proposal to annul, alter or add to the rules in the First Schedule or to make new rules, and, before making any rules under section 122, the High Court shall take such report into consideration."

There is no direct proof before the Court from which we could decide that the provisions referred to in sections 122 to 124 have not been complied with, but I will assume, for the purposes of this case, that the rules made by the Patna High Court, when it was constituted in the year 1916, were not submitted to any Rule Committee and that no such Rule Committee as is contemplated in section 123 was in existence. But it is perfectly clear, looking both at section 122 and at section 123, that the High Courts contemplated there do not include the High Court at Patna. I doubt very much whether the section was intended to include any new Court which might be constituted even under the Act of 1861, but the High Court at Patna, in the first place, was not constituted under that Act and the necessity of forming Rule Committees is only enjoined under section 123 in the cases of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Allahabad, Lahore and Rangoon, and does not include Patna. Therefore, the Patna High Court cannot in any sense be said to come within the provisions of sections 122 and 123 and it is quite clear that section 124 which refers to the Rule Committees refers only to the Rule Committees constituted under section 123 and to no others. Therefore, in my opinion, these rules which have been relied upon have no application to the rules originally framed by the High Court at Patna. The power to make rules given to the High Court at Patna when it was constituted is set out in clause 29 of the Letters Patent which provides that:—

"And we do further ordain that it shall be lawful for the High Court of Judicature at Patna from time to time to make rules and orders for regulating the practice of the Court and for the purpose of adapting as far as possible the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, being an Act, No. V of 1908, passed by the Governor-General in Council, and the provisions of any law which has been made, or may be made, amending or altering the same, by competent legislative authority for India, to all proceedings in its testamentary, intestate and matrimonial jurisdiction, respectively."

That is the power under which the High Court at Patna originally made the rules which it follows up to the present day and it seems pretty clear that under the Civil Procedure Code cases such as arose when this High Court was constituted were actually in contemplation of the Legislature at that time, because we find in section 125 it is provided that High Courts other than the Courts specified in section 122 shall exercise the powers conferred by that section not in the manner provided in sections 123 and 124 but in such manner and subject to such conditions as the Governor-General in Council may determine. Then there follows a proviso that any such High Court may, after previous publication, make a rule extending within the local limits of its jurisdiction any rules which have been made by any other High Court. That section provides two things; first, that High Courts other than those mentioned in the preceding sections may exercise the powers mentioned in section 122 subject to such conditions as may be imposed by the Governor General in Council, and, further, that they may in any event by mere publication adopt the rules already in force in any other High Court, such rules having presumably been passed with proper sanction and, therefore, in the opinion of the Legislature, requiring no further sanction. What was done in the case of the Patna High Court appears quite clearly, I think, from the note at the beginning of the volume which contains the Patna High Court Rules. The note is to the following effect:—

"The following rules have been made by the Court under the powers in that behalf conferred upon it by Parliament, the Letters Patent, and the Acts of the Indian Legislature, and have received the sanction of the Governor-General in Council and of the Local Government where necessary," signed by the then Registrar of the High Court. Nothing has been shown nor even suggested that the note stated at the beginning of the book which I have just referred to does not accurately state the true condition of affairs and in any case we are bound to presume that these rules which have been acted upon since the constitution of this Court in 1915 have been properly passed and regularized until the contrary is shown. In these circumstances, it seems to me that there is no substantial question of law for determination by the Privy Council in the present case. The application must be rejected with costs.

RESPONDENT.

Interest Act (XXXII of 1839), s. 1—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 34—Unliquidated damages, suit for—Interest, pendente lite, whether can be claimed.

In a suit for the recovery of money representing the depreciation in the value of goods supplied interest cannot be claimed during the pendency of the suit as the amount claimed is not a "debt" nor a "sum certain" within the meaning of section 1 of the Interest Act, but is unliquidated damages, and interest does not run on such damages. [p. 293, col. 2.]

Appeal against the following decision of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri, dated the 20th August 1919:—

CHAUDHURI, J.—The plaintiff is an importer of printed goods. He did business originally with Vasey & Co., of Manchester. That business continued for two years 1905 to 1908 when it was taken up by the Valley Weaving Co. and then by Crewdson & Co., in 1910. The terms of business are set out in the 4th paragraph of the plaint, said to have been "partly expressed" in correspondence and "partly implied." The claim in this suit arises upon clause (d) which runs as follows:—"Should cut and otherwise faulty pieces be found in the cases received, the plaintiff firm should examine one or more of the said cases as the plaintiff firm should think proper in order to arrive at an average of the proportion of faulty pieces in the said cases and on the basis of the said average, claim the usual allowance of 33 1/3rd per cent." The plaintiff made a complaint about the faulty pieces in November 1912 in respect of goods received between September 1911 and February 1912, and it is said that the defendant firm paid that claim. This suit relates to faulty pieces said to have been received from February 1912 to 1914 in respect of goods invoiced as perfect. It is said that the plaintiff made a complaint in respect of these goods, but the defendant firm did not pay any attention to it and eventually Mr. Blair, an agent of the defendant firm, came out to India in 1914 when he asked Kerr Tarruck & Co. of Calcutta to examine the goods and make a final survey and report; that such survey was held on the 17th March 1914 and it is said that a report was made by that firm that there was an average of 40 per cent. of unduly faulty pieces. The plaintiff claims upon the basis of that report the sum of Rs. 31,047 8 0 and, alternatively, that the said amount is fair and reasonable compensation for "the damages and faults" in the goods. There was also a claim for Rs. 4,098-4 as customary interest.

The defendant firm pleads limitation and submits that section 13 of the Limitation Act does not apply as the defendants have never carried on business in British India. The defendants deny the terms of business as alleged in the plaint and state that they are contained in the correspondence between the parties and that no terms were implied. They do not, however, set out the terms. It is admitted that business transactions with the plaintiff commenced in 1910 and they state that the last shipment of goods was made in September 1913 which is also an admitted fact. It is further admitted that Mr. Blair came to Calcutta in March 1914 and he was shown some Saris upon which he informed the plaintiff that Kerr Tarruck & Co., would be instructed to examine a full case and make their report to the defendant firm, but Mr. Blair did not acknowledge that the plaintiff firm's claim was justified nor did he promise payment. They deny liability for damages or interest and say that many of the plaintiff's claims were adjusted by awards made by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and they claim Rs. 950 3 as due to them upon such awards.

Two matters may be disposed of at once; (1) the plaintiff admits liability to the defendants to the extent of Rs. 980-3 0. (2) As regards the question of interest, it was claimed in the plaint as customary, but it was claimed at one stage of the hearing on the basis of a notice. Plaintiff's Counsel, however, did not press this claim and it has, therefore, been treated as abandoned.

The main point for consideration is, what was the term of business between the parties in respect of faulty pieces. The plaintiff undoubtedly made a claim at the end of November 1912 and the matter awaited the arrival of Mr. Blair. Blair came to Calcutta and examined some of the goods and then he asked Kerr Tarruck & Co., to examine them and make a report. It is unfortunate that the evidence of Blair is not available. He died on the 10th August 1918, but it is to be noticed that, although the suit was instituted in June 1916, no steps were taken for his examination. The only oral evidence before me is that of the plaintiff on one side, and on the other side of Mr. N. Sarkar of Kerr Tarruck & Co., and of Kishori Chand Mitra, a clerk of that firm. The plaintiff's version is as follows: that Blair, when he came to Calcutta, asked the plaintiff to open one case said that he would examine it and settle the rates for the disputed cases; that Blair was thereupon taken to the plaintiff's godown and one case was opened which he selected. At that time there were over 90 cases in stock. Blair is said to have examined two packages from the case he had selected about 40 or 50 pieces, and that some cut pieces were found amongst them. He said he had no time to examine the entire contents of the case and would send Kerr Tarruck's man to examine the goods. He put down on paper the result of his examination; this was on the 19th February 1914. There was some discussion. The plaintiff wrote out what had happened, but Blair wrote "No" across it and below that the result of his examination (Exhibit E). He said there were small holes and hook marks and nail marks, but the plaintiff said that they were big cuts. The plaintiff says that Kerr Tarruck's man afterwards came and examined one case. It was a fresh case; all the 400 pieces were examined and a report was made by him (Exhibit F). It was written out by one of the plaintiff's men and Kerr Tarruck's man signed it. That man had taken notes in pencil and the plaintiff's man wrote the report at his dictation. Out of the 400 pieces examined, 160 were found defective. Thus, 40 per cent. of the goods were found faulty and an allowance of  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent. is based upon it. The plaintiff says he submitted his bill on the 28th May 1914. Mr. Sarkar says that he was asked by Blair to send a man to plaintiff's godown to take measurements of cut pieces out of a case in stock. He said he sent a man who had no experience of survey and arbitration. The clerk, Kishorichand, says that he made a report after opening an original case. He, however, said that the case was picked out by the plaintiff, which I am not prepared to accept, and how it was an original case that he examined. There is no evidence except that of the plaintiff that it was agreed by Blair that such examination was to be the basis of calculation for damages in respect of all the goods as claimed by the plaintiff. It is, therefore, necessary to refer to the correspondence on this point. The case as regards the terms also depends upon the correspondence, an enormous quantity of which has been put in. It was due to that fact that I had to reserve any judgment. Unfortunately, other work intervened and I was not able, much to my regret, to take up this matter earlier, but inasmuch as there is very little oral evidence mostly of an ex parte character and the consideration of the case mainly depends upon the correspondence, I do not think the parties have been prejudiced by such delay.

As regards the allowance, I find as follows from the correspondence. There is a letter from the defendant firm signed by Blair, dated 21st July 1910 in which they say that in respect of cut pieces that the plaintiff had agreed to take them at a discount of Rs. 50 per cent. That term was eventually altered. On the 8th September they said that they did not think that they could possibly manage to allow more than 25 per cent. on seconds and cut pieces. The plaintiff replied that no one could accept cuts and jobs at less than one-third off the value of fresh goods, and they were prepared to accept that discount. The defendant firm wrote on the 20th October that they were not prepared to raise it beyond 25 per cent. allowance. On the 10th November 1910 the plaintiff said that the defendants must allow 33 1/3 per cent. for cuts and jobs, which they asserted was the universal rule of that business. On the 1st December 1910 the defendant firm said "Cuts and jobs—When we see the new printer's work and the number of cuts we may be able to manage to allow you 33 1/2 per cent." On the 22nd December 1910 the plaintiff insisted upon 33 1/2 per cent. allowance as the custom in the market. On the 20th April 1911 the plaintiff said "Re cuts and jobs; as was settled sometime ago, we hope there will not be any further misunderstanding to shipping the cuts and jobs to us and allowing us the 33 1/2 per cent. allowance." On the 27th April the plaintiff gave packing instructions about cuts and jobs. The reason for the request was that such process might be adopted as would simplify the division of cuts and jobs amongst the dealers "according to their contract for fresh quantity." They asserted that the matter of allowance had already been settled at 33 1/2 per cent. They also said that directions were to be given to the packers not to pass a single piece of cuts and jobs "even those with the slightest defect" with the fresh goods as that was likely to lead to disputes with the dealers. In a letter, dated the 8th February 1912, the plaintiff complained about the packing and said that in future "faulties," short pieces and damaged goods were to be sent in separate cases and not with the "perfects." On the 8th February 1912 the defendants required survey of certain cases in respect of which complaints had been made. On the 30th May 1912 the plaintiff informed the defendants that they had received frequent complaints from their dealers under different heads. They were complaining that many damaged and cut pieces were coming out amongst the fresh goods with injuries specially at the borders. They said that they were sending by the mail a few pieces of such Series and said that 20 to 30 pieces on an average were coming out from every case. The defendant firm replied that their packers could not have been so grossly careless, but having regard to the complaints they said there was no way out of it but to have an unopened package surveyed. It appears that in respect of the complaint the plaintiff made on the 28th November 1912 about goods sent out between September 1911 and February 1912 it was met by a payment on the 27th November 1913. The present claim relates, as already stated, to faulty and damaged pieces received between February 1912 and 1914.

CREWDSON v. GANESH DAS HARI BUX.

On the 29th August 1912 the plaintiff sent a draft of the terms of business between themselves and the defendant firm. It contained a clause about reference to arbitration to the Bengal Chamber Commerce of disputes arising regarding quality, finish, colour and other matters. There is a further clause in it, that claims and disputes for quality, finish, shortage, damage, must be recognised up to four months after the goods have been landed. The defendant firm in their letter of 19th September 1912 did not agree to several of the items; they said that four months were much too long, they could only agree to 30 days, and said that they were enclosing two copies of a much fairer agreement, and requested them to keep one and sign the other and return it. They added that until the matter was finally settled further business would be impossible. The plaintiff replied on the 10th October and said that they required four months to put their complaints regarding quality, finish, etc., as they sold their goods here allowing 90 days godown due. The defendants replied on the 31st October agreeing to some of the terms and not accepting others. They repeated that four months were too long, but in order to meet the plaintiff they were prepared to allow two months only. They said that there were not many points that divided them and practically those that did divide them were already arranged by the Manchester and Bengal Chambers of Commerce; they said they were awaiting the plaintiff's views and would then forward him the agreement in duplicate for his signature. On the 21st November 1912 the plaintiff said that he found that most of the terms were in order with the exception of a few and that he was prepared to settle the matter about time if three months were fixed, but I find no acceptance by the defendant of that term. It is quite clear that up to this time the terms of business were not finally arranged. There is a letter on the 13th December 1912 and also on the 9th January 1913 which show that certain terms were still under discussion, although the parties treated some of the terms which had been accepted as terms of business settled; but those relate to matters other than those about outs. On the 23rd October 1913 the defendant firm said that they had overlooked sending a final copy of the terms of business with duplicate for the plaintiff's signature which they were then enclosing. On the 29th November the plaintiff acknowledged two copies of the terms and said that he was considering them. He repeated the same thing in his letter on the 20th November 1913. The terms of business were eventually not signed. There is a letter on the 28th November 1912 from the plaintiff about "Cuts and damages in the fresh." He says: "As per our advice in our letters of some time ultimo we have been able to inspect and find out most of the cases with short and have drawn up a list of them found amongst the fresh, showing also the amounts charged and the amounts to be allowed as allowance. We hope this will have your careful attention with the debit notes formerly sent and remit the amount at your early business." The debit note sent on that day had a column "less value 33.1.3 per cent." The defendants acknowledged receipt of that letter and debit note on the 19th December 1912 and said that as it was a large amount they were making enquiries into the matter and would report later. On the 17th July 1913 the defendants wrote that if the plaintiff's dealers were making complaints about quality they "would always like the matter to go to survey and whenever that happened they must have cuttings return to them certified by the arbitrators that they were the basis samples upon which they gave their award whether for quality, finish, colour, etc." The next letter about this matter is dated the 11th December 1913, in which the defendant firm said that they did not see that further correspondence would be of much use. They looked forward to an amicable settlement when their Mr. Blair reached Calcutta.

Blair arrived early in February 1914. He had interviews with the plaintiff and examined some of the goods on the 19th February 1914. The plaintiff in his letter, dated the 19th February 1914, to the defendant firm at Manchester said that Blair had examined 40 pieces out of which 10 pieces were found faulty. On the same date the plaintiff firm wrote a note for Blair's signature and acceptance, but Blair wrote "No" across it and wrote that he had found three pieces with holes not big ones but the others were cut, 10 pieces with hooking needle marks. The plaintiff said that he had made a mistake and Blair said that if a mistake was made it was one that could be easily remedied. He asserted that he had not made a mistake. On the 27th February the plaintiff wrote "Regarding our claim for the damaged pieces we have showed you one of the cases for your satisfaction and you admitted that our claim is quite justified and that we are to get the allowance. We expect to hear from you in settlement by return." Blair said in reply that he would see them again when he would open another case; he also wrote that it had been agreed between the parties that any disputes not amicably settled should be referred to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, and he claimed that right. Blair informed the plaintiff that Kerr Tarruck & Co., were going to send a man to see the case of saries and they would report to him in Manchester. On the 4th March he wrote that Kerr Tarruck's man would go on the 6th to examine a case of the saries which the plaintiff complained contained faulty pieces. He also made over a letter addressed to Kerr Tarruck's man to the effect that he should examine a case of red and yellow saries No. 311. "He will take the case number and will pass on to me the pieces faulty (that are not so marked)." "He may also let me know whether in his opinion there is anything to complain about, taking into consideration that no firm supplies absolutely perfect goods." This letter bears an endorsement on the back "Received these damaged pieces for inspection K. C. Mitra 7 3 14." On the 4th March the plaintiff asked Blair for the report of his previous inspection. Blair wrote on the back of that letter that his report would follow in due course after his man's inspection on Friday the 6th. He added that the 6 pieces were quite up to any body's standard for that style. On the 5th March he made a note of his examination in respect of the 60 pieces, that he found four pieces torn to the extent of 2 inches. He also noted tears in edges, hook marks, holes and other faults. He did not admit that all the above pieces were faulty, and said that many of them were a reasonable tender for that class of goods. Kerr Tarruck's man could not go on the 6th. On the 10th March 1914 the Bengal Chamber of Commerce informed the plaintiff that a dispute relating to certain other goods (O E 1969) had been referred to their arbitration but this matter was evidently not referred to them. On the 12th March the Manchester firm wrote hoping that the dispute had been arranged amicably. Inspection by Kerr Tarruck's man actually took place on the 14th March. The plaintiff wrote on the 17th March to Mr. Sarkar of that firm stating that Kiori Oband Mitra had called and inspected a full case of saries marked G 311, H 1147 containing 400 pieces and found out that 160 pieces in all were damaged, the length of the cuts varying from half an inch to 6 inches. There is a report by K. C. Mitra, dated 17th March. He said in it that he had examined one case, the case above mentioned. It confirmed the description given by the plaintiff. He added that some cuts were in the middle of the pieces and some on the borders. He said that as the plaintiff did not claim allowance for the pin holes he had not taken the measurements of those holes. He stated that he found 20 pieces badly stained. This report was sent to Manchester by Kerr Tarruck & Co., on the 18th March with a note that the man had found stains measuring from 3 to 5 feet in length, although they had understood from Blair that some of the pieces might have had stains merely 6 to 8 inches square. The plaintiff also sent a copy of the report of Kerr Tarruck's man to the defendant firm on the 18th March. In their letter, dated the 2nd April 1914, they said that Blair had arranged for a final survey to be held of the goods before his departure, and the report had been sent duly and that they expected the settlement instructions shortly, meaning payment, I believe. On the 30th April the plaintiff wrote about "Costs and damages": "We learn that you will deal with the matter within the next incoming mail." On the 14th May they complained about the defendants' silence and they said they expected to get their final decisions by the next incoming mail. On the 4th June they sent a detailed statement of their claim "in compliance with the terms of our market" and requested immediate payment. On the 18th June the plaintiff said that he had paid to his dealers the amount in the debit-note amounting to the present claim in suit "for the damaged goods as promised by you." On the 25th June the defendant firm wrote to the plaintiff that they were quite willing to settle the matter, but they considered the claim an extraordinary one. They offered 13s. 4d. per case without prejudice. They added that small hook holes of  $\frac{1}{2}$  inch, 1 inch,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  inches or 2 inches could not come under the  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent. rate for allowance, which only applied to big damages. If the plaintiff did not accept the offer he was to submit the goods to arbitration. The defendant wrote on the 9th July denying that they promised to pay £2,060.16.8 for damaged goods. There the matter rests so far as the correspondence is concerned. Out of the amount claimed, £1,754 are for goods supplied in 1912 and £315 for goods in 1913. The plaintiff at first said that there were 80 or 90 cases in stock in 1912 but looking into his books of April 1913 he said there were 23. The plaintiff asserts that Blair said to him that there was no question about the allowance and that he admitted it was  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent. of the price. On the date of inspection the plaintiff had 15 cases of series No. 311. The plaintiff has put his case that it was expressly agreed between him and Blair that the damages were to be paid at the above rate; but from the correspondence, it does not appear that the plaintiff asserted that there had been any such agreement. The plaintiff had said in one of the above letters that the defendant firm had promised to pay, which the defendants denied. It is quite clear that the dispute was intended to be amicably settled; that Blair himself examined some pieces and then he suggested that one case was to be opened and I think it may be fairly held that Blair intended that the settlement was to be arrived at by inspection of one case selected out of the lot then in stock and that was to be basis of the settlement. In that case 160 pieces were found faulty. From the report it appears that there were 76 pieces which had cuts ranging from  $\frac{1}{2}$  to 2 inches and that there were 14 pieces with cuts between 3 inches and 6 inches and there were 20 pieces badly stained. The defendants in their letter of the 25th June said that  $\frac{1}{2}$  inch, 1 inch,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  inches or 2 inches were small hook holes and could not come under  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent. rate for allowance. No evidence has been given on behalf of the defendants that such hook holes are not taken into account. It is difficult to believe that goods with 1 inch,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  inches, or 2 inches cuts can be looked upon as hook holes. That letter is relied upon by the plaintiff as showing that the allowance of  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent. for damaged goods is not disputed. When the defendant firm asked for an arbitration I think it was then too late. The plaintiff had been told that amicable settlement would be arrived at upon the basis of the examination by Blair. I do not think he could be asked to keep the goods unsold indefinitely. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, the plaintiff was justified in thinking that the matter would be settled on the basis of the examination by Kerr Tarruck & Co.'s man. It was the fault of the defendant firm that they had not appointed a better man if Kerr Tarruck's partner's statement that he was not qualified as a surveyor or arbitrator is accepted; but there was no question of survey or arbitration. His report was to be on a selected original package. What he found in it, was to be the basis upon which the allowance was to be calculated. He undoubtedly was qualified for such work. Although I am not prepared to hold that there was an express agreement for  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent. arrived at the interview between Blair and the plaintiff having regard to the statement of the plaintiff that it is the customary rate and there being no express denial by the defendant firm that is not an allowable rate in respect of cuts and damages. I think the plaintiff is justified in asking for  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent. The only point that the defendants left open in their letter was about cuts up to 2 inches. "I think having regard to that dispute it would be just to allow the plaintiff three fourths of the amount claimed. There were 35 pieces in that package with cuts up to 1 inch. I think that cuts above one inch ought to be taken into account. I find there was no term agreed upon as regards the period within which complaints were to be made. There is everything to show that complaints were made within reasonable time but the settlement was unreasonably postponed. I do not think that the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation. Section 13, Limitation Act, I hold, applies to this case. "Absent from British India" does not necessarily imply previous presence here. The provision of the English Statute has been held to apply to absence from the United Kingdom of a defendant who has never been there. Halsbury, Volume XIX, p. 56. See also Atul Kristo Bose v. Lyon & Co. (1), Rampartab Samrathrai v. Foelibai (2), Poorno Ohunder Ghose v. Sassoon (3). I allow the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 23,285.10-0 less Rs. 980.3-0, that is to say, for Rs. 22,305 7-0 with interest at 6 per cent. from date of suit, namely, 6th June 1916. I allow the plaintiff costs on Scale No. 2.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri in a suit for recovery of money representing the depreciation in the value of goods supplied by them to the plaintiffs in a damaged condition. The plaintiffs carry on business as a firm importing printed saries and selling them to dealers. The defendants are a firm in London carrying on business as exporters of printed saries. There have been transactions between the firms since 1910, and, according to the plaintiffs, one of the terms and conditions of business was as follows:—

"Should cut and otherwise faulty pieces be found in the cases received, the plaintiff firm should examine one or more of the said cases as the plaintiff firm should think proper in order to arrive at an average of the proportion of faulty pieces in the said cases and on the basis of the said average, claim the usual allowance of 33½ per cent."

(2) 20 B. 767 at p. 776; 10 Ind. Deco. (N. S.) 1082.

(3) 25 C. 496 (F. B.); 2 C. W. N. 269; 13 Ind. Deco. (N. S.) 329.

The plaintiffs further assert that on the basis of the survey of a sample case made on the 17th March 1914 by Kerr Tarruck & Co., with the concurrence of both parties. The proportion of faulty pieces was determined as 40 per cent. The plaintiffs accordingly claimed Rs. 31,047.8 0 as from the defendants as due on faulty pieces invoiced in 1912, 1913 and 1914 as perfect goods. The plaintiffs further claimed a sum of Rs. 4,098.4 as customary interest on this amount from the 17th March 1914 to the 29th May 1916. The defendants repudiated the claim as largely exaggerated and denied liability for interest. Mr. Justice Chaudhuri has found in favour of the plaintiffs that the proportion of damaged goods should, on the basis of the survey by Kerr Tarruck & Co., be taken at 40 per cent. but he has come to the conclusion that as the cuts were of various lengths the depreciation should be allowed at the rate of, not one-third, but three-fourths of one-third, that is, one-fourth. Mr. Justice Chaudhuri has in substance held that the proportion of faulty goods should be taken to be two-fifths and the depreciation in value thereof should be taken at one-fourth. On this basis, he has allowed the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 23,285.10-0 less Rs. 980.3-0 (covered by previous awards), that is to say, a net amount of Rs. 22,305.7 0. The claim for interest antecedent to the suit was abandoned in the Court below but interest has been allowed on the sum decreed from the date of commencement of the suit. The plaintiffs have also been awarded costs. Both parties were dissatisfied with this decree. The defendants have appealed and have contended, first, that the plaintiffs have not proved that 40 per cent. of the goods were damaged, secondly, that as, according to the learned Judge, the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the value of the damaged goods was depreciated by one third, he should not have arbitrarily assessed the depreciation at one-fourth; and, thirdly, that no interest should have been allowed before date of decree. The plaintiffs have preferred cross-objections and have contended that the depreciation in value of the damaged goods should have been assessed at one third and that the evidence does not justify a reduction to one-fourth, which is not the case of either of the parties. We are of opinion that the appeal must succeed in part and the cross-objections must also be allowed.

In the appeal we have to consider two elements, each essential for calculation of the sum recoverable by the plaintiffs from the defendants on account of the damaged condition of the goods supplied. The evidence conclusively proves that an appreciable proportion of the goods invoiced as perfect were in fact damaged; indeed, this conclusion of the Court below has not been seriously contested here. Consequently, we have to determine in the proportion of the damaged goods and the depreciation in value on account of their damaged condition. Theoretically, the ideal method would be, if the goods were still unsold and available for inspection, to examine each piece and to determine its depreciation in value. But even if the goods were available, such a procedure would be manifestly impracticable from the point of view of transaction of mercantile business. The plaintiff stated in his deposition that when allowance for damaged goods is fixed each case is not examined, because if that were attempted, it would not only be very difficult to find room for the pieces taken out but also to fold them again; they could not plainly be sold as fresh goods, because the finish would inevitably get spoiled. It is obvious that, in these circumstances, recourse must be had to some method of averages. The question is, did the parties in the present case agree upon such a method. The correspondence between the parties, which is summarised in the judgment of Mr. Justice Chandhuri, shows that the parties did not reach an agreement on this matter before 1914. In February 1914, Mr. Blair came to Calcutta as the representative of the defendant firm. He opened one case of goods on the 19th February 1914 and examined two parcels. The parties were not, however, agreed as to the inference to be drawn from this partial examination of a single case. Mr. Blair then arranged for the examination of another case by Kerr Tarruck & Co. An officer of Kerr Tarruck and Co. actually inspected a case taken at random on the 14th March. The result of the inspection was that one hundred and sixty pieces out of four hundred were found damaged; the length of the cuts varied from half an inch to six inches, and while some of the cuts were in the borders, others were in the middle of the pieces. The report of this inspection, dated the 17th March 1914, further shows that 20 pieces had defective colours, that is, were badly stained. The forwarding letter of Kerr Tarruck & Co. states that although, according to Mr. Blair, some of the pieces had stains 6 to 8 inches square, the stains actually found measured 3 to 5 feet in length. This report and the forwarding letter were sent to Manchester for information of the defendant firm. We are of opinion that the parties intended that the proportion of the damaged goods should be determined on the result of this inspection. The parties had carried on an inconclusive correspondence on the subject for many months; the representative of the defendants came to Calcutta for the purpose, amongst others, of settling the matter. He himself made a partial inspection of one case and then requested a well-known firm in the trade to make an inspection of another full case. If Mr. Blair had intended that the result of this inspection should not be accepted as the basis for calculation, he might easily have arranged for inspection of some more cases. The result of the inspection was communicated to the defendants; they did not suggest that the case opened could not be deemed a fair sample and they did not ask for examination of other cases. The present suit was instituted on the 6th June 1916, and the defendants made no attempt to examine Mr. Blair on commission, till the 1st July 1918. The application was adjourned and Mr. Blair died on the 10th August 1918. It is worthy of note that the application was not proceeded with, though it included the names of other members of the defendant firm as possible witnesses. In these circumstances, we hold that Mr. Justice Chandhuri has correctly found that the proportion of damaged goods must be taken at 40 per cent. on the basis of the survey made by Kerr Tarruck & Co. with the concurrence of both parties.

Next comes the question of the extent of the depreciation due to the damaged condition of the goods. Here, the application of the principle of averages is still more imperative from practical considerations, than it is for the purpose of ascertaining the proportion of damaged goods. The depreciation depends, not merely upon the size, but also upon the location of the cuts, while the depreciation due to stains must vary with size, location and colour of the spots. In such circumstances, an almost infinite variety and gradation is possible, and a classification is well nigh impracticable. The plaintiffs assert that the usual allowance for depreciation is one-third. The defendants only generally deny the terms alleged by the plaintiffs but do not specifically contradict the statement; they do not allege an alternative rate or rates. On the other hand, the plaintiff asserted on oath that other European firms, for instance, Ralli, Graham, Finlay Muir gave allowances on the basis of one third for damaged and cut pieces; it is significant that no attempt was made to cross-examine the plaintiff on this point. It is further worthy of note that when "cuts and jobs," are separately supplied, a reduction of one third is allowed on the price for perfect goods; the inference may, therefore, be reasonably drawn that the same rate would be allowed when these are mixed with and invoiced as perfect goods. There is also some evidence to show that previous claims by the plaintiffs, though for small amounts, were paid by the defendants at the same rate. Finally, the correspondence between the parties shows that the plaintiffs have consistently adhered throughout to the statement that the reduction in value is calculated at one-third. In their letter, dated 25th June 1914, the defendants practically admit that this is the rate, but allege that this rate is not applicable to cuts not exceeding two inches; they do not, however, state what, if any, special rate is applicable in such cases. We hold accordingly that the plaintiffs have established that the reduction in the value of damaged goods must be calculated at one-third and we are unable to uphold the conclusion of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri that the rate is one-fourth, which is not supported by any evidence on the record.

The only other point which requires consideration is, whether the plaintiffs should have been allowed interest during the pendency of the suit. It is plain that such interest cannot be claimed under section 1 of the Interest Act, 1839, as the sum due is neither a "debt" nor a "sum certain" within the meaning of that section. The only statutory provision which authorises the Court to allow interest, in its discretion, in such a case is that contained in section 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. That section contemplates interest in three stages, namely, (1) interest prior to the institution of the suit on the principal sum adjudged, as distinguished from the principal sum claimed; (2) additional interest on the principal sum adjudged, from the date of the suit to the date of the decree, at such rate as the Court deems reasonable; and (3) further interest on the aggregate sum adjudged, from the date of the decree to the date of realisation or to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit. The section does not provide for payment of interest for period antecedent to the suit but it empowers the Court when the decree is for the payment of money, to allow interest pendente lite as also interest subsequent to decree. We are not called upon to consider whether the plaintiffs can claim interest prior to the institution of this suit, because though such interest was claimed in the lower Court as "customary interest," the claim was abandoned at the trial. We have only to consider, whether interest pendente lite should have been allowed. We are of opinion that interest during the pendency of the litigation should not have been decreed. The sum recoverable by the plaintiffs is not a debt but unliquidated damages, and, as Westropp, C. J., observed in Fram i Hormasji v. Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of Customs, Salt and Opium (4), interest does not run upon unliquidated damages. The same view was adopted in Rutneshur Biswas v. Hurish Ohundur Bose (5). We do not see why, in point of principle, a distinction should in this respect be made between interest prior to suit and interest pendente lite; interest prior to suit was clearly not recoverable for reasons stated in Subramania Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar (6), Boddu Sanyasiraju v. Kotra Ramamurthi (7), though the point was apparently overlooked in Mahamad Ravuther v. British India Steam Navigation Company Limited (8) We may add that interest pendente lite is not claimed as damages for wrongful detention of money which the defendants had profitably invested [see the observation of Lord Maugham in Johnson v. Reg. (9)]. We cannot also overlook the fact that there was a substantial dispute between the parties as to the basis for assessment of damages, and the litigation itself lasted for more than two years in the Court of first instance. In view of all these circumstances, we must hold that the Court should not allow the plaintiff's interest pendente lite.

We may add, finally, that the plea of limitation which was overruled in the Court below, was not even mentioned in the course of argument, though it was taken in one of the grounds of appeal.

The result is that the appeal is allowed in part and the cross-objection also is allowed. The decree of the Court below will be varied in two respects, namely, first, the sum due to the plaintiffs will be calculated on the basis that the depreciation in value of the goods delivered was one-third and not one-fourth; and secondly, interest will be allowed, not from date of suit, but only from date of judgment of the Court below, that is, the 20th August 1919. Subject to these variations, the decree will stand confirmed. As the victory has been a divided one, each party will bear his own costs of this appeal.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Mozaffarpore, dated the 19th December 1918, affirming that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Mozaffarpore, dated the 21st June 1917.

Messrs. S. C. Mitter and S. K. Mitter,

Mr. L. N. Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I am unable to agree with the decisions of the Courts below. I will assume that the factory, the lessee, covenanted to pay a portion of the rent due to the plaintiffs to the mortgagees of the plaintiffs. I will also assume—though I must not be understood as deciding the point—that the covenant was a covenant touching or concerning the thing demised and as such bound the appellants as the assignees of the interest of the factory. But it is well settled that no action of covenant will lie against the assignee of the lessee, except for breaches of covenant happening, while he is assignee." (See the cases cited in Smith's Leading Cases, Volume 1, page 73) It is conceded that the present suit was instituted for breaches of covenant that happened before the interest of the factory was purchased by the appellants.

If the action on the covenant will not lie against the appellants, I do not see under what other principle the liability that was of the factory could be fastened on the appellants. The plaintiffs as the lessors were, of course, entitled to proceed against the subject matter of the demise for their rent into whosoever's hand that subject-matter might happen to be; but such an action would be an action for rent, not an action on the covenant. Even if we were at liberty to change the action into an action for rent, it will not help the plaintiffs, because it is conceded that the claim for rent in respect of the period for which the action has been brought is barred by limitation.

The basis of the decisions of the Courts below is this: the factory was bound to pay the rent to the mortgagees and the appellants, as the purchasers of the interest of the factory, were likewise bound to pay the rent to the mortgagees. I assent to the first proposition, but I altogether deny the correctness of the second proposition. In my view, the appellants would be bound to pay the rent to the mortgagees only if the covenant on the part of the factory was a covenant running with the land and then only in respect of the period subsequent to their purchase. They, no doubt, remained liable for the rent in the sense that the plaintiffs could proceed against the thing demised for the recovery of the rent, but that liability was to the plaintiffs and not to the mortgagees. In my judgment, the defendants were not bound to pay to the mortgagees the rent in respect of the period claimed in the action, and the plaintiffs are not entitled to be reimbursed by the defendants. I would allow this appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of the Courts below, and dismiss the action with costs throughout.

Inasmuch as the possession of one co-owner is rightful and does not imply hostility, as would the possession of a stranger, the entry and possession of land under the common title of one co-owner does not give rise to the presumption that such possession is adverse possession to the other co-owners. Ordinarily, the possession of one co-owner is for the benefit of all co-owners. [p. 300, cols. 1 & 2.]

The question of adverse possession is a mixed question of law and fact, and although a Court of second appeal is bound to accept as conclusive a finding on a question of fact, yet where the question is whether from the facts found an inference can fairly be drawn that possession is adverse, it is a question of law, which that Court is entitled to investigate. [p. 301, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jessore, dated the 22nd of August 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court, at Narail, dated the 31st of July 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen and Hemendra Chandra Sen, for the Appellants.—Plaintiffs are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title. The first Court decreed the suit. On appeal it was dismissed on the ground that there was adverse possession. Having regard to the decision in Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (1), I submit the decision is not correct. There are findings to this effect that my vendor purchased it from Jharu and Baikuntha who are admittedly two third sharers. The question is whether their title has been extinguished by adverse possession. See Lokenath Singh v. Dhakeswar Prosad Narayan Singh (2) and Jatindra Nath Roy v. Sabidanessa Bhatun [Narendra Bhusan Roy v. Jogendra Nath Roy] (3). That ruling has been followed in Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (1). There is no indication whether the mere fact of exclusive possession by one co-sharer will amount to adverse possession. In order to extinguish the title, I submit, there must be assertion of hostile title by other co-sharers. These are the principles. The lower Appellate Court has not gone into that question. The first Court decides in my favour. The principal question is whether possession by co-sharer will amount to adverse possession. The lower Appellate Court, no doubt, finds against me, but he has not considered the main point, namely, the sole possession of the iama.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Ohoudhuri and Mukunda Behari Mullick, for the Respondents.—The question here is whether the title of Baikuntha and others ever ceased to subsist by adverse possession. It depends upon other circumstances. They were not here for fifty years; other two brothers were in possession. No rent was paid by them. The two brothers who were in possession paid rent. They conveyed a portion of the land to strangers. Mere long possession will not amount to ouster. There are other circumstances. Here the brothers in possession conveyed a portion of it by registered documents at any rate, from 1870, the possession would be adverse. This is the finding. The Court of Appeal below came to the conclusion that the possession was adverse. Since 1876 Harachand dealt with the property as his own. Is not that finding sufficient? No express notice is necessary. Your Lordships' decisions are to the effect that only notorious acts are sufficient. From 1876 to 1901 I go on selling properties as my own. Is that not sufficient to show that the possession is adverse? In the kabuliyat the whole of the property is described as his own; then he sells a portion of it. One of the brothers, Gargadhar, inherited his share. The decision in Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (1) is based on joint possession. See Ayennessa Bibi v. Sheikh Isuf (4). Mere non-participation will not do. The lower Appellate Court, taking all the circumstances into consideration, has come to the proper finding that there was adverse possession. In Lokenath Singh v. Dhwaakeshwar Prosad Narayan Singh (2). Your Lordships laid down the principle which has been the guidance of the lower Appellate Court. No open notice is necessary. Registered conveyance is not an open act. The Subordinate Judge does not rely upon their non possession for fifty years but says that they left the place for good. There are several kobalas, they show how Harachand dealt with the property as his own since 1284 corresponding to 1876. There are the circumstances upon which the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion. Your Lordships have laid down that adverse possession is a mixed question of law and fact. That is true. The findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court, I submit, are correct.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title. The land belonged to one Bhagirath Majhi, who left four sons, Gangadhar, Baikuntha, Lakhan and Jharu, Baikuntha and Jharu left the ancestral home and went to reside in a different village. The plaintiffs claim title by purchase from the representatives of Baikuntha and Jharu. The defendants claim title by purchase from the representatives of the other two brothers. The substantial question in controversy between the parties is, whether the title of Baikuntha and Jharu was extinguished by adverse possession on behalf of their brothers. The Court of first instance found that adverse possession had not been established, and decreed the suit. The Subordinate Judge has taken a different view, and has dismissed the suit. The Subordinate Judge has found that Baikuntha and Jharu removed to another village; that the predecessors-in interest of the plaintiffs were not in possession for 50 years; that during this period the property was possessed by the co-owners; that the predecessors-in-interest of the defendants have alone paid rent to the superior landlord, and have dealt with the property as their own since at least 1278. The appellants have contended that, assuming that these facts have been correctly found, they do not show that the title of the predecessor of the plaintiffs was extinguished by adverse possession on the part of their co-owners.

It is plain from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that he has not kept in view the principles applicable to cases of this character, which must now be deemed to be well settled and beyond controversy. The question has been considered by the Judicial Committee in three recent cases, namely, Corea v. Appuhamy (5), Muttunayagam v. Brito (6) and Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh (5) (1912) A. C. 230 at p. 236; 81 L. J. P. C. 151; 105 L. T. 836.

(6) (1918) A. C. 165; 87 L. J. P. C. 146.

BALARAM GURIA v. SYAMA CHARAN MONDAL.

Singh (1). In the first of these cases, Corea v. Appuhamy (5), Lord Maugham cited with approval the dictum of Vice-Chancellor Page Wood in Thomas v. Thomas (7), namely, that possession is never considered adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title, and held that possession of one co-parcener could not be held prima facie as adverse to other co-parceners. Lord Maugham, however, added that in former times, before the Statute of William IV when the justice of the case seemed to require it, Juries were sometimes directed that they might presume an ouster. This is borne out by the judgment of Lord Denman, C. J., in Culley v. Doe d. Tylerson (8) where we find the following observations:— "Generally speaking, one tenant-in-common cannot maintain an ejectment against another tenant-in-common, because the possession of one tenant-in-common is the possession of the other, and, to enable the party complaining to maintain an ejectment, there must be an ouster of the party complaining. But, where the claimant, tenant-in-common, has not been in the participation of the rents and profits for a considerable length of time and other circumstances concur, the Judge will direct the Jury to take into consideration whether they will presume that there has been an ouster; as to which see the cases of Doe d. Fisher v. Prosser (9), Doe d. Hellings v. Bird (10) and Doe d. White v. Off (11)." The same view was taken by Lord Denman in Muttunayagam v. Brito (6) and by Lord Buckmaster in Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (1). Among the cases in this Court, reference may be made to the decisions in Jogendra Nath Roy v. Baladeo Das (12), Ayenussa Bibi v. Sheikh Isuf (4), Lokenath Singh v. Dhurakeshwar Prasad Narayan Singh (2) and Jotenra Nath Roy v. Sabidannessa Khatun [Narendra Bhusan Roy v. Jogendra Nath Roy] (3). In the words of the judgment in the first of these cases, the principle may be stated in the following terms. The fundamental rule is that the entry and possession of land under the common title of one co-owner, will not be presumed to be adverse to the others, but will ordinarily be held to be for the benefit of all. The obvious reason for this rule is that the possession of one co-owner is, in itself, rightful and does not imply hostility, as would the possession of a mere stranger. The law will never construe a possession tortious, unless from necessity; on the other hand, it will consider every possession lawful, the commencement and continuance of which is not proved to be wrongful; and this upon the plain principle, that every man shall be presumed to act in obedience to his duty until the contrary appears. In other words, the only difference between the possession of a co-owner and other cases is, that acts, which, if done by a stranger, would per se be a disseisin, are, in the case of tenancies-in-common, susceptible of explanation consistently with the real title; acts of ownership are not, in tenancies-in-common, acts of disseisin; it depends upon the intent with which they are done and their notoriety: the law will not presume that one tenant-in-common intends to oust another; the facts must be notorious and the intent must be established in proof.

Now, if we apply these principles to the case before us, what is the position? Stress is laid on the fact that the predecessors of the plaintiffs left the village fifty years ago, and that the property was thereafter in the occupation of their brothers. There is, however, nothing to indicate that their possession of the entire property was in its inception unlawful. On the other hand, the presumption is that the co-owners possessed the entire property in their character as co-owners as they were entitled to do, when the co-tenants were in another place. It is next urged that these co-owners who were in enjoyment of the entire profits alone, paid rent to the superior landlord. The obvious answer is that the rent to the superior landlord would have to be paid in any event, as otherwise the tenancy would be sold; and, it may be presumed that, when the entire rent was paid by the persons who took the whole profits, they only did what might be expected from them in the circumstances. It is then said that the absent co-tenants did not put forward any special claim when succession took place by reason of death in the family. But this is conduct which admits of an obvious explanation; the persons who were in possession as co-owners would be entitled to continue in possession as co-owners, notwithstanding the death of one or other of the co-tenants. Finally, it is contended that one of the co-owners has dealt with the land as his own since 1878. This statement is of a somewhat sweeping character. On examination, it appears that on the 18th March 1878 this co-owner transferred the entire lands or only a portion thereof (this is a point upon which the two parties are not here agreed) to his infant nephew. Whether this was a real transaction, or not, may be a matter of doubt; the Court of first instance was inclined to the view that this was a fictitious transaction. The infant, on attainment of age, on the 23rd December 1902, transferred the property to one Kunja Biewas (the second defendant), who, on the 23rd March 1908, transferred it to the first defendant, Shyama Charan Mondal. The Trial Court expressed the opinion that these frequent transfers were calculated to create considerable suspicion about the reality of possession of the successive transferees. The question thus arises, whether the conveyance of the 18th March 1878 can be treated as an act of ouster of the predecessor of the plaintiffs. We are not prepared to hold that the mere execution of the conveyance was an act of such notoriety as to impress on the predecessors of the plaintiffs that their co-sharers who lived in the village and occupied the joint property intended to set up a hostile title against them. In our opinion, it is impossible to hold, on the facts found, that the title of the predecessors of the plaintiffs was extinguished by adverse possession, on the part of their co-owners.

It has been contended on behalf of the respondents, as a last resort, that this a matter with which we are not competent to deal in second appeal. It is plain, however, from the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein (13) that the question of adverse possession which we have to determine is a mixed question of fact and law. In respect of the facts found by the lower Appellate Court, which is the final Court competent to deal with facts, we are bound to accept them as conclusive. But when we are called upon to consider whether, from the facts found, an inference can fairly be drawn that the possession was adverse, it is a question of law which we are entitled to investigate. The facts found need not be questioned; it is the soundness of the conclusion from them that is in question, and this is a matter of law [see also Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton (14), Satgur Prasad v. Raj Kishore Lal (15), Ishan Chunder v. Bishu Sirdar (16), Rajaram v. Ganesh Hari (17), Rajoh Makund Deb v. Gopi Nath Sahu (18), Maruti v. Banubai (19), Venkatesh v. Bhavanishankar (20), Rajaram Tuljaram v. Nanchand Tuljaram (21), Pandurang v. Anant (22), Ganapati Ambados v. Raghunath Anant (23).

The result is, that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all the Courts.

No. 1—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73—Money deposited in Court to credit of judgment-debtor—Subsequent attachment—Rateable distribution.

Where money is deposited in Court to the credit of a judgment-debtor before any decree-holder applies in execution to have it paid in satisfaction of his decree, it is liable to rateable distribution among decree-holders who apply for execution either before or after the receipt of the money by the Court. [p. 306, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, in Appeal Suit No. 85 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Sivaganga, in Original Suit No. 477 of 1916.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 27th February 1920, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit, and upon hearing the arguments of Messrs. K. Raja Aiyar and V. Ramanwami Aiyar, for the Appellants, and of Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Respondent, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 5th of March 1920, the Court (Sadasiva Aiyar and Spencer, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

SPENCER, J.—The question to be decided in this second appeal is, whether money deposited in Court to the credit of a judgment-debtor before any decree holder applies in execution to have it paid towards the satisfaction of his decree should be dealt with on a system of priority when several decree-holders afterwards come in and apply to have it attached or whether it should be rateably distributed among them.

In this case the money was deposited on January 7th 1909 by the judgment-debtor in Original Suit No. 207 of 1903 to the credit of his decree holder, Muthiah Chetty, and was about to lapse to Government on 15th February 1916, when the appellants attached it on December 23rd 1915 in execution of their decree in Original Suit No. 87 of 1913. The respondent (another decree holder) came in later on, February 25th, and obtained rateable distribution, notwithstanding the fact that the amount would have lapsed to Government by the date he filed his execution petition had it not been for the appellants' diligence. The present suit was brought to obtain a re-adjustment of the order for rateable distribution passed in execution.

On the point of law, as stated above, there is a considerable difference of opinion.

Section 73, Civil Procedure Code, does not in terms apply, because the money deposited is not strictly speaking "assets held" in the process of execution [Vide Sorabji Ooovarji v. Kala Raghunath (1)] and because the persons desirous of having it paid towards their decrees did not apply for execution before the money was received. [Vide Tiruchittambala Chetti v. Seshayangar (2).]

Order XXI, rule 52, Civil Procedure Code has been held by Bakewell, J., in Suikena Katum Sahiba v. Muhammad Abdul Aziz (3) to be the appropriate section of the Code for disposing of such a fund but in his opinion that section does not stand in the way of the Court making a rateable distribution disregarding the order in which attachments have been made, as attachment does not confer any right of priority. A similar view was taken by Sanderson, C. J., and Mookerjee, J., in Thakurdas Moti Lal v. Joseph Iskendar (4) on general principles of justice, equity and good conscience. On the other hand, in the latest reported case of this Court in Umma Venkatratnam & Co. v. Adamji Usman & Co. (5) Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, J.J., have laid down that in such cases the diligence of the first applicant should be rewarded by paying him in full before other decree-holders are allowed to take a share; and this decision has been followed since in an unreported case, Civil Revision Petition No. 1309 of 1917 by Bakewell, J.

Bakewell, J., in 38 Mad. [Suikena Katum Sahiba v. Muhammad Abdul Aziz (3)] followed the practice in administration suits which was fully discussed in Soobul Ohundur Law v. Russick Lall Mitter (6).

Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in his judgment in Umma Venkatratnam & Co. v. Adamji Usman & Co. (5), purports to follow the judgment of Wallis, C. J., in Tiruvangadial v. Thiruvangadih (7), but the head-note in that case does not properly represent what was decided.

Under these circumstances, I think that an authoritative decision is needed for the guidance of Courts which are hesitating whether under the compulsion of Act XVIII of 1875 to follow the opinion of a single Judge reported in the authorised reports, or to follow the judgment of a Bench which has not been so reported, when the single Judge who pronounced the former judgment has since subscribed to the decision of the Bench of two Judges who took a different view. I would, therefore, refer the question stated at the beginning of this reference to a Full Bench.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I agree that the question raised is an important one and as the answer is not free from difficulty, it should be referred to a Full Bench.

In the old section, the words were "are realized by sale or otherwise" and "prior to the realization". In the new section, the words are "are held" and "before the receipt of such assets." I do not think the change of language is very material. The moneys which were held not liable to be distributed under old section 295 because they were not realised by sale or otherwise but were voluntarily paid into Court seem also to be governed by section 73 [See Vibudapriya Tirthaswami v. Yusuf Sahib (8) for the old law] (moneys whether in the possession of the same Court or of another Court are attached by the procedure laid down in Order XXI, rule 52).

Both the new section (73) and the old section (295) contemplated rateable distribution only among those decree-holders who have applied for execution before the receipt by the Court of the moneys sought to be operated upon. On that ground, section 73 does not, in terms, apply to the present case. I am not quite sure of the other ground mentioned in my learned brother's opinion for taking the case out of section 73, namely, that the moneys were not "assets held" in the process of execution. I am inclined to think that they are so held. The case in Sorabji Covvarji v. Kala Raghunath (1) referred to was a case in which the assets were deposited by the judgment-debtor for the particular purpose of satisfying two individual creditors and hence, it was decided that the assets were not held in the process of execution, that is, as assets to be disposed of by the Court in execution proceedings in accordance with the general provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to execution, including section 73. In the present case, the assets remained in Court to the credit of the judgment-debtor and had not been earmarked by him to be paid to any of the competing decree holders in particular and when attached, were (it seems to me) assets held in the process of execution.

In deciding the difficult point in dispute some weight has to be given to the argument that the fact that the Legislature specially provided for rateable distribution among those competing decree-holders who had put in execution petitions before receipt of assets is some indication that the Legislature probably intended a different rule to be followed when the competition was between decree-holders who put in execution applications after the date of the receipt of assets.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 8th and 9th of September 1920 in pursuance of the above Order of Reference to a Full Bench.

VISVANADHAN CHETTI v. ARUNACHALAM CHETTI.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar (with him Mr. V. Ramasami Aiyar), for the Appellants.—When the Statute provides for rateable distribution under certain conditions there cannot be anything as equitable rateable distribution or inherent powers of Court apart from Statute. The requisites of the section must be complied with.

In the case of a fund in Court attached under Order XXI, rule 52, Civil Procedure Code, the proviso expressly recognizes priority. Umma Venkataratnam & Co. v. Adamji Usman & Co. (5).

[WALLIS, C. J.—The proviso is a remnant of the old Code which recognized priority. You cannot rely upon it.]

The question is when such fund in Court becomes assets held by the Court.

[WALLIS, C. J.—First take the case of two different Courts, one the attaching Court and the other the custody Court.]

Then the attachment is ordered in terms of Order XXI, rule 52 and communicated to the custody Court. The further procedure is prescribed by the Civil Rules of Practice, rule 179 and rule 180 which convert the custody Court into the distributing Court.

[WALLIS, C. J.—Rule 179 goes beyond the section. Why should the attaching decree-holder be compelled to transfer his decree to the Court where the fund is?]

The rule is intra vires. It provides the machinery for working out the scope of rule 52.

[WALLIS, C. J.—The custody Court has to transmit the money to the attaching Court and then it becomes liable to be rateably distributed under section 73.]

My submission is, no there is no such procedure prescribed. If there are several attachments by different Courts, what is the custody Court to do? Why should priority of attachment confer any right in such a case? Rules 179, 180 will simplify matters and the custody Court will distribute as provided by rule 52.

[COURT. Take the case of a single Court.]

Yes. In such a case, the receipt of assets is when it first comes into Court. The language used is "where assets are held by a Court." There is only one Court not as many Courts as there are suits.

[COURT. Must there be a transfer to the credit of the suit?]

ANSWER. There is no warrant for that in the section. Here there is an order to attach. The attachment makes it assets received by the Court. The respondent's application is later and he is not entitled to the benefit of section 73.

Mr. A. Krishnasami Iyer, for the Respondent—I am content to bring myself under section 73—I contend that I applied before assets were received. A bare order to attach is of no effect. It does not confer title or priority. The doctrine is well-settled. Here the assets must be deemed to have been received only later.

Mr. Rajah Aiyar, in reply.—If there was no receipt of assets when the order to attach was passed there was no subsequent order transferring to the credit of the suit and hence also the order under section 73 will be bad.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—The answer to the reference appears to depend on the construction of Order XXI, rule 52 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which was first enacted as section 237 of the Code of 1859, under which the first attaching decree holder was entitled, as the first judgment-creditor suing out a writ of fifa in England to have his claim satisfied in full out of the proceeds of execution, the surplus only being liable under the Codes to rateable distribution among subsequent attaching creditors. It was, however, retained as section 272 of the later Codes under which, by virtue of section 295, now 73, the attaching judgment-creditors were obliged to submit to rateable distribution with, but only with, other decree holders who had applied to the attaching Court for execution before the date specified in the section. Now, it does not seem likely that the Legislature would have retained, and even extended the old section 217 by substituting the word "property" for "money or any security", if it had considered that it would interfere with the due working of the procedure for rateable distribution introduced by section 295, and would authorise the admission to rateable distribution of decree-holders who had not entitled themselves to rateable distribution under section 295 by applying for execution to the Court in which the first attaching decree-holder's decree was being executed, but had themselves subsequently to the first attachment, attached the property in the Court which had the custody of it, hereinafter called the custody Court. The procedure for rateable distribution under section 295, now 73, applies to attached property in the custody of a Court just as much as to any other kind of attached property, and in my opinion precludes any rateable distribution on equitable grounds of property attached under rule 52 among any other class of decree-holders.

The section, which is now rule 52, prescribes a form of attachment for property which is "in the custody of a Court or any Public Officer" and "under the attachment is to be held subject to the further orders" of the attaching Court. Where the property attached is in the custody of a Public Officer, it is clearly the duty of the attaching Court to provide if necessary for the realization of the property and to divide the proceeds of the realization rateably between the attaching decree-holder and the other decree-holders who have applied to it for execution before it received such proceeds in satisfaction of their decrees. If the attached property is money, it is now, in my opinion, the duty of the attaching Court, having regard to the provisions of section 295, to call on the Public Officer to pay it into Court and to deal with it in the same manner. When the property attached is in the custody of a Court it is equally to be held by the custody Court subject to the further orders of the attaching Court and subject also to the proviso which has next to be examined which does not, in my opinion, either relieve the attaching Court of the duty of getting in and distributing the money or proceeds of realization, if available, and distributing them among the decree-holders entitled under section 295, now 73, or authorise the custody Court to embark on another sort of rateable distribution among another class of decree-holders. The proviso only says that "any question of title or priority arising between the decree-holders" (meaning the decree-holder who had made the attachment) "and any other person not being the judgment-debtor claiming to be interested in such property by virtue of any assignment, attachment or otherwise, shall be determined by such Court," the custody Court. This will include claims questioning the title of the judgment-debtor and other cases, but, taking the present case of the property in the custody Court being made the subject of several attachment in execution of several decrees, the custody Court is then, in my opinion, required by the proviso to determine which of these attachments is entitled to priority, and, in the absence of any legislative provision, (section 63 which has given rise to difficulties which need not now be considered does not apply to the present case), to award such priority to the first attachment in date because that attachment became complete on the service of the notice on the custody Court and subsequent attachments cannot, in the absence of express legislative provision, affect the right of the first attaching creditor to have the attached property realized in execution of his decree and distributed rateably among the decree-holders entitled under section 295, now 73, in satisfaction of their decrees. If the other decree-holders want to share in the rateable distribution, their proper course is to apply in time, if they can, to the attaching or executing Court; and if, instead of doing so, they choose to attach the property in the custody Court, the result will be that the attaching decree holder who is second in point of time will be entitled to proceed in execution against any balance that may be left in the hands of the custody Court after the full satisfaction of the decree of the first attaching decree holder and of the other decree-holders who have entitled themselves to rateable distribution under section 295, now 73, in executing his decree. For these reasons, I am of opinion, with great respect, that the decisions in Suikena Katum Sahiba v. Muhammad Abdul Aziz (3) and in Thakurdas Moti Lal v. Joseph Iskender (4) allowing rateable distribution among decree holders attaching the property in the custody Court should not be followed.

The same principles must be applied in the present case in which the attaching Court and the custody Court are the same. The fact that money was lying in Court to the credit of the judgment-debtor in a suit other than that in which the attachments were made does not make it assets "held by a Court" within the meaning of section 73 which clearly refers to assets levied in execution or paid into Court in satisfaction of the decree under execution, and not to assets lying in the same Court to the credit of the judgment-debtor in another suit. Such assets may, of course, be attached by the Court in execution of another decree of the same Court. The Code does not say how such attachment is to be made. The order "attach" appears to be sufficient, though, of course, some record of the attachment must be placed among the records of the suits to the credit of which the money is lying. On the other hand, the order of attachment does not of itself effect a transfer to the credit of the suit in which the attachment is made so as to constitute a receipt of assets within the meaning of section 73. The money may not be available as being already subject to another attachment possibly in another Court, and it is only when the attaching Court comes to the conclusion that there is no objection and orders the transfer of the money or so much as is necessary to satisfy the decree-holders who have applied to it for execution, to be transferred to the credit of the first attaching creditor's suit which it is engaged in executing that there can be said to be a receipt of assets within the meaning of section 73 and that a rateable distribution can be made. Judged by this test, the respondents in this appeal were entitled to rateable distribution, not on the grounds assigned in the lower Courts and referred to in the reference, but under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, because they applied for execution of their decrees to the Court executing the first attaching creditor's decree before the receipt of assets by that Court. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

AYLING, J.—I agree.

NAPIER, J.—I agree.

SADASIVA AYYAR, J.—I agree with my Lord in his reasoning and in his conclusion. I shall, however, say a few words of my own principally on the question "what further receipt of assets" means. In our referring orders, Spencer, J., and myself held that section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code did not in terms apply to the present case. Spencer, J.'s reasons were two, namely,

(1) because "the money deposited" was not "assets held" within the meaning of those words in that section; and (2) because execution was not applied for "before the receipt of" such assets within the meaning of those words in that same section. My sole reason was the reason No. 2 of Mr. Justice Spencer as I was doubtful about his reason No. 1. On the further consideration which I have been able to give to this case, I am satisfied that the second reason also is not valid as the words "before receipt of such assets" in section 73 though much more clear than the words "prior to the realization" in the old section 295 (realization having been a word of controverted meaning) must themselves be qualified by the understood words "levied in the course of execution and paid into Court in satisfaction of any of the decrees under execution or transferred for purposes of execution to the credit of one or more of the decrees under execution."

In the present case, the assets seem not to have been "received" in this sense till long after the dates of the two attachments in question and in fact, till the money was impliedly so transferred to the credit of one or both of the decrees just before the order was passed for rateable distribution. Hence, section 73 clearly applies.

As regards Order XXI, rule 52, the proviso in the 2nd paragraph is an exception to the 1st paragraph and the words "question of priority by attachments" in the 2nd paragraph, in my opinion, were intended to include questions of priority arising by reason of attachments made by several executing Courts but not questions of priority arising out of attachments made by decree-holders executing through the same Courts where the latter Court is not the custody Court.

I think that portions of rules 179 and 180 of the Civil Rules of Practice which require that the Court should proceed in certain cases mentioned in rule 179 as if the decree-holder was an assignee of the judgment-debtor and require, in certain cases mentioned in rule 180, that "the execution petition shall ask that the decree may be transmitted to the custody Court," are ultra vires as being inconsistent with the rights and privileges given to decree-holders and their assignees in the old Civil Procedure Code and as not having been framed in the manner and by the authority prescribed by the new Code for the making of valid new rules and for altering existing rules.

Rules 179 and 180 of the Civil Rules of Practice are, however, very convenient rules and, if followed, would markedly diminish the number of conflicts among orders passed by different Courts as the directions in these rules when followed have the effect of converting the custody Court into the executing Court. I would, therefore, suggest to the Rule Committee to take up this question and frame new rules on the lines of Rules 179 and 180 of the Civil Rules of Practice to avoid as far as possible nice, intricate and difficult questions as regards the conflict of jurisdiction and powers among Courts being litigated in execution proceedings.

KRISHNAN, J.—As I agree with the judgment of the learned Chief Justice who has dealt with the case very fully. I shall only briefly state my reasons.

It seems to me that Order XXI, rule 52, Civil Procedure Code, is the provision for the attachment of money or property in the custody of any Court whether that Court be the same Court as the attaching Court or a different Court. There is no limitation on the point in the wording of the rule and there is no other provision for attachment when the attaching Court and the "custody Court" are one and the same. When the two are the same, it seems to me that, as attaching Court, it will act in the suit in which the attachment order was made, and as custody Court, in the suits in which the money or property attached was brought into Court. This is the only distinction that I can see when the Court acts.

As the custody Court, it will decide in the latter suit the questions arising under the proviso to rule 52 such as questions of title arising in claim petitions under rule 58 and if there are attachments by more Courts than one on the property, questions as to which attachment has priority. After deciding these it will hold the property, as the rule directs, subject to the further orders of the Court whose attachment it has held to have priority whether it is the same Court or another Court. The position is just the same whether the custody Court is the same Court as the attaching Court or a different Court.

The custody Court has, in my view, nothing to do with the distribution of assets under the Code, as it has to hold the property subject to the further orders of the attaching Court, and section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code has no application in the custody Court. If the property attached has to be sold to convert it into money, the attaching Court will take the necessary steps under the rules for sale in the Code as in the case of any other property attached. But if it is money in the hands of the custody Court, the attaching Court may direct the money to be paid over to itself. It is only when the attaching Court gets the money into its hands, so as to be available for distribution that section 73, Civil Procedure Code, comes into play; rateable distribution will then have to be given to all decree-holders who have brought themselves under the terms of the section by having applied for execution prior to the receipt of such assets. When the attaching Court and the custody Court are the same, it seems to me that an order should be made by the Court as attaching Court for transferring the money from the suit in which it came into Court to the suit in which the attachment took place. It is only when this is done, the Court as attaching Court can properly be said to have received the assets and to hold it within the meaning of section 73; and decree-holders who have attached prior to that are entitled to rateable distribution.

This view, it seems to me, is in complete accord with the provisions of the Code and applies the statutory rule of rateable distribution to all cases including property in the custody of a Court. There is no necessity to treat the case of such property as different from the case of other properties as regards rateable distribution and as an exception to the general rule, and to rely on equitable principles as was done in Thakurdas Moti Lal v. Joseph Iskender (4) and in Suikseena Katum Sahiba v. Muhammad Abdul Aziz (3). In fact, when there is a statutory rule governing the case, there is no room, in my view, for the application of equitable principles and, with all respect to the learned Judges in the Calcutta and Madras cases, I agree that they should not be followed. The Code makes no difference between property in the custody of the attaching Court itself, property in the custody of other Courts or in the custody of Public Officers and property in the possession of other persons as regards the method of distribution; the difference under the Code is in the method of attachment and in the mode of decision as to its effect and validity. After the assets have been realised by the executing Court, section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code applies to all of them equally. If the other decree holders cannot bring themselves within the section the decree-holder under whose attachment the assets were realised must be paid in full, for section 73 is the only provision which enables other decree-holders to share with him. (See Umma Venkatratnam & Co. v. Adamji Usman & Co. (5).]

Applying this view to the present case, the second appeal before us fails, and I agree to its being dismissed with costs.

The general principle is that any acquisitions by the mortgagees are treated as accretions to the mortgaged properties and are, therefore, subject to redemption. But though the mortgagees may treat the acquisitions as accretions to the mortgaged property, he may, if he choose, keep them for his own benefit and distinct from the mortgaged property. [p. 309, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—I am of opinion that the matter must be reconsidered by the learned District Judge. The Court of first instance recorded a finding to the effect that the lands in dispute were the tenancy lands of the mortgagors and of Harakh. I do not understand the learned District Judge to dissent from this view, but he has recorded a finding that "the land must have been settled with the mortgagors by the zerpeshgidars." He gives as his reason for this finding the fact that there is no mention of any such holding in the zerpeshgi deed itself. I am wholly unable to follow this line of reasoning. The fact that there is no mention of any such holding in the zerpeshgi deed is no doubt consistent with the case of the plaintiffs that the lands, being the bakasht and zirat lands of the mortgagors, passed with the mortgage and formed part of the mortgage security without any express mention; but it is also consistent with the case of the defendants that the lands were the tenancy lands of the mortgagors and did not form part of the mortgage security. In my judgment, a mere perusal of the zerpeshgi deed does not decide the question which must be determined on the evidence in the case. The defendants strongly rely upon the fact that, so far as 11 bighas belonging to the mortgagors are concerned, they were undoubtedly in the possession of the mortgagors and were purchased by the mortgagees in execution of a rent-decree against them. They argue that this 11 bighas could not have passed to them as part of the mortgage security.

To this the answer is that they did pass along with the mortgage, but were subsequently settled with the mortgagors by the mortgagees. Unless the plaintiffs can establish the fact of the subsequent settlement by cogent evidence, they must fail on this point. The finding of the learned District Judge on this point is defective inasmuch as it is based not on evidence but on surmise.

But it seems to me that the learned District Judge did not altogether reject the theory that these lands were the tenancy lands of the mortgagors. He has considered the question of merger which could only arise if in fact the lands were the tenancy lands and not the bakasht lands of the mortgagors. I will assume for the moment that the lands were the tenancy lands of the mortgagors. The plaintiffs' case is that they are still entitled to recover possession of these lands on redemption as an accession to the mortgage-security. The general principle, well recognised in England, is that any acquisitions by the mortgagee are treated as accretions to the mortgaged property and, therefore, subject to redemption. The Lords of the Judicial Committee saw no reason whatever for not extending the doctrine to India, especially if it appears that the mortgagee had peculiar means or facilities for making the purchase as mortgagee in possession. But though the mortgagee may treat the acquisition as accretion to the mortgaged property, he may, if he chooses, keep them for his own benefit and distinct from the mortgaged properties. The question, therefore, arises, did the mortgagees treat these acquisitions as merged in the mortgaged properties, or did they keep them for their own benefit separate and distinct from the mortgaged property.

The learned District Judge has again recorded a finding that they did not keep these acquisitions alive as distinct from their rights as zerpeshgidars. This finding would ordinarily be binding on us in second appeal; but in this case it is quite clear that the learned Judge did not take into consideration many important facts which may have an important bearing on the question at issue. It is necessary for the determination of this point and for the guidance of the Court below, to deal with certain antecedent events. On the 30th September 1885, Ram Baran, one of the mortgagees, who had half the share in the advance made to the mortgagors, sold his interest as mortgagee to Matukdhari, grandfather of the defendant-appellants. On the 1st October 1885 Sheonandan, son of Matukdhari, purchased Ram Baran's share of these holdings from Ram Baran. On the 26th October 1903 Basist and Attam, who were the other mortgagees, sold their interest as mortgagees to Matukdhari. So far as their shares in the tenancy lands are concerned, they dealt with them in the following manner:—On 8th January 1890 they mortgaged 4 bighas, 6 kattis and 5 bighas, 15 kattas to Mathura, another son of Matukdhari. On the 9th July 1891 they again mortgaged the same lands to Mathura and on the 26th October 1903 they sold the mortgaged lands to Matukdhari. The documents of sale in favour of Matukdhari, so far as the lands of Basist and Attam are concerned, and in favour of Seo Nandan, so far as the lands of Ram Baran are concerned, described these lands as ancestral kasht. The mortgage-deeds executed by Basist and Attam in favour of Mathura also described these lands as kasht lands. The learned District Judge says that the statements in these deeds are not binding on the plaintiffs. This is not wholly correct. On the question whether the lands were the kasht lands of the mortgagors, the statements made in these documents may not bind the mortgagors, but on the question whether the mortgagees treated these lands as merged in the mortgage-security, the statements made in these documents are not only evidence against the plaintiffs but very strong evidence. It was for the mortgagees to treat these lands as merged in the mortgage-security, or it was for them to keep them alive as tenant lands distinct and apart from the mortgage security. All these documents show that they treated these lands as kasht lands; that is to say, as distinct and apart from the mortgage-security. I am of opinion that the learned Judge committed an error in not taking the statements made in these documents as strong evidence of the intention of the mortgagees.

Apart from these statements in these documents, the learned District Judge should have taken into consideration the fact that, while Matukdhari purchased from Ram Baran his interest as a mortgagee on the 30th September 1885, he took the document of sale of the tenancy lands on the 1st October 1885 in the name of Sheonandan. The matter is not one of formality but one of substance. In England merger is often avoided through the intervention of a trustee and Matukdbhari may well have thought that no question of merger could possibly arise if he took the conveyance in the name of his son Sheonandan. It is not a question of deception at all but one of intention. The fact that Matukdbhari took the conveyance in the name of his son Sheonandan suggests an inference to my mind that he intended to keep these tenancy lands for his own interest distinct and apart from the mortgage-security. The same consideration applies to the mortgages which he took in the name of his son Mathura.

So far as the tenancy lands of Harakh are concerned, (and there is no dispute that the 9 bighas of Harakh were tenancy lands), the question is a little more difficult. It appears that the mortgagees in their suit for rent against Harakh got a decree for ejectment against him. The learned Vakil on behalf of the respondents argued that, as soon as ejectment takes place, the raiya interest is extinguished and the landlord gets into possession freed from the tenancy. That undoubtedly is so; but the question still remains whether the mortgagees treated these acquisitions as merged in the mortgage-security or not. The question is again one of intention and I am not satisfied that the learned District Judge has properly considered all the evidence in the case.

In my view, the judgment of the learned District Judge must be set aside and the case remanded to him for disposal according to law. The learned District Judge must consider, first, whether, so far as 11 bighas belonging to the mortgagors are concerned, they were the tenancy lands of the mortgagors or their zerait and bakasht lands. In dealing with this matter he must give due importance to the fact that the mortgagors were undoubtedly in possession of the lands paying rent to the mortgagees at the time when the mortgagees instituted their suit for rent against them. If the mortgagors rely upon a subsequent settlement by the mortgagees with them they must establish that subsequent settlement by cogent evidence. If, on a consideration of all the evidence in the case, the learned District Judge comes to the conclusion that the 11 bighas of land which belonged to the mortgagors were the zerait and bakasht lands of the mortgagors, then they are entitled on redemption to recover possession of these lands. If, on the contrary, the learned District Judge comes to the conclusion that the lands were the kasht lands of the mortgagors then he must determine the further question whether, on acquisition of these lands, (including 9 bighas belonging to Harakh which are admitted to be kasht lands), the mortgagees treated them as merged in the mortgage security or as belonging to them distinct and apart from the mortgage security. If he comes to the conclusion that the mortgagees treated them as merged in the mortgage-security, then the plaintiffs are on redemption entitled to recover possession of these lands. If not, their action must fail.

I would accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the Court below and remand the appeal to the Court below for disposal according to law. The appellants are entitled to the costs of this appeal. The costs incurred in the Courts below will abide the result and will be disposed of by the lower Appellate Court.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit based on a sale deed, dated the 13th April 1915, executed by the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in favour of the plaintiff. Defendant No. 1 had, in execution of his decree against the remaining defendants, attached survey numbers 91 and 95. The execution of the decree was transferred to the Collector, and on the 1st April 1915 survey number 91 was sold by auction and purchased by the plaintiff. The balance of the purchase-money was deposited on the 6th April, and it is admitted that the amount realised by the sale of survey number 91 was more than sufficient to satisfy the decree. The sale, however, was not confirmed till the 15th May 1915. The lower Appellate Court has held that the judgment-debtors were incompetent to transfer survey number 95 to the plaintiff on the 13th April 1915. The sole point for decision is, whether on the 13th April 1915 the field in suit was under the management of the Collector. It is now settled by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gaurishankar Balmukund v. Chinnumiya (1) that the transfer to the plaintiff is absolutely void if it contravenes the provisions of paragraph 11 of Schedule III of the Civil Procedure Code. That section lays down that, so long as the Collector can exercise or perform in respect of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property any of the powers or duties conferred or imposed on him by paragraphs Nos. 1 to 10, the judgment-debtor shall be incompetent to transfer it in any way. The appellants rely upon the following passage in the judgment of this Court in Sonba v. Ganesha (2):—

"The moment the decree is satisfied, in or out of Court, the Collector's power is at an end, and the incompetency to transfer created by section 325A of the 1882 Code ceases."

Having regard to the dates given in the earlier part of the reported ruling, it was not necessary to fix the exact date when the Collector's power came to an end and the incompetency of the judgment-debtor ceased. Moreover, the judgment does not say when a decree is to be regarded as satisfied, whether upon deposit of the price by the auction-purchaser, or upon payment to the decree-holder, or upon the Court declaring that the decree is satisfied. In Khushalchand Premrai Marwadi v. Nandram Sahebram Marwadi (3) it was held that, where the decree-holder himself declares to the Collector that the decree is satisfied, there is no longer a decree capable of execution, and the judgment-debtor's incompetency ceases.

I am of opinion that, until at least the 15th May 1915, when the sale was confirmed, the Collector could exercise his powers under Schedule III of the Civil Procedure Code. Both the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor could have applied under Order XXI, rule 90, to have the sale set aside on the ground of material irregularity in conducting or publishing the sale. This might have necessitated a fresh sale. Similarly, under paragraph 10 (c), the Collector may buy in the property offered for sale, and re-sell the same by public auction or private contract, as he thinks fit. The fact that no such application was made and a resale became unnecessary does not entitle us to hold that the Collector's powers and duties had ceased. To hold otherwise, would be to frustrate the object of the law. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Where in contravention of the terms of a lease, the lessee alienates the property held by him, a suit by the lessor to recover possession of the property must, under Article 143 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, be brought within 12 years from the date of the alienation, and not from the date on which the lessee surrenders possession to his transferee.
[p. 314, col. 1]

A lease which is subject to the provisions of section 111 g of the Transfer of Property Act, is not determined by forfeiture immediately on the breach of a covenant contained therein; the breach must be followed by some overt act on the part of the lessor, the mere institution of a suit for ejectment is not a requisite act, because the forfeiture must be completed and the lease determined before the commencement of the action. [p. 315, cols. 1 & 2.]

ditional District Judge, Faridpur, dated the 29th of June 1918, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, of that district, dated the 2nd of October 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment:

Babu Mcendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Luxendra Kumar Mitter), for the Appellants.
—There was no forfeiture of the tenancy as the lessors had not complied with the requirements of section 111 (g) of the Transfer of Property Act and, therefore, the present suits are not maintainable. The mere fact that there was a breach of the covenant is not sufficient to determine the lease.

The breach must be followed by an overt act on the part of the lessor showing an intention that the lease is determined.
Before this is done, the lessor is not entitled to institute a suit for ejectment. See
Naurang Singh v. Janardan Kishore Lal Singh Deo (1).

Then, assuming that there was a forfeiture, the suit which was instituted on the 12th November 1912, is clearly barred by limitation. The covenant was broken on the 27th October 1900. The plaintiff is entitled to recover khas possession by reason of the forfeiture or breach of condition. Article 143 of the Limitation Act is plainly applicable to the case and the suit having been instituted more than 12 years from the date when the forfeiture was incurred as the condition was broken, is clearly barred by limitation.
See Gochi Sheikh v. Mathewson (2).

Lastly, if my contention as regards limitation prevails, and the suit instituted on the 12th November 1912 be held to be barred by limitation, the earlier suit, that is, the suit instituted on the 5th October 1912, is not maintainable. The two suits together demand recovery of possession of the entirety of the lease hold. If one of the suits is dismissed as barred by limitation, the other suit becomes one for ejectment in respect of a portion of the lands of a tenancy which has been forfeited or a condition whereof has been broken. Under such circumstances, the suit is not maintainable. *Gopal Ram ject-matter of the lease-hold was a non-transferable occupancy holding. There was then transfer and abandonment. Article application. See *Bhairab Chandra Naskar v.

run against the plaintiff not from the date of alienation but from the date when the lessees delivered possession to the transferees.

Then, if one of the suits is held to be barred by limitation, the other suit cannot fail. On the principles applicable to tenants-in-common, the plaintiff is entitled to sue for a share. Refers to Ahmad Sahib Shuttari v. Magnesite Syndicate Limited (5).

Finally, the suit cannot fail by reason of the fact that there was no determination of the lease. It is not necessary that the intention to determine the lease should be manifested in a particular way. It is not necessary that a formal notice should be given before instituting the suit for ejectment. The institution of the suit itself may be a sufficient indication of the intention to determine the lease. Refers to Ramnath Sil v. Siba Sundari Debya (6). And, lastly, the covenant against alienation in the lease is really a covenant against transfer of possession. There was thus no breach of the covenant unless it was shown that the transferees had been placed in possession of the land.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

MCCKERJEE, ACFT. O. J.—These are appeals by the defendants in two suits for recovery of possession of land. The same tract is in dispute in both the suits; but the subject-matters are different shares making up the entirety in the aggregate.

On the 3rd March 1897 a lease of the disputed land was granted, containing a provision to the following effect: "you will enjoy the lands of this jama from generation to generation by using it for the purpose of your own residence or for the residence of your own people, if necessary, without in any way altering the character of the lands and by keeping the boundaries intact, and without having the power of making gifts or any sort of alienation. If you or your heirs alienate it, we and our heirs will be entitled to recover khais possession; any objection to the same will be rejected by the Court." In contravention of this covenant, the land was sold by the lessees to the defendants on the 27th

October 1900. One of the present suits was instituted on the 8th October 1912 the other was instituted on the 12th November 1912. This latter suit was instituted in a Court which had no jurisdiction to entertain it, with the result that the plaint was returned to the plaintiffs and was re filed in a competent Court on the 6th September 1913. We may take it, however, in view of the provisions of section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act, that, for the purposes of the question of limitation raised before us, the suit may be treated as instituted on the 12th November 1912. The Courts below have decreed the suits.

On the present appeals, those decrees have been assailed on the ground that there was no forfeiture of the tenancy, on the basis of which the lessors could maintain these actions, as they had not complied with the requirements of clause (g) of section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act. It has further been argued that, assuming there was a forfeiture, the suit which was instituted on the 12th November 1912 is barred by limitation; and that, if this contention prevails, the other suit should be dismissed as not maintainable. We are of opinion that these contentions are well-founded and must prevail.

As regards the question of limitation which arises in one of the suits only, it is plain that the provision of the Limitation Act applicable is Article 143, which requires that a suit for possession of immoveable property when the plaintiff has become entitled by reason of any forfeiture or breach of condition, must be instituted within twelve years from the date when the forfeiture is incurred or the condition is broken. The plain language of this provision shows that it is applicable to the case before us. Here the plaintiffs sued to recover possession on the ground that they became entitled to recover possession under the terms of the contract of tenancy by reason of breach of the condition against alienation. This view is supported by the decision in Goochi Sheikh v. Mathewson (2). Reliance, however, has been placed on behalf of the respondents upon the decision in Bhairab Chandra Naskar v. Kadam Bewa (4) which is clearly distinguishable. In that case, Article 144 was applied, on the ground that at the date of the institution of the suit, the defendants had ceased to be tenants, inasmuch as, from the date of the written statement in a previous suit in which they had denied the title of the landlord, they had forfeited their tenancy and had held adversely to him. In these circumstances, it was held that Article 144 and not 143 was applicable. This is manifestly of no assistance to the plaintiffs in the case before us. It has further been argued on their behalf that time ought to run against them not from the date of alienation but from the date when the lessees surrendered possession to their transferees. We are of opinion that there is no foundation for this contention which is contrary to the provisions of Article 143. We must accordingly hold that the suit, which was instituted on the 12th November 1912 is barred by limitation. If that suit is barred by limitation, it is plain that the other suit which had been instituted earlier and was not barred by limitation is not maintainable, on the ground that a suit for ejectment does not lie in respect of a portion of the lands of a tenancy which has been forfeited or a condition whereof has been broken. This view is supported by a long series of decisions in this Court mentioned in the case of Gopal Ram Mohuri v. Lhakeswar Pershad Narain Singh (3) although we do not overlook that a contrary view has been taken in Madras in the case of Ahmad Sahib Shutt ri v. Magnesite Syndicate Limited (5). From this point of view, both the suits are liable to be dismissed.

We are further of opinion that both the suits must fail on the ground that the plaintiffs have failed to comply with the requirements of clause (g) of section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act. That clause provides as follows:—"A lease of immoveable property determines by forfeiture; that is to say, (1) in case the lessee breaks an express condition which provides that, on breach thereof, the lessor may re enter, or the lease shall become void; or (2) in case the lessee renounces his character as such by setting up a title in a third person, or by claiming title in himself, and in either case the lessor or his transferee does some act showing his intention to determine the lease." In the case before us, the allegation of the plaintiffs is that the lessees committed a breach of an express condition against alienation which provided that on breach thereof the lessors might re-enter. It is, consequently, necessary for the plaintiffs to establish that the lessors have done some act showing an intention to determine the lease before the suit was instituted. The plaintiffs have failed to show that they have complied with this requirement of the Statute. That this is the plain intention of the Legislature is clear from the decision of this Court in the case of Anandimoyee v. Lkhi Chandra Mitra (7). The same view was taken by the Madras High Court in the case of Venkatramana Bhutta v. Gundaraya (8). In the latter case, however, it was overlooked that the lease was of a date antecedent to the Transfer of Property Act, and the case was consequently not governed by the provisions of section 111, clause (g). This was pointed out in Palmanabha v. Ranga (9) where the Madras High Court in the case of a lease granted before the Transfer of Property Act, refused to apply the provisions of section 111, clause (g), but invoked the aid of the English Law on the subject as consonant to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. In a later case, Korapalu v. Narayana (10), where the lease had been granted for agricultural purposes, and consequently was not covered by the Transfer of Property Act, the Madras High Court similarly applied the rule of English Law and declined to apply clause (g) of section 111. In the case before us, the lease was executed long after the Transfer of Property Act had come into operation, and is subject to the provisions of section 111, clause (g). In our opinion, there is no room for serious controversy as to the true meaning of that section. No doubt, it is not necessary that a formal notice should be given before the institution of the suit; the intention to determine the ease may be manifested in many ways. For instance, in the case of Ramnat's Sil v. Siba Sundari Daby (6) it was held that the institution of a prior suit for ejectment, which was withdrawn with liberty reserved to the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit on the same cause of action, was, for the purposes of the second suit, a sufficient indication of the intention to determine the lease. There can be no doubt that the insertion of the condition mentioned at the end of clause (g) of section 111 was a deliberate departure from the English Law on the subject. Under the English Law a proviso in a lease leaves it optional with the lessor whether he will or will not exercise his right of determining the lease upon a case of forfeiture arising. This does not by itself enable the lessee who has committed a breach to treat the contract as at an end. The lease is not void but only voidable and the lessor alone can avoid it Bowser v. Colby (11), Davenport v. Reg. (12), Jones v. Carter (13), Toleman v. Portbury (14). In such circumstances, questions might well arise whether the lessor did or did not waive the forfeiture. It was possibly with a view to avoid difficulties of that nature that the Indian Legislature has provided that, before the suit was instituted, the lessor should do some act to show his intention to determine the lease.

It is not necessary to discuss the matter in farther detail, as the question was fully examined recently in the case of Naurang Singh v. Janardan Kihre Lal Singh (1). We see no reason to depart from the rule enunciated therein, namely, that where the rights and obligations of the parties are regulated by section 111, clause (g) of the Transfer of Property Act, there is no determination of a lease by forfeiture immediately on breach of covenant, but such breach must be followed by an overt act on the part of the lessor before the institution of the suit for ejectment; the institution of the suit cannot be rightly regarded as the requisite act, because the forfeiture must be completed and the lease determined before the commencement of the action.

We have finally been asked by the respondent to put such a construction on the covenant as to justify the inference that there has been in fact no breach of condition in this case. His argument was, that the covenant against alienation was really a covenant against transfer of possession, and that there was no breach of covenant till it was shown that a document had been executed and the transferees had been placed in possession pursuant thereto. We are of opinion that the clause in the lease is incapable of such an interpretation. A covenant of this description must be interpreted in the same way as any other covenant in the document, and we cannot twist its terms in order to enable the plaintiffs to avoid the consequences of their failure to comply with the statutory requirement. Conditions of this nature are entitled neither to favour nor disfavour, but a fair construction is to be put upon them according to the apparent intent of the contracting parties, such intention, according to ordinary rules of construction to be found from the language they have used. Oroft v. Lumley (15), Goolt le v. Sarville (16), Doe d. Davis v. Elsam (17), Doe d. Muston v. Gladwin (18). We are accordingly unable to hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to possession though they have not complied with the requirement of section 111, clause (g) the objection in fact is, fatal to the case.

The result is that these appeals are allowed, the decrees of the Courts below set aside and the suits dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 92—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Adjustment of decree—Oral evidence to prove adjustment, admissibility of.

Inasmuch as Order XXI, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplates the taking of evidence to prove the adjustment of a decree, section 92 of the Evidence Act is no bar to the admissibility of oral evidence to prove an agreement by way of adjustment of a decree.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 29th July 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Sohagpur, dated the 25th March 1919.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question referred is, whether oral evidence is admissible to prove the adjustment of a decree within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 2. In Karan Singh v. Kanhai Lal (1), Stanyon, A. J. C., held that section 92 of the Evidence Act forbids proof of a distinct subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify a decree. This conclusion was based mainly upon proviso (4) to section 92. We agree with him that if the enacting clause forbids such proof, the proviso cannot be called in aid to let in such oral evidence. In our opinion, a decree is not an embodiment of a disposition of property. It is a matter required by law to be in writing within the meaning of section 91, which excludes extrinsic evidence. The prohibition against the admission of oral evidence or statement, contained in section 92, applies only where the matter required by law to be in writing constitutes an instrument ex eodem generis with a contract, grant, or other disposition of property. Further, it is only evidence offered for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to or subtracting from the terms of such a contract that is prohibited and that only between the parties to it or their representatives. A decree is not such an instrument of a dispositive character, as pointed out by Messrs. Ameer Ali and Woodroffe in their notes to section 92 of the Evidence Act. A decree can only be modified or rescinded by an order of the Court and not by a mere agreement of the parties. An agreement by way of adjustment of a decree does not contradict, vary, add to or subtract from its terms. Such an agreement is the basis on which an adjustment is certified by the Court and the certificate of the Court modifies or rescinds the decree according to the nature of the adjustment.

(1) 8 Ind. Cas. 279; 6 N. L. R. 123.

Further, the procedure laid down in Order XXI, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, clearly contemplates the taking of evidence before the Court records the adjustment, and we think this includes oral evidence, a view which has guided the practice of all Courts for a very long time.

Our answer to the question referred is in the affirmative, and we respectfully dissent from Karan Singh v. Kanhai Lal (1).

Answered affirmatively.

A suit under section 55 of the Madras Estates Land Act should not be dismissed by reason merely of the non-joinder of a rival claimant. Where an objection on the ground of non-joinder is taken, the Court should act under Order I, rule 10

RAMANATHAM CHETTY v. ARUNAGHALLAM CHETTIAR.

(2) of the Civil Procedure Code and add such claimant as a party defendant. [p. 317, col. 2.]

Section 55 of the Madras Estates Land Act is not affected in any way by section 146 of the Act and the Revenue Court's power to deal with the rights of parties before it under the former section is not controlled by anything in the latter. In a suit, therefore, under section 55, the Court is bound to decide whether the plaintiff is entitled to a patta or not, if his title to it is denied. [p. 318, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Ramnad at Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 855 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Special Deputy Collector, Ramnad, in Summary Suit No. 2847 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar (with him Mr. K. B. Venkatachala Aiyar), for the Appellants.—The lower Appellate Court erred in holding that it had no jurisdiction to enquire into the merits of the plaintiff's claim. The recognition of another transferee by the land-holder does not oust the Court's jurisdiction. The plaintiff's right of suit under section 55 of Madras Act I of 1908 necessarily implies that the Court should try and adjudge on his claim. The plaintiff denies that the rival claimant whom the land-holder recognized has any right superior to his. That question must be decided by the Court. Section 55 is not controlled by section 146. Nor is it necessary that plaintiff should first obtain a declaratory decree as against the rival claimant, Perianayagi.

The suit should not have been dismissed for non-joinder of Perianayagi. She is not a necessary party. In any event the Court should have impleaded her under Order I, rule 10 Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar (with him Mr. Rajagopala Aiyar), for the Respondents.—The defendant has already recognized the title of Perianayagi and had issued a patta in her name. The plaintiff could not invoke the aid of the Court without first taking appropriate action under section 146 of the Estates Land Act.

JUDGMENT.

KRISHNAN, J.—This second appeal arises from a suit brought by the plaintiff under section 55 of the Estates Land Act (I of 1908) to obtain a patta from the defendant, the land-holder, for the plaint land. Plaintiff's case was that he obtained the occupancy right by purchase of the rights of the previous ryot, one Kaliappan Servai, some years ago, and that he was paying the rent due, though the patta remained in the later's name. Kaliappan died sometime ago leaving his widow one Kaliammai. Plaintiff recently made an application under section 146 of the Estates Land Act jointly with Kaliammai for the transfer of patta to his name but the defendant refused it. Hence the suit. Defendant pleaded that sometime ago he had recognised one Perianayagi as the ryot on a joint application by herself and Kaliammai alleging that the occupancy right had been sold to her by one Mathu Servai, a nephew and heir of Kaliappa, that he had issued a patta in her name and that, having done so, he was not bound to issue a new patta to the plaintiff, unless the latter took proper steps under section 146 of the Estates Land Act. He also pleaded that, as plaintiff did not take such steps, the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction to decree delivery of patta to him. He further contended that the suit was also bad for non-joinder of Perianayagi. The District Judge upheld his objections and dismissed the suit. Hence the appeal to us by the plaintiff.

On the question of non-joinder I agree with the Deputy Collector that Perianayagi was not a necessary party, though it may be desirable to have her as a party to settle effectively the dispute raised. But even if she was a necessary party the suit should not have been dismissed for her non-joinder. It is clear from Order I, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, which applies to Revenue Courts by force of section 192 of the Estates Land Act, that the order of dismissal is improper. The Court should have acted under Order I, rule 10, clause (2) and added her as a party defendant if it thought fit to do so.

The defendant's chief objection, however, is that, in the circumstances stated by him, the Revenue Court had no authority to direct him to issue a patta to the plaintiff. This is said to result from section 146 of the Act. I am unable to see what bearing that section has on the present case. That section seems to be intended to prevent land-holders from contumaciously refusing to recognise transfers which are prima facie valid. But it cannot be read as validating transfers which are in truth invalid or as affecting the real rights of parties. Section 50 gives every ryot a right to demand a patta and section 55 a right to sue for it in the Revenue Court. When such a suit is brought, the Court is bound to decide whether the plaintiff is entitled to a patti or not, if his title to it is denied. The fact that the landholder has previously recognised a rival claimant, who is alleged to have no rights in the land, cannot, in my opinion, make any difference in the matter for any action of his to which plaintiff is not a party cannot be allowed to prejudice the latter's right. The definition of the term ryot in section 2, clause (15), does not seem to lend any support to the defendant's contention on the point. Nor has any authority been cited in support of it. I consider section 55 is not affected in any way by section 146 and the Revenue Court's power to deal with the rights of parties before it under the former section is not controlled by anything in the latter. The opinion of the learned District Judge that plaintiff's only remedy was to sue Perianayagi in a Civil Court for a declaration that his rights are superior to her's and after getting a decree to apply to defendant to recognise him as the ryot is not, in my opinion, correct, for I think he is entitled to ask the Revenue Court to decide whether he is not the rightful ryot and to dispose of his suit on the merits of his claim.

BALDEO SHUKUL V. YUSUF.

I would, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the appeal to it for disposal according to law and direct respondent to pay appellant's costs in this Court.

AYLING, J.—The maintainability of the suit in the Revenue Court is a point on which I must confess to a certain amount of doubt. But I am not prepared to differ from my learned brother, and I agree in the order proposed.

commencement of.

Where a decree is amended, the date of amendment is the date of the decree within the meaning of section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code [p. 319, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Shahabad.

Mr. Siu Saran Lal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against the judgment of the learned District Judge of Shahabad. The appellant is the judgment debtor and his point is, that the application for execution is barred by limitation. The facts are not in dispute.

The decree was passed on the 6th January 1908 and was amended on the 5th February 1908. There were several applications for execution with which we are not concerned. We are, however, concerned with the application for execution which was made on the 12th January 1920. The judgment-debtor says that under section 48, Civil Procedure Code, execution is barred by limitation. The relevant portion of section 48 runs as follows:—"Where an application to execute a decree not being a decree granting an injunction has been made, no order for the execution of the same decree shall be made upon any fresh application presented after the expiration of 12 years from the date of the decree sought to be executed."

Now, the application for execution was made after the expiry of 12 years from the 6th January 1908 when the decree was originally passed against the judgment-debtor but within 12 years from the 5th February 1908, the date on which the decree was amended, and the question which I have to determine is this: what is the date of the decree sought to be executed?

The learned Vakil for the appellant argues before me that under Order XX, rule 7 of the decree must bear date the day on which the judgment is pronounced, and, therefore, it is quite immaterial that the decree was amended. The decree, whether it is the original decree or the amended decree, must bear date the day on which the judgment is pronounced, that is to say, in this particular case, 6th January 1905. It seems to me that when we consider the history on this subject the argument of the learned Vakil will appear unsubstantial. Under section 179 of the old Limitation Act, the period began to run from the date of the decree or order, and there was no provision at all in the old Limitation Act for the period to run from the date of the amended decree, and great difficulty arose whenever the decree was amended by the Court and the decree as amended was put in execution. That difficulty has now been removed by the present Limitation Act which gives as one of the starting periods the date of the amendment of the decree. Article 182 gives several starting points, one of them being the date of the decree or order and the other being, where the decree has been amended, the date of amendment. If the learned Vakil's point is right, namely, that the decree must always bear date the day on which the judgment is signed, there is no object in the Legislature in providing two different starting points for Limitation. It is quite clear that if the case fell under Article 182, time would begin to run not from the date of the decree but from the date of amendment.

But it has been argued before me that, in so far as section 45 does not embody the provisions of Article 182, time must begin to run from the date of the decree. I am unable to agree with this contention. In Article 182 the time from which period begins to run is the date of the decree or order or where the decree has been amended the date of the amendment. In section 48, Civil Procedure Code, time begins to run from the date of the decree "sought to be executed." In my view, the words "sought to be executed" must include the amended decree. The decree holder has put in execution the decree as amended by the Court on the 5th February 1903. It is that decree which he seeks to execute and, therefore, under section 48 time must begin to run from 5th February 1903. It is conceded that if this be so, then the decree-holder is within time.

In my view, the case has been correctly decided by the learned Judge in the Court below and I must dismiss this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1897), ss 24, 25—Order directing return of plaint—Revision, whether lies—Rent, suit for—Question of title, whether arises.

The High Court has power to revise an order returning a plaint under section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act [p. 320, col. 1.]

In a suit for rent, if the plaintiff proves that the defendant has been his tenant during the period for which rent is asked for he is entitled to a decree for the rent for that period, no matter who the owner of the property in dispute may be, and no question of title to the property can arise in the suit. If the defendant's tenancy is proved, he is estopped from denying the plaintiff's title. [p. 320, cols. 1 & 2.]

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Lahore, dated the 19th August 1920.

Mr. Beni Parshad Khosla, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff in this case sues the defendant for rent. The defendant denies the plaintiff's title to the house and the Small Cause Court Judge has returned the plaint under section 23 of the Small

LABFU RAM V. MOOL CHAND.

Cause Courts Act holding that the relief claimed depends on the proof or disproof of ownership and that he cannot finally determine the question of title. The plaintiff applies to this Court on the revision side.

On behalf of the defendant a preliminary objection is raised that no revision lies, as under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act this Court's power of revision only covers cases which have been decided. It is urged here on the strength of Subal Ram Dutt v. Jagadanunda Mazumdar (1) that an order returning a plaint under section 23 does not decide the case, and, therefore, this Court has no power of revision. On behalf of the plaintiff it is pointed out that the ruling cited has not been followed in a later ruling of the same High Court published in Umesh Chandra Paladhi v. Rakhal Chandra Chatterjee (2) and it has also been dissented from in a Madras ruling published in Ramanathan Chetty v. Maruthappa Kone (3). In addition there is a Full Bench ruling of this Court, No. 60 of 1907 which lays down that section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (now section 115) gives the High Court power of revising even interlocutory orders. I consider that I have power to revise and I overrule the objection.

On behalf of the plaintiff it is urged that the defendant is estopped from denying the plaintiff's title having executed a lease in his favour and here Bogar v. Karam Singh (4) is relied upon: but I note that in this case the lease which had been executed is dated January 1919, whereas the plaintiff sues for rent from December 1917. So that what the plaintiff has to prove is that the defendant was his tenant since December 1917. If he can prove this he is bound to get a decree, the defendant being unable to raise the plea that he is not the landlord. In fact, the only real issue in this case is, whether the defendant has been the plaintiff's tenant during the period for which rent is claimed. If so, he must pay rent no matter who the real owner of the house may be. It seems to me, therefore, unnecessary to decide the question of title. On behalf of the plaintiff it has been urged that, even if it were necessary to decide the question of title, the Small Cause Court Judge is bound to do so, and here reliance is placed on Mirai-ud-din v. Karam Bakhsh (5). With all respect, I note that that judgment seems to me defective in one respect. A question of title to immovable property can, no doubt, be decided incidentally by a Small Cause Court but section 23 clearly gives the Court a discretion in cases in which the right of the plaintiff depends upon the proof or disproof of the title to immovable property or other title which the Court cannot finally determine to return the plaint. Whereas the ruling cited seems to lay down that in such cases a Small Cause Court can and must decide all issues, it seems to me to deny to the Small Cause Court the discretionary power allowed by section 23. However, in the present case I cannot see that it is necessary to decide the question of title. As I have already said, what the plaintiff has to prove is, that the defendant has been his tenant during the period for which rent is claimed. If he can prove this and can also prove that the defendant is still his tenant then the defendant is barred, by reason of section 116 of the Evidence Act, from denying that the plaintiff had at the beginning of the tenancy a title to the house.

I accept this application and return the case to the Small Cause Court for disposal in due course. Stamp on application to this Court to be refunded. Other costs in this Court to follow the event.

(MONDAL) — PETITIONER

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 36—Order declaring person to be a tout—Authority by whom such order to be made.

An order under section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act, declaring a person to be a tout, made by a District Magistrate upon evidence recorded by a Subordinate Magistrate is not a valid order. Such an order can only be made by the authority mentioned in the section upon evidence recorded by itself.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order made under subsection (1) of section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act, on the ground that the order was made in contravention of its provisions. That section is in these terms: "(1) Every High Court Judge, District Judge, Sessions Judge, District Magistrate and Presidency Magistrate, every Revenue Officer, not being below the rank of a Collector of a District, and the Chief Judge of every Presidency Small Cause Court (each as regards their or his own Court and the Courts, if any, subordinate thereto) may frame and publish lists of persons proved to their or his satisfaction, by evidence of general repute or otherwise, habitually to act as touts, and may, from time to time, alter and amend such lists.....". This provision has been interpreted to mean that the evidence must be taken by the officer concerned. This was first laid down in the case Prasan Chandra Das, In the matter of (1) and the rule there enunciated was followed in Nadhu Pershad, In the matter of (2) and Ohandi Charan Poy, In re (3). This has been the recognized interpretation of this provision of the law ever since 1897 and we are surprised that, on the present occasion, a procedure has been followed which is wholly inconsistent with the interpretation thus placed on the Statute. In this case, the evidence was taken by the Sub Divisional Officer, who embodied his conclusion that the petitioner was a tout in an order which he placed before the District Magistrate for confirmation, the District Magistrate thereupon signified his approval, by the word 'yes.' This was clearly in contravention of the provision of section 36.

Our attention has, however, been drawn to the case of Hari Oharan Sirkar v. District Judge of Dacca (4) where it was observed that the Court would not set aside an order under section 36 when the proceedings had been regularly conducted and the order was manifestly justified by the evidence. In that case, an objection was taken that the proceedings were bad by reason of misjoinder. Here, however, it cannot be said that the proceedings have been regularly conducted, when in fact they have been conducted in contravention of the provision of the law. It is further plain that the decision in Rasik Lal Nag, In the matter of (5) (to which we have been referred) is also distinguishable. That case was decided under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act which empowers the High Court alone to pass the final order in respect of a Pleader or a Muktear. The section contemplates that the evidence may be taken by a Subordinate Officer and the matter then reported to the High Court with the expression of an opinion by the Judge, Magistrate or the Revenue Authority through or by whom the reference is made. In the case before us, the order has to be made by a certain specified authority and section 36 expressly requires that that authority, and that authority alone, should take the evidence which is the foundation of the order.

The result is that the Rule is made absolute and the order discharged.

FLETCHER, J. I agree.

A constable arrested a person in pursuance of a written order made by a Sub-Inspector under section 56 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The accused hustled the constable, pushed him aside and thus rescued the person who had been arrested:

The difference between the trial of a civil and a criminal case is that, in the former, it is the duty of the parties to place their case before the Court as they think best, whereas in the latter it is the duty of the Court to bring all relevant evidence on the record and to see that justice is done. Criminal appeal by the Local Government against the order of acquittal, passed by the Sessions Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 15th of May 1920.

Mr. W. Wallach (Government Advocate), for the Crown.

Messrs. C. R. Alston and S. O. Mukerji, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Government appeal against an order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge on appeal from an order of conviction passed by a First Class Magistrate against two accused persons, Janki Prasad and Lachhman, under which these persons were sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 100 each for offences under section 353/225 of the Indian Penal Code. The case comes from the town of Phaphund. From the record of Case No. 17, King Emperor v. Kedar Nath, Ram Dat and Bhore, etc., of the Court of the Magistrate in the year 1920, and from the record of Case No. 11 of 1920, Bachchan Lal v. Wali Muhammad, it appears that on the 10th of December 1919 a quarrel took place between a Brahman, named Bachchan Lal, and a Constable, named Wali Muhammad, attached to the outpost of the local Police Station. It arose over the drinking of water at a well when Wali Muhammad was washing his teeth by the side of the well. Apparently, the two men came to blows and Bachchan Lal at once made a complaint in Court. On the same date, a report was made by Nazir Husein, the Head Constable at the Police Station, which charged Kedar Nath, Ram Dat, Bhore and Bachchan Lal and two other persons with having committed the offences of criminal trespass and rioting in that, after the first squabble between Wali Muhammad and Bachchan Lal, the latter had collected some friends, had gone to the Police outpost, had dragged Wali Muhammad out of it and beaten him. The enquiry in the latter case was taken up by the Sub-Inspector, Muhammad Mohsin Jafri, and on the 11th of December he issued to Nazir Husein, Head Constable, written orders under section 56 of the Criminal Procedure Code directing him to arrest Bhore and Ram Dat as well as others for the offences charged against them. The same Magistrate tried these two cases and also the present case. The cases were apparently heard together and judgments were delivered on the same date. In the first case the charge against Wali Muhammad of assaulting Bachchan Lal was dismissed and in the second case the charge against Bhore, Ram Dat, and Bachchan Lal of the offence under section 147, Indian Penal Code, was also dismissed. The Magistrate was of opinion that, even if Bachchan Lal and his friends had gone to the outpost after the first quarrel with Wali Muhammad, they went really to make a complaint, and that the charge against them had been exaggerated. The present case, the third one, arises in this way out of the first two. The case for the prosecution is that, on the 22nd of December last, Nazir Husein and Lallu Ram, Head Constables, found Bhore and Ram Dat sitting at the shop of Janki Prasad and Lachhman; that they arrested them at the shop, showed them the written order under section 56, Criminal Procedure Code, and took them out on to the road; that thereupon Lachhman, Janki Prasad and some of their friends advanced angrily upon them, insisted upon the men being released, finally pushed aside the Police with their hands, and the men escaped and ran back to their shop. Nazir Husain sent to the outpost, which was some 50 or 60 paces away, for some Constables; that on their arrival he wrote a report on a piece of paper and sent it on to the Police Station to the Sub-Inspector. The Sub-Inspector at once proceeded to the spot and at once made an enquiry. Finally, he sent up Janki Prasad and Laohbman and two other persons for trial for the offense of having rescued Ram Dat and Bhore from lawful custody.

EMPEROR v. JANKI PRASAD.

The defence case is as follows:—Janki Prasad stated that on the day in question the Head Constable came to him at his shop telling him that the Sub-Inspector desired his attendance at the Police Station in order that he might bring his influence to bear upon Baebhan Lal to settle the dispute which had arisen between Baebhan Lal and Wali Muhammad; that he (Janki Prasad) refused to go declining to interfere in a matter with which he had no concern; that the Head Constable abused him; that he returned it with compliments and the Head Constable went away; that, very shortly after, the Sub-Inspector arrived upon the scene armed with a gun; that he called for the man who had been impertinent to the Police, that he abused Janki Prasad, and the latter in return abused him, whereupon the Sub-Inspector deliberately raised his gun and fired point blank at him, and that the shot would have taken effect had not the Head Constable struck up the gun with his hand.

The Magistrate took evidence for both sides and finally came to the conclusion that the prosecution story was true; that the story told by Janki Prasad was improbable and unworthy of belief and he convicted the accused and sentenced them as mentioned above. It will be remembered that he was the same Magistrate who acquitted Ram Dat and Bhore on the charge which had been preferred against them by Wali Muhammad and Nazir Husain. We may note here that two other accused were acquitted because their names were not entered in the first report, i.e., the report which was written by Nazir Husain at the scene of the occurrence and sent to the Police Station. Janki Prasad and Laohbman appealed to the learned Sessions Judge, who has acquitted them without going into the actual facts of the case at all. His judgment sets out the case for the prosecution and the case for the defence. He then proceeds to say as follows:—"Now, in this appeal we have to see whether Nazir Husain had any authority to arrest Bhore and Ram Dat. The record shows that there is no warrant for arrest of Bhore and Ram Dat, nor is there any order of the Thanadar to arrest Bhore and Ram Dat. The prosecution failed to prove that there was any such warrant or order. There is no secondary evidence on the record which would satisfactorily prove that there was any warrant for arrest of Bhore and Ram Dat, nor is there any satisfactory evidence to show that Ram Dat and Bhore had been accused of any cognizable offence so that a Police Officer could arrest them without any warrant." Thereupon, the learned Sessions Judge quotes the case reported as Tafazzul Ahmed Chowdhry v. Queen-Empress (1) which really does not govern the facts of the present case at all. He then continues to say: "The deposition of Nazir Husain would show that he arrested Bhore and Ram Dat and then showed them the warrant. In Satish Ohandra Rai v. Jodu Nandan Singh (2). Princep and Hill, JJ., held that an arrest by a Police Officer without notifying the substance of the warrant to the person against whom the warrant is issued, as required by section 80, Criminal Procedure Code, is not a lawful arrest and resistance to such arrest is not an offence under section 225 B, Indian Penal Code. As I have shown above there is no warrant on the record in this case nor is there satisfactory evidence of any warrant, and the evidence of Nazir Husain also shows that he did not notify the substance of the warrant before he arrested the person. So I do not see how the offence under section 353/225, Indian Penal Code, could have been committed, and how the accused could have been convicted of this. There has not been any application in writing by the prosecution that I should either get the original warrant or get the secondary evidence about it or should send the case to the Court below to get the warrant in original, or secondary evidence about it, so I do not think I would be justified in doing anything of the kind, for I do not think the Judge's duty to be to procure evidence which was never produced by the prosecution."

It is difficult to understand what conception the learned Sessions Judge has of his duty as a Sessions Judge trying a criminal case. It is the duty of every Criminal Court to get to the bottom of a case and to bring all relevant evidence upon the record and to see that justice is done. The latter portion of the Judge's judgment shows clearly that his conception of his duty as a Judge is utterly incorrect and somewhat puerile. It is the attitude that might possibly be taken up by a Civil Court trying a civil suit where it is the duty of the parties to place their case as they think best before the Court. But in a criminal case it is the duty of the Court to get to the very bottom of it and to see that every scrap of relevant evidence is brought before it. The learned Sessions Judge has fallen far short of his duty in the present case. As a matter of actual fact, the Magistrate who tried the case had the record of the other two cases before him. They were in Court and the cases were tried together and the judgments were delivered together. We have seen, and we have examined, those records. The written orders passed under section 56, Criminal Procedure Code, are before the Court and are on the record of the very case in which Ram Dat and Bhore were tried and acquitted. To say that there was no evidence before the Magistrate of any complaint of a cognizable offence is utterly incorrect. The record of the case was before the Court and the Court itself was trying that very case. In addition to this, there was the first report which was on the record of this case. The learned Sessions Judge's judgment has made it necessary for us to go through the evidence in the case and to hear the appeal just as he ought to have done.

It has been ably argued on behalf of the accused that the evidence on the record produced by the prosecution should not be believed and the story told by the accused should be accepted as true. Stress is laid on the fact that the Magistrate has himself found that the charge against Ram Dat and Bhore under sections 452 and 147, Indian Penal Code, was not true and that the true facts had been grossly exaggerated. It is pointed out that Nazir Husain, who was a witness in that case and who claimed to have arrived upon the scene just at the close of the occurrence, must have known that the charge against Bhore and Ram Dat was grossly exaggerated if not utterly baseless. As to what actually happened on the 2nd of December we think that, in the main, the prosecution story was the true one. The story told by Janki Prasad and his brother is so incredible that we have no hesitation in agreeing with the Magistrate in rejecting it. Beyond all doubt, the written orders (which have been wrongly called warrants in this case) were issued under section 56, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sub-inspector to whom information had been given by Nazir Husain of the offence charged against Bhore and Ram Dat. Armed with the authority of those written orders, we have little doubt that Nazir Husain and Lalla Ram arrested Ram Dat and Bhore. We have been taken through all the evidence for the prosecution. Our attention has been called to the discrepancy in regard to Exhibit A, the first report, which was written by Nazir Husain and sent to the Police Station. We do not think that this document is otherwise than genuine. It is true that one witness, after showing considerable doubt on the point, did finally say that the document had been written in pencil on a piece of paper produced by the Head Constable from his pocket, but the main evidence goes to show that the piece of paper was supplied by another constable who had come from the outpost when Lalla Ram, Constable, had been sent for assistance. The Police evidence is supported by the evidence of several other private persons and the cross-examination of these witnesses has not helped the defence in any way except in producing minor discrepancies of no value whatsoever. It, therefore, comes to this that, after the two men had been arrested and taken on to the road, the two accused persons, Janki Prasad and Lachhman, with others hustled the Policemen, pushed them aside and in that way rescued these persons from custody. Apart from the legality or otherwise of the arrest, neither Janki Prasad nor Lachhman had any legal right whatsoever to lay their hands upon the Police and reserve from them the persons who had been arrested. But in the present case we consider that the Constable, Nazir Husain, was armed with full authority, namely, the written orders issued by the Sub Inspector under section 53, Criminal Procedure Code. The resistance of the Police does not seem to have been great. No injury was done. It was a question of hustling and rescuing men. The two accused have suffered two days' rigorous imprisonment and, in the circumstances, we think that the ends of justice will be met by a substantial fine. We, therefore, accept the appeal. We set aside the order of acquittal. We convict Janki Prasad and Lachhman of offences under section 353, read with section 225, Indian Penal Code and sentence them to a fine of Rs. 250 each in addition to the two days' rigorous imprisonment which they have already undergone. In default of payment of the fines they will each suffer one month's further rigorous imprisonment. We allow the accused a fortnight within which to deposit the fine in the Court of the Magistrate.

WALSH, J.—I agree. In my opinion it was impossible for the Government to permit the judgment of the Sessions Judge to stand. Whatever the merits might have been, a decision that members of the public are entitled to interfere with members of the Police force while in bona fide execution of their supposed duty, and to rescue their friends, is so entirely without legal foundation and so dangerous in principle, that no Government could, in the public interest, permit it to stand. The learned Judge has muddled himself over cases relating to arrest, when the question which he had to decide was one of rescue, an entirely different matter. He has also muddled himself over a question of warrants, when the question which he had to decide arose out of an arrest without a warrant under section 56 of the Code. He had the courage to hold that there was no evidence on the record and that the prosecution had failed to prove the order, when a proper order dated the 11th of December was on the record before him. These are very serious blunders in a case of public importance particularly in a quarrel between Hindus and Muhammadan members of the Police force. It is not the first time that we have had occasion to criticise the procedure of this learned Judge at Sessions, and it is important that he should take greater care to set a good example to those under him.

directions for disposal of property attached in Criminal proceedings—Proceedings under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code—High Court, power of, to set aside proceeding.*

A High Court is competent, in the exercise of the power of superintendence vested in it under section 10 of the Government of India Act, 19 5, to set aside proceedings instituted without jurisdiction by a Subordinate Court under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code; such power of superintendence can be exercised notwithstanding section 145 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 328, col. 1.]

The High Court may make consequential or incidental orders in the exercise of its power of superintendence over Subordinate Courts, which may be invoked, if occasion should arise, to reach and remedy all forms of judicial high-handedness [p. 328, col. 1.]

Owing to a dispute between a landlord and his tenants as to the right of the former to lac growing on trees, the District Magistrate apprehended a breach of the peace and initiated proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and by a subsequent order attached the trees with the lac thereon: the lac was collected and some of it sold, the sale-proceeds being deposited in the Treasury and the unsold lac stored away: the High Court set aside the proceedings as being without jurisdiction, and issued a rule calling upon the District Magistrate and the tenants to show cause why the sale-proceeds of the lac and the unsold lac should not be made

Held, (1) that the High Court had inherent power to give directions as to the disposal of property attached in a criminal proceeding initiated without jurisdiction as might be necessary in the interests of justice ; [p. 328, col. 1.]

(2) that in the present case the proper order was to keep the sale-proceeds of the lac and the unsold lac in the custody of the Subordinate Judge of the District pending the decision of a suit to be instituted by the landlord for declaration of his right to the lac, and that, in default of such suit being instituted, the net sale-proceeds of the lac be distributed rateably among the tenants [p. 330, col. 2.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. U. N. Sen Gupta Counsel, for the Opposite Party.—Before my friend begins, I should like to raise a preliminary point as to whether your Lordships, in dealing with the matter before you, are exercising revisional or original jurisdiction.

[MOOKERJEE, A. C. J.—You cannot raise the question as a preliminary objection. We shall hear you when you will address us.]

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal (with him Babus Manmathanath Mukherjee, Nisit Nath Ghatak and Debendra Narain Bhattacharya), for the Petitioners.—The question which your Lordships are invited to consider in this Rule is, whether your Lordships have inherent power to give directions as to the disposal of property attached by the District Magistrate of Malda in connection with a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, which has been set aside by the High Court as initiated without jurisdiction. My submission is, your Lordships have ample power in the matter.

[MOOKERJEE, A. C. J.—The first question is, under what power the proceeding under section 145 was set aside ?]

Refers to Laldhari Singh v. Sukdeo Narain Singh (1). The High Court interfered in exercise of the power of superintendence vested in it under section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915. It has been held that power of superintendence includes power of revision. A power of revision implies a power to make consequential orders. Refers to section 432, 439, 520, Criminal Procedure Code.

that in the exercise of a power under section 107 of the Government of India Act, we can make consequential orders as in the exercise of our revisional powers we can make similar orders under sections 432, 439 Criminal Procedure Code.]

Yes. Refers to Craies on Statute Law, 4th Edition, page 108.

The power given to your Lordships under section 107 of the Government of India Act is a very large power. The arm of this Court is long enough to reach any form of injustice.

[MOOKERJEE, A. C. J.—The High Court, in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction, has the same powers as it has in its civil jurisdiction. See Pulin Behary Das v. Emperor (2), Budhu Lal v. Chattu Gope (3), Ram Chandra Mistry v. Nabin Mirdha (4).]

present matter. I am glad, and so are the litigants generally, to have your Lordships' pronouncement that the arm of this Court is long enough to reach any form of judicial injustice.

There can be no doubt that the property is in safe custody.

[MOOKERJEE, A. C. J.—The District Magistrate ought not to have touched the property in defiance of the order of this Court.

There is a bona fide dispute with regard to the property. Your Lordships should not pass any order which would prejudice my right to the property.

[FLETCHER, J.—The best thing to be done is to institute an interpleader suit with a formal plaintiff.]

Under section 88, Civil Procedure Code, the Magistrate or any other officer of the District may institute the interpleader suit.

Mr. U. N. Sen Gupta, for the Adhyars :—I have bestowed considerable labour and skill and the property should not be restored to the petitioners to my prejudice.

[FLETCHER, J.—You must stand or fall along with the Zemindar.]

Babus Manmathanath Mukherjee in reply :—It has not been seriously disputed before your Lordships that this Court has jurisdiction to deal with the matter. The whole question is, what should be the nature of your Lordships' order in the matter. Section 517 or section 523, Criminal Procedure Code, would not apply. The proper order is one of restitution. It cannot be suggested that this Court has to embark on a judicial enquiry. In the absence of express legislation it must go back to the party from whom it was taken. Mohammad Mondal v. Fakiruddi Munshi (Piggot) (15), and need not be recapitulated at length for our present purpose. It is sufficient to state that proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code were initiated by the District Magistrate of Malda on the ground that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed between the Mathurapur Zemindary Concern and the tenants, relating to the right to grow and collect lae on plum trees standing on lands comprised in the holdings of the tenants. The District Magistrate considered the case to be of such emergency that he proceeded to attach the disputed trees with the lae thereon, pending his decision under section 145. At a later stage, by order of the District Magistrate, the lae was collected and stored in the godowns of the first party and a portion thereof was sold by auction. The tenants obtained Rules from this Court with a view to set aside the proceedings on the ground, amongst others, that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take action under section 145 or to make the orders he had passed. This Court stayed further proceedings pending the disposal of the Rule. But notwithstanding such order, the lae has been collected and sold in part, an action which has been attempted to be justified in the letter of the Magistrate, on the allegation that the lae might otherwise considerably deteriorate in value to the detriment of the rightful owner, whoever he might turn out to be in the end. On the 2nd July 1920, Mr. Justice Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Cuming set aside the proceedings under section 145 as initiated without jurisdiction and added that the question of disposal of the lae and the sale proceeds of the portion already sold would be dealt with later. The present Rule was then issued, on the 29th July, 1920, calling upon the District Magistrate of Malda and the opposite party to show cause why the proceeds of sale of the lae as also the lae yet unsold and stored in the godown of the Mathurapur Zemindary Concern should not be made over to the tenants, or why such other orders should not be passed as might seem proper to the Court. As the Rule involves an important question of law touching the jurisdiction of this Court, it has been placed for disposal before a Special Bench constituted with the concurrence of the Full Court.

The first point which requires consideration is, whether this Court has inherent power to give directions as to the disposal of property which was attached and has been dealt with by a Subordinate Court in the course of proceedings instituted without jurisdiction under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. We are of opinion that the question should be answered in the affirmative. It is now well-settled that a High Court is competent, in the exercise of the power of superintendence vested in it under section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, (which re-placed section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act 1861), to set aside proceedings instituted without jurisdiction by a Subordinate Court under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code; such power of superintendence can be exercised notwithstanding section 435 (3) Criminal Procedure Code, which lays down that proceedings under Chapter XII (which comprises sections 145-148) are not proceedings within the meaning of that section. This view was affirmed in Hurbullah Narain Singh v. Luchmeswar Prosad Singh (16), Lalhari Singh v. Sukdeo Narain Singh (17), Jagmohan Pal v. Ram Kumar Gope (17), Kulada Kinkar Roy v. Dadesh (18) and was subsequently recognised by a Full Bench in the cases of Sukh Lal Sheikh v. Tara Chand (19), Khoor Mahomed Sirkar v. Nazir Mahomed (20). Section 107 of the Government of India Act, which may thus be invoked to set aside proceedings instituted without jurisdiction, is expressed in perfectly general terms, and, prima facie, there is no reason why the High Court should not, when it sets aside the proceedings, proceed to give such consequential directions as may be found necessary in the interests of justice in the circumstances of the particular case. That the Court is competent to make such consequential or incidental orders when it exercises its appellate or revisional jurisdiction, is clear from section 423 (1) (d) section 439 (1) and section 520. In such circumstances, we may legitimately hold that the High Court may make consequential or incidental orders in the exercise of its power of superintendence over Subordinate Courts, which may be invoked, if occasion should arise, to reach and remedy all forms of judicial high handedness. Lekhraj Ram v. Debi Pershad (21). This conclusion harmonises with the view formulated in Pulin Behary Das v. Emperor (2) that "Criminal Courts, no less than Civil Courts, exist for the administration of justice, and Courts of both descriptions have inherent power to mould the procedure, subject to the statutory provisions applicable to the matter in hand, to enable them to discharge their functions as Courts of Justice." The same position was re-affirmed in the following terms in Budhu Lal v. Chattu Gope (3) "the Criminal Procedure Code does not contain a provision corresponding to section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code; but that section does not lay down any new principle, it merely embodies a legislative recognition of the inherent power of the Court to make such order as may be necessary for the ends of justice. This inherent power is in no sense restricted in application to civil cases; it is equally applicable to criminal matters. The power is not capriciously or arbitrarily exercised; it is exercised ex debito justitiæ, to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone Courts exist; but the Court in the exercise of such inherent power must be careful to see that its decision is based on sound general principles and is not in conflict with them or with the intentions of the Legislature as indicated in statutory provisions." This was not a novel proposition nor a new departure, for the inherent power of the Court had been occasionally recognised in earlier cases. Thus, in Ram Chandra Mistry v. Nobin Mirdha (4) when the Court was invited to apply, to an order made by a Criminal Court, the elementary principle enunciated by the Judicial Committee in Rodger v. Comptoir, d'Escompte de Paris (5) that it is the duty of all Courts to take care that the act of the Court does no injury to any of the suitors. Mr. Justice Hill observed that in a case which the Court considered to be a fit one in all respects for its application, the Court would not hesitate to enforce the principle referred to. The statement of this principle by Lord Cairns in the case before the Judicial Committee just mentioned is couched in terms of great generality and may be usefully re-called in this connection.

"One of the first and highest duties of all Courts, is to take care that the act of the Court does no injury to any of the suitors, and when the expression 'the act of the Court' is used, it does not mean merely the act of the Primary Court, or of any intermediate Court of Appeal, but the act of the Court as a whole, from the lowest Court which entertains jurisdiction over the matter up to the highest Court which finally disposes of the case. It is the duty of the aggregate of those Tribunals, if I may use the expression, to take care that no act of the Court in the course of the whole of the proceedings does an injury to the suitors in the Court."

Again, in Ahmed Ali v. Keeno Khan (22), when Mr. Justice Brett was pressed with the argument that the High Court could not interfere with an order passed by a Magistrate under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code, because there was no express provision in that behalf, the learned Judge referred to Ram Chandra Mistry v. Nobin Mirdha (4) as showing that the Court had an "inherent jurisdiction," though it became unnecessary for him to invoke the aid of the inherent power of the Court because, as pointed out in Manki v. Bhagwanti (23), the provision contained in section 423 (1) (d), read with section 439, was comprehensive enough to include the power required to direct cancellation of the order made under section 522. Again, the decision in Lakshman Govind Nirgude, In re (24) contains a clear recognition of the doctrine of inherent power. It has been contended, however, that cases may be found in the books which tend to show that the theory of inherent power of a Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court, has been sometimes, if not actually repudiated, at any rate, overlooked, and reference has been made to Basudeb Purma Gossain v. Naziruddin (25), Queen Empress v. Fateh Ohand (26), Prayag Mahaton v. Gobind Mahaton (8), Ariu Mea v. Arman Mea (9), Surjya Kumar Upadhyaya v. Dinabandhu Pal (27), Karimuddi Fakir v. Naimuddi Kamirai (28), Tulshi Ram v. Abrar Ahmad (7), Annapurnabai, In the matter of (12), Ratanlal Rangildas, In re (11), Devidin Durgaprasad, In re (13), Kunpammal, In the matter of (14) and Chenga Reddi v. Ramasamy Gounden (6) as typical illustrations. No useful purpose would be served by an analysis of the facts of each of these cases and of the opinions expressed thereon, though it may be a question whether all of them really ignore or overlook the doctrine of inherent power. It is sufficient to state that, in some instances the matter was not approached from this point of view, while, in others, even if the doctrine of inherent power were invoked, the result would not have been different; but none of the cases expressly repudiates the doctrine of inherent power, though several proceed on the assumption that a specific provision of the Criminal Procedure Code must be pointed out to justify an order made by a Subordinate Court or an order which the High Court is invited to pass. This narrow view of the powers and duties of a Court of Justice, whether Civil or Criminal, cannot now be maintained. The truth is, that, in respect of Civil Courts, the theory of inherent power, though enunciated by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in 1868 in Hurro Ohunder Roy v. Shcorodhoney Debia (29), was lost sight of for many years, and was familiarised only after it had been re stated and reaffirmed in 1903 in Hukam Ohand Boid v.

Kamalanand Singh (30) and recognised thereafter in express terms in section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. In the case of Criminal Courts, the theory of inherent power has had a still more uncertain career, but, as we have seen, it was welcomed without hesitation in 1898, found some recognition in the Criminal Procedure Code of that year, and was reaffirmed in 1912. We feel no doubt whatever that the doctrine of inherent power, as enunciated in the cases of Pulin Behary Das v. Emperor (2) and restated in Budhu Lal v. Chattu Gope (3), is well-established on principle and cannot be successfully questioned.

The second point which requires examination is, what are the directions which should be given for the disposal of the lac and the sale proceeds of the portion already sold. It is manifestly impossible to restore the physical condition of things as they existed when the proceedings under section 145 were instituted; for the twigs cannot be re-attached to the trees nor can the lac be replaced on them. The tenants have contended that as restitutio in integrum is impossible, the lac yet unsold should be sold and the entire sale-proceeds divided amongst them rateably, in proportion to the number of trees on the holding of each tenant. This course cannot be adopted for an obvious reason. Such a distribution as that suggested must be made on the assumption that, apart from possible questions of title, all the lac when attached and removed was in the possession of the tenants. This, however, is strenuously controverted on behalf of the Zemindars and Adhyars, and the Court is not in a position to make an assumption in favour of either party, because there has been no enquiry, summary or otherwise, in the proceedings which have been cancelled as instituted without jurisdiction. It is equally plain that the lac and the money should not remain in the custody of the Zemindars and Adhyars who are the other party to the proceedings. In such circumstances, the best course to adopt is to keep the property in the custody of the Court pending decision by a Civil Court on the question of title to the lac. [Of. Ohenga Beddi v. Ramasamy Gounden (6)]. Such a course was commended by Lord Maenaghten in Hood Barrs v. Heriot (31) where he regretted that the Court of Appeal had not thought it proper to hold a fund in media pending appeal to the House of Lords on the question of title thereto; see also the judgment of Lord Watson in Peruvian Guano Co. v. Dreyfus (32).

The result is that the Rule is made absolute. The lac and the net sale-proceeds of the lac already sold (after deduction of incidental charges) will forthwith be placed in the custody of the Subordinate Judge of Malda, who will take steps, as early as practicable, to have the lac sold. The entire sale-proceeds will constitute one fund which will remain in the custody of the Court of the Subordinate Judge. The first party will be at liberty to institute a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Malda for declaration of their right to the lac and for incidental reliefs. If such a suit is instituted on or before the 1st December 1920, the fund will continue to be held by the Subordinate Judge to await the result of the suit. If, on the other hand, the suit is not instituted by the first party on or before the 1st December 1920, the Subordinate Judge will distribute the fund amongst the tenants on the basis of the record prepared by the Police Authorities as to the number of trees on the holding of each tenant from which the lac was taken. The distribution will be made rateably, in proportion to the number of trees on each holding; but this will not affect the right of the tenants inter se to have the question of apportionment amongst themselves decided by a Civil Court.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 287, 310—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 54—Previous conviction, evidence of, when may be tendered—Prosecution witnesses, re-call of, for cross-examination—Discretion, improper exercise of.

Where the statement of an accused person to a Committing Magistrate contains an admission as to his previous conviction, that portion of his evidence should not be read at the close of the prosecution evidence at his trial in the Court of Session, before the assessors have given their opinion, as, to do so is to contravene the principle of section 310 of the Criminal Procedure Code and is sufficient to vitiate the trial. [p. 331, col. 2.]

It is illegal, during the course of the trial of an accused person for a substantive offence, to record evidence of a previous conviction. Such evidence amounts to evidence of bad character and is expressly forbidden by section 54 of the Evidence Act, unless and until the accused offers evidence of good character [p. 332, col. 1.]

The refusal of a Judge to re-call prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, amounts to an improper exercise of discretion, sufficient to vitiate the trial. [p. 332, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The appellants, Teka Ahir, Abhilakh Ahir and Ramdhani Ahir, were tried by the Sessions Judge of Saran on charges under sections 395 and 402 of the Penal Code. Abhilakh was further charged under section 325 of the Code of having caused grievous hurt to Moti Nonia. Teka and Ramdhani were also charged with previous convictions under section 400 of the Code. The learned Sessions Judge has convicted the accused of the charges laid against them and has sentenced Teka and Ramdhani to transportation for life and Abhilakh to 10 years' rigorous imprisonment.

The trial commenced on the 14th June and terminated on the 23rd when the opinion of the assessors was taken. A note in the order-sheet of the 14th of June shows that the charges were read to the accused and they were asked to plead to them. On the 23rd June there is a note that the accused Teka and Ramdhani admitted previous convictions. None of these notes in the order sheet shows as to whether and when the charges relating to the previous convictions were read out and explained. If that was done on the 14th of June it was illegal and in direct contravention of section 310 of the Code which requires that the charge of previous conviction shall not be read out nor the accused be asked to plead thereto unless and until the accused was convicted of the subsequent offence. If it was read out on the 23rd after the opinion of the assessors was recorded, there should have been a clear note in the order-sheet to that effect. After the close of the prosecution evidence the statement of the accused made in the Commitment Court was read to the assessors and was admitted under section 287 of the Code. It contained an admission of the accused as to their previous conviction. The portion of the statement relating to the previous conviction should not have been allowed to be read until the assessors had given their opinion. To do that was to contravene the principle of section 310 of the Code. No doubt section 287 permits a previous statement of the accused before the Committing Magistrate to be read as a part of the prosecution case. This refers only to the statement relating to the subsequent offence. The portion relating to the previous conviction can be read under this section only when the accused is put on his trial for the previous conviction after the close of the trial for the subsequent offence. That stage had not arisen in the present case and hence the admission of the accused contained in the statement relating to the previous conviction was illegally read to the assessors before they had given their opinion on the subsequent offence. Not only that, but the actual evidence of the previous conviction was permitted to be recorded on the 17th June during the course of the trial of the accused for the substantive offence. The objection of the accused to the admission of this evidence was overruled by the learned Sessions Judge upon the ground that it was relevant to prove the state of the mind of the accused under sections 6 and 14 of the Evidence Act. The view taken by the learned Sessions Judge was entirely erroneous. No question of the state of the mind of the accused pertinently arose in the trial of the present case under section 395 and 402. In any event, the evidence of the previous conviction amounted to evidence of bad character of the accused which is expressly forbidden by section 54 of the Evidence Act unless and until the accused had offered evidence of good character. Under this section as well as under section 310 the evidence of the prosecution witness No. 17 was illegally admitted.

The reason for not permitting the previous conviction to be proved or even to be made known during the trial of the accused for the main offence is that the fact of the previous conviction may prejudice the accused by creating an adverse opinion in the mind of the Judge, Jury or the assessors. Upon this principle the reading of the charge, the previous statement of the accused and the evidence relating to the previous conviction are scrupulously suspended till the accused is convicted of the substantive offence, or the opinion of the assessors has been obtained. The learned Judge has contravened the aforesaid principle and the express provision of the Code. This has vitiated the trial of the accused and is sufficient to set aside the conviction.

But the learned Sessions Judge has further prejudiced the accused in not giving them an opportunity to cross-examine six principle witnesses on behalf of the prosecution who were examined on the 14th of June when the trial commenced. On that date the accused, no doubt, themselves put a few questions to the witnesses. The next day (15th June) a petition was filed by a Pleader on behalf of the accused stating that wrong information was given to their man in the village by the Police, that the date fixed was the 17th, and not the 14th and consequently they could not be ready to cross-examine the witnesses on the latter date. The learned Sessions Judge disbelieved the allegation and refused to recall the witnesses for cross-examination. To our mind the learned Sessions Judge did not use his discretion properly, and the result has been that the trial of the accused of serious offences has been without cross-examination of the principal witnesses on behalf of the prosecution. The trial must, therefore, be set aside.

The question then arises whether there should be a re-trial in the present case. To our mind, upon the evidence recorded in the case, the conviction of the accused under section 402 of the Penal Code is not sustainable. That section makes it penal for five or more persons to assemble together for the purposes of committing dacoity and every one among them is liable to the penalty of the section. The accused are said to have been seen together at two places: (1) Nautan Bazar, and (2) Pathphera. For each of these places two witnesses have been examined. Sheo Tahal and Harihar Koeri speak as to the accused having been seen assembling with others at an old school building near the Bazaar. The first says five or six persons; the second says four or five including the accused. These witnesses are doubtful as to the number not being less than five. The benefit of this doubt must be given to the accused and, hence, the principal element of the section, which requires the number to be not less than five, is wanting.

Again, it is admitted that Nautan Bazar is a big Bazaar, and is situated on a public road, a place not far off from the villages of the accused. The fact that they were seen in a place in the Bazaar does not necessarily lead to the inference that they were there with any criminal intent, and not with the legitimate purpose of doing some bazaar work. The learned Sessions Judge has given the respective dates on which these persons identified the accused as having been seen on the Bazaar day. I need not go over the same ground again, but it is clear that the witnesses did not timely disclose to the Police the fact that they had seen the accused persons at the Nautan Bazar on the night of the occurrence. The learned Sessions Judge has not recorded a finding of firm conviction in his mind as to the accused persons having been seen at Nautan Bazar. We regard the evidence as not worthy of any credit and have no hesitation in rejecting it. Equally incredible is the testimony of the accused persons having been seen at the other place, Pachphera, on the same evening. It is sufficient to discard the evidence by reading only the evidence of P. W. Nos. 20 and 21, Ram Charitar Rai and Sawdagar Rai. The first man saw ten or twelve persons going from south to north on the sarkari sarak (Government road). He had seen Teka and Ramdhani five or six years ago and had not seen them for the last two or three years, still he questioned them as to where they were going and is supposed to have retained in his mind a vivid impression of the faces of these two men seen on a dim twilight evening. We, therefore, reject the evidence of the assembling of the accused at the second place also.

The result is, that we find that there is not sufficient evidence for permitting a re-trial of any of the accused under section 402 of the Penal Code. We set aside the conviction and the sentence of all the accused under that section. Ramdhani was charged only under the section and he is, therefore, acquitted altogether and must be set at liberty. As to accused Teka and Abhilakh, we direct that they be re-tried by the Sessions Judge of Saran of charges other than under section 402 standing against them. In the circumstances, we refrain from going into the merits of the case.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—I entirely agree with the order that has just been passed by my learned brother. But the serious irregularities committed by the Sessions Judge, and the unfairness with which the accused were treated during the course of the trial demand that I should add a few observations of my own.

Subordinate Courts in India ought to remember that in trying cases the reputation not only of the Courts, but also of the law which they have to administer are at stake and they should not by their conduct afford grounds for complaint either by the prosecution or by the accused. This case, however, is one where the learned Sessions Judge has by his orders given occasion to very serious complaint by the accused and I now propose to deal with them seriatim and in detail.

The accused were sent up for trial for offences which are heinous and for which serious penalties have been provided by the law. The learned Sessions Judge, therefore, ought to have given legitimate facilities to the accused to satisfy the Court that the charges against them were not justifiable. Far from doing that, the learned Sessions Judge in this case, in my opinion, committed such irregularities the like of which, I am glad to say, we do not find being committed every day.

The first serious irregularity that the learned Sessions Judge committed was, that he allowed evidence of previous conviction to be placed before him and the assessors who were aiding him, before the trial closed. The learned Sessions Judge, however, tries to justify this procedure under section 14 of the Evidence Act. My learned brother has already pointed out, and I fully agree with him, that that provision of law is not applicable to a case under sections 395, 325 and 402 of the Penal Code. It was held as early as 1849 in the case of Manjura Bai v. Queen Empress (1) under section 401 of the Code 'that evidence of the character of the accused not being a fact in issue in the offence of belonging to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft punishable under section 401 of the Penal Code, evidence of bad character or reputation of the accused is inadmissible for the purpose of proving the commission of that offence,' and it was pointed out by the learned Judges at page 143 that, "it was unnecessary to repeat the grounds upon which the learned Judges held in the case of Empress v. Naba Kumar Patnaik (2), on consideration of section 54 of the Evidence Act and section 14 of the Evidence Act as well as the terms of section 310 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that such evidence is inadmissible as evidence of bad character because we concur in the judgment delivered." The correctness of this decision, I am aware, was doubted in the case of Bonni v. Emperor (3). It was pointed out there that such evidence was admissible in a gang case, but I am not aware of any case in which evidence of previous conviction has been held to be admissible in a trial on charges under sections 395 and 402 of the Penal Code. Gang cases stand upon a different footing from cases for offences under sections 395 and 402 of the Code. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that where the charges against the accused are under sections 402 and 395, evidence of previous conviction is not admissible under section 14 of the Evidence Act. Apart from that, the whole principle of British criminal jurisprudence condemns the prejudice which may be caused to the accused by the admission of previous conviction before he has been found guilty of the offences on which he has been arraigned. Assessors and Jury are human beings and they are sure to be influenced by any previous conviction, which may be proved against the accused. I would, therefore, on general principles, as well as under the provisions of the Evidence Act and the Code of Criminal Procedure, discard this evidence. This evidence, however, having been admitted our course is perfectly clear. The conviction of and sentence upon the accused must be set aside. If that had been all that the learned Sessions Judge had done, I would have held that he had simply committed an error of law; but the learned Sessions Judge denied to the accused that fairness of trial to which they are entitled under the law. The case was begun on the 14th June. On the 15th June an application was filed asking for the recall of the witnesses who were examined in-chief on the previous day on the ground that the accused had not been correctly informed of the date of the trial. The learned Sessions Judge, mainly on the ground that the Public Prosecutor objected to his petition, refused the application. In my opinion, he wrongly surrendered his judicial discretion to the opposition offered by the Public Prosecutor. The learned Sessions Judge was again requested to recall the prosecution witnesses who were examined in-chief on the 15th. That application suffered the same fate. The result was that about ten witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution were not cross examined at all by the accused except accused No. 1. This improper exercise of judicial discretion has, in my opinion, very seriously affected the trial and on these two grounds I entirely agree with my learned brother that the conviction of, and the sentences on the accused must be set aside.

As regards the accused Ramdhani, my learned brother has fully dealt with the evidence which has been adduced on behalf of the Crown in support of the charge against him and I would only add that the flimsy evidence which was adduced on behalf of the prosecution against him ought to have been discarded by the learned Sessions Judge. I also agree that the other two accused should now be tried on a charge under sections 395 and 325 of the Penal Code. In doing so, we express absolutely no opinion on the merits of the evidence against them. It is sufficient to say that their case has been prejudiced by the admission of irrelevant and inadmissible evidence and it would be difficult for us to dissect the whole of the evidence in the case and consider only that which is relevant. That we now leave to the learned Sessions Judge to do and we hope and trust that the learned Sessions Judge will bring upon the evidence that judicial consideration which we expect from him.

The result is, that I agree with my learned brother that the conviction of and sentences on Teka Ahir and Abhilakh Ahir be set aside and that they be re-tried on charges under sections 395 and 325 of the Penal Code. The prisoner Ramdhani is acquitted.

The acquittal of an accused person in a case under section 147 of the Penal Code, is no bar to his trial for an offence under section 186 of the Code. [p. 336, col. 1.]

The execution of a writ of attachment after expiry of the date fixed for its return is illegal, and resistance to such execution is not an offence under section 186 of the Penal Code. [p. 336, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which

this application arises may be shortly stated as follows. In execution of a decree against a minor, who is the nephew of the petitioner, writ of attachment was taken out and the complainant decree-holder, acting as identifier, accompanied the peon to execute the writ but was assaulted and severely injured by the petitioner. The peon fled away and reported the occurrence on the 8th April 1913. The petitioner was tried on the complaint on behalf of the decree-holder under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code and was acquitted. Subsequently, the complainant decree-holder applied for sanction to the Munsif for the prosecution of the petitioner under sections 153 and 186 of the Indian Penal Code. The Munsif granted the sanction for prosecution of the petitioner. The order granting sanction was appealed against to the Judge and then to this Court but was maintained. Ultimately, the petitioner was tried and convicted under section 186, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment. An appeal was preferred to the learned District Judge of Bhagalpur who upheld the conviction and sentence and this application has been filed by the petitioner against his conviction and sentence.

The first point that has been raised by the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner is, that the trial of the petitioner under section 186 of the Indian Penal Code was invalid and incompetent as his acquittal in the section 147 case was a bar to his prosecution under section 186. It is pointed out that the common object of the unlawful assembly in the section 147 case was said to be the resistance of the peon in the discharge of his duty which is the offence for which the accused has been tried and convicted in the present case. Section 403, clause (1) runs as follows: "A person who has once been tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction for an offence and convicted or acquitted of such offence, shall, while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, not be liable to be tried again for the same offence, nor on the same facts for any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made under section 236 or for which he might have been convicted under section 237". Admittedly, section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, does not apply but it is contended that, under section 237, Criminal Procedure Code, he could be convicted for an offence under section 186 though no charge under section 186 has been framed. I regret I cannot accept this contention as sound. In my opinion, section 237 is limited to cognate offences, and it cannot, by any stretch of reasoning, be contended that offences under sections 147 and 186 of the Indian Penal Code are cognate offences. They are distinct offences with absolutely nothing in common and, therefore, in my opinion, section 403, clause (1), does not apply to the case and the acquittal of the accused in the 147, Indian Penal Code case is no bar to his trial for an offence under section 186, Indian Penal Code. In my opinion, this case is fully covered by section 403, clause (2), which lays down that "a person acquitted or convicted of any offence may be afterwards tried for any distinct offence for which a separate charge might have been made against him on the former trial under section 235 sub-section (1)". This contention of the learned Counsel is, therefore, overruled.

The second objection that he has raised is that the writ is not legal, inasmuch as it is issued against a minor for whom no guardian had been appointed under Order XXXII, rule 3. The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the complainant who appeared in support of the conviction, with my permission, urged that Order XXXII, rule 3 does not apply to execution proceedings. The point, in my opinion, is not free from difficulty, and, if this had been the only point upon which this application could be disposed of, I would have referred the matter to a larger Bench. I may, however, record, as my opinion, that even if Order XXXII, rule 3, does not directly apply to execution proceedings, the principle underlying Order XXXII, rule 3, must be held to apply to such proceedings. It has been held in the cases reported as Govindrami Naidu v. Alagirisami Naidu (1) and Virupakshappa v. Shidappa (2) that Order XXXII, rule 7 applies to execution proceedings and I do not see any reason why Order XXXII, rule 3 should not be held to apply to such proceedings. In my opinion, therefore, the writ was not a legal one. But, as I have already said, I do not propose to base my decision of this application on that ground.

The third ground which, in my opinion, is fatal to the conviction of the accused is that the returnable date fixed in the writ was the 2nd April, but the attachment was sought to be made on the 8th of April. I have examined the ordersheet in the execution case and also the writ and it is perfectly clear that the date fixed for the return of the writ originally was the 2nd and by some manipulation that date has been altered, both in the writ and in the ordersheet, by some one other than the Court, and it is also clear that this alteration took place after the occurrence. I cannot conceive that the alteration made in the ordersheet was made by the Munsif, because there is no provision of law under which he can make subsequent alterations in his order-sheet without even initialling such alteration. A perusal of the order of the Munsif, dated the 19th March 1918, will show clearly that the writ of attachment was ordered to be issued and the 2nd of April was fixed for its return. That being so, the writ of attachment was attempted to be served on a date long after the date of return in the writ. This makes the execution of the writ absolutely illegal. It has been held in the case reported in Jagpat Koeri v. Emperor (3) that "resistance to a Constable endeavouring to effect an arrest on an invalid warrant did not amount to an offence under section 353 of the Indian Penal Code." The same view of the law has been laid down in the cases reported in Emperor v. Ganeshi Lal (4) and Empress v. Amar Nath (5). If, however, in resisting the peon in execution of an invalid writ the accused had exceeded the right of private defence he would have been held guilty. It appears, however, from the evidence as well as on the findings arrived at by the Trial Court that the peon was not even touched, as regards the attack on the decree holder, that point is not a matter for consideration in this case. That was the subject-matter of the trial under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code in which the accused were acquitted. The result, therefore, is that the conviction and sentence of the accused must be set aside on the ground that the writ, the execution of which he had resisted, was not a valid writ.

Conviction set aside.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—So far as I can understand the facts of this case, it appears to me that, probably, the provisions of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, offered the Magistrate the best means of settling the dispute between the two parties. But in view of the Full Bench decision in the case of Emperor v. Abbas (1), I do not think it is open to this Court to say that the Magistrate must proceed under section 145 and not under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code. As the Magistrate has exercised his discretion I think we are not entitled to interfere. I, therefore, discharge this Rule.

GREAVES, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACCT. C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Rankin in a suit for recovery of money. The plaintiff-respondent makes his claim in connection with a contract, dated the 22nd December, 1915, entered into by the defendants with the Corporation of Calcutta for the supply of stone metal. The plaintiff was not a party to this contract, but his case is that the defendants agreed to pay him, (1) a sum of Rs. 20,000 if he could secure acceptance of their offer by the Corporation, and defrayed, at his own risk, the preliminary expenses in connection therewith; (2) brokerage at two annas for every hundred cubic feet of stone metal delivered to the Corporation during the subsistence of the contract, and (3) two-fifths share of the profits of the business which was to be placed under his management for the same period. The plaintiff alleges that he was paid Rs. 5,000 by way of preliminary expenses, but has received nothing under the other two heads. The contract with the Corporation was to be in operation for twenty years, and twenty lakhs cubic feet of stone metal were to be supplied annually. Consequently, the plaintiff would be entitled to receive Rs. 2,500 a year for twenty years on account of brokerage. The profits are calculated by the plaintiff at Rs. 50,000 a year; on this basis, his share of profits would be Rs. 20,000 a year for twenty years. The grievance of the plaintiff is that, although it was mainly through his efforts that the defendants were able to secure the contract, they have repudiated the arrangement made with him and have falsely denied that he was of any assistance to them in the matter. He accordingly claims damages for breach of contract, although no transactions have yet taken place between the defendants and the Corporation; his claim is for nearly three lakhs of rupees; namely, Rs. 15,000 for preliminary expenses, Rs. 50,000 for loss of brokerage during twenty years, and Rs. 2,29,398-6-5 for loss of profits during the same period. Mr. Justice Rankin has given him a decree for Rs. 57,000 in all, with costs on Scale No. 3, that is, Rs. 15,000 for preliminary expenses, Rs. 20,000 for brokerage and Rs. 22,000 on account of loss of profits. The defendants have appealed to this Court, and have disputed the claim as greatly exaggerated, if not entirely unfounded. They have also urged that costs on Scale No. 3 should not have been allowed. In our opinion, the appeal must fail on the merits, but the order for costs cannot be supported.

As regards the first point, namely, the claim for preliminary expenses, the substantial point in controversy is, whether the defendants agreed to pay the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 20,000 for preliminary expenses, or only such sum not exceeding Rs. 20,000 as the plaintiff might find it actually necessary to spend on account of preliminary expenses. Mr. Justice Rankin has accepted the story of the plaintiff that the defendants agreed to pay him Rs. 20,000 provided the contract was secured, and that a part payment of Rs. 5,000 was made. We are not prepared to dissent from this conclusion. In our view, the plaintiff has carried out his part of the bargain, and is entitled to the balance of the sum agreed upon, that is, Rs. 15,000. It has been faintly suggested, however, on behalf of the appellants that, what is euphemistically called "preliminary expenses" included in a large measure sums of money paid to various influential persons with a view to secure their assistance in the acceptance of the tender of the defendants by the Calcutta Corporation. To put the matter plainly, the imputation is, that this agreement to place Rs. 20,000 at the disposal of the plaintiff for so-called preliminary expenses is against public policy. Now, it cannot be disputed that, as was laid down in Ledu v. Hira Lal (1) and Montefiore v. Menlay Motor Components Co. (2), it is contrary to public policy to induce public officers, for money or other valuable consideration, to use their position and influence to procure a benefit. An agreement of this character holds out an inducement to Public Officers to act with partiality or from corrupt motives or to bias them in the discharge of their official duties; such conduct, if tolerated, would sap the foundation on which official honesty rests and legalise temptations which would lead away from the path of rectitude many an official who, without such inducements, might perform his duty. These principles are indisputable: but, in the case before us, the materials on the record are not sufficient to justify the application of these rules. Indeed, the evidence does not appear to have been expressly directed to this point, for the obvious reason that, neither the plaintiff nor the defendants would be over anxious to disclose the alleged secrets. The award of Rs. 15,000 for preliminary expenses must, consequently, be confirmed.

As regards the second point, the plaintiff claimed Rs. 50,000 as brokerage at the rate of Rs. 2,500 a year for twenty years. Mr. Justice Rankin has awarded Rs. 20,000 only. The defendants contend that the award is excessive, specially as the plaintiff seeks a decree even before the first instalment has become due. Now, there can be no doubt that a breach of contract may take place before the time fixed for performance of the contract has arrived, where, as here, the promisor has repudiated the contract. In such an event, the promisee may elect to sue him for breach of the contract without waiting for the time fixed for performance. This principle applies where the contract has to be performed in instalments; in such cases, the question may arise, whether the refusal to perform any particular part of the contract amounts to a repudiation of the whole contract or not. No such question, however, arises in the present case, because the defendants have repudiated in its entirety their arrangement with the plaintiff. The point here, consequently, reduces to the proper mode of assessment of damages in the event of what has sometimes been called—felicitously though, perhaps, not logically—"anticipatory breach of a contract." Lord Wrenbury observed in Bradley v. Newsum Sons & Co. (3): "The expression (anticipatory breach of contract) is, I think, unfortunate. In Hochster v. De la Tour (4), the leading case upon this subject, Lord Campbell made no use of the expression in his judgment. It is used several times by Lord Esher in Johnstone v. Milling (5), but not by either of his colleagues. The words used are, of course, immaterial, unless they lead, in course of time, to an erroneous impression. There can be no breach of an obligation in anticipation. It is no breach not to do an act at a time when its performance is not yet contractually due. If there be a contract to do an act at a future time, and the promisor, before that time arrives, says that when the time does arrive he will not do it, he is repudiating his promise which binds him in the present, but is in no default in not doing an act which is only to be done in the future. He is recalling or repudiating his promise, and that is wrongful. His breach is a breach of a presently binding promise, not an anticipatory breach of an act to be done in the future. To take Bowen, L. J.'s words in Johnstone v. Milling (5), it is 'a wrongful renunciation of the contractual relation into which he has entered.' The result is, that the other party to the contract has an option either to ignore the repudiation or to avail himself of it. If he does the latter, it is still, by consensus of the parties, and not by some superior force, that the contract is determined."

Where there is such a breach by an unqualified and positive refusal to perform a contract though the performance thereof is not yet due, the injured party may bring his action at once for recovery of damages. The damages for breach of a contract by renunciation thereof before performance is due, are measured by what the injured party would have suffered by the continued breach of the other party down to the time of complete performance, less any abatement by reason of circumstances of which he ought reasonably to have availed himself. The substance of the matter then is, that the damages are assessed as on the date of the breach; nevertheless, they are to be a compensation for the loss caused by depriving the plaintiff of the benefit of the contract as it was originally made. The doctrine of anticipatory breach is not a doctrine which fictitiously moves the performance ahead to the time of the repudiation, and regards the repudiation as a failure to perform the contract. The anticipatory breach takes effect as a premature destruction of the contract rather than as a failure to perform it in its terms. The damage caused by such a premature destruction is, to be sure, due to the consequent failure to secure performance, but this is a failure to secure performance according to its original terms, that is, performance at the time and place when performance was required according to the terms of the agreement. Since the injury is the destruction of the contract regarded as an article of property, the measure of damages is the value of such property at the time of its destruction; but since the value of a contract will ordinarily be determined by the benefit which its performance would confer, the exact measure of damages upon an anticipatory breach is, in the ordinary case, precisely the same as it would be if the repudiation were not accepted as a breach and the injured party brought a suit, after the time of performance, for the non-performance at the time set. In other words, though the plaintiff sues at once for an anticipatory breach of the contract his damages are to be assessed according to the cost of performance, not at the time and place of the breach, but at the time and place set for performance. These principles were applied by this Court in the case of Bilasiram Thakursidass v. Ezekiel Abraham Gubboy (6), where reliance was placed upon the decisions in Roper v. Johnson (7), Frost v. Knight (8), Brown v. Muller (9).

Now, what is the position of the defendants if the claim for brokerage put forward by the plaintiff is tested in the light of these principles? The essence of the transaction was that the defendants agreed to pay the plaintiff Rs. 50,000 as brokerage on account of services rendered by him in securing them the contract. The sum, however, was not payable in one instalment on a single specified date; the payment was to be distributed over twenty years at the rate of Rs. 2,500 a year. If the defendants had not wrongfully rescinded the contract before the time for performance had arrived, the plaintiff would have received Rs. 2,500 annually for twenty years. The result of the renunciation by the defendants is, that the plaintiff has become forthwith entitled at his election, to sue for damages for breach of the entire contract and the damages must be so calculated that he may be placed, so far as pecuniary benefit is concerned, as nearly as possible in the position he would have occupied if the defendants had carried out the contract. The qualification that the damages are to be abated to the extent that the plaintiff might have mitigated his loss does not apply in the circumstances of this particular claim where a definite sum was payable by the defendants to the plaintiff as the value of services already rendered by him. Consequently, the plaintiff is prima facie entitled to the present value of the annuity of Rs. 2,500 for twenty years; this may easily be shown by calculation to amount to Rs. 31,155 or Rs. 28,674, according as the rate of interest is assumed to be five per cent. or six per cent. per annum. As the plaintiff has been awarded Rs. 20,000 only, that sum is by no means excessive.

As regards the third point, there can be no room for reasonable doubt upon the evidence that the defendants agreed to place the plaintiff in charge of the work for the whole period of twenty years and to pay him for services to be rendered not a fixed salary but a share of the profits. Mr. Justice Rankin has calculated the average annual profit likely to result from the execution of the contract at Rs. 20,000 a year for twenty years. Consequently, it may be taken that if the plaintiff had been entrusted with supervision of the work pursuant to the agreement he would have been in receipt of two-fifths of this sum, that is, Rs. 8,000 a year. The plaintiff in his plaint estimated his share of the net annual profits at Rs. 20,000 and demanded as damages the present value of an annuity of Rs. 20,000 a year for twenty years on the assumption that the rate of interest would be six per cent. per annum. This clearly was a greatly exaggerated claim and has not been allowed by Mr. Justice Rankin, who has given the plaintiff a decree under this head for Rs. 22,000 only. It is manifest that the present claim is covered by the principle previously enunciated, namely, that when repudiation of a contract by the promisor has been acted upon by the promisee who has treated the contract as ended, though damages are to be measured by ascertaining what would have arisen by non-performance at the appointed time, they should be abated by reason of circumstances of which the promisee should have reasonably availed himself. Reference may, in this connection, be made to the decision in Hochster v. De la Tour (4). There the plaintiff had agreed to serve the defendant and the defendant had undertaken to employ the plaintiff, as a courier, for three months; but the defendant subsequently informed him that he had changed his mind and would not require his services. The Court ruled that the refusal of the defendant constituted a breach, giving the plaintiff an immediate right of action. Lord Campbell, C. J. added: "Instead of remaining idle and laying out money in preparations which must be useless, he is at liberty to seek service under another employer, which would go in mitigation of the damages to which he would otherwise be entitled for a breach of the contract." To the same effect is the decision of Cockburn, C. J., in Frost v. Knight (8) where, after referring to the case of Danube and Black Sea Railway and Kustendie Harbour Co. v. Xenos (10), Avery v. Bowden (11), Reid v. Hoskins (12), Barrick v. Buba (13), he added that the promisee who elects to treat the repudiation of the other party as a wrongful putting an end to the contract, may at once bring his action as on a breach of it, "in which he will be entitled to such damages as would have arisen from the non-performance of the contract at the appointed time, subject, however, to abatement in respect of any circumstances which may have afforded him the means of mitigating his loss." The doctrine recognised in these cases has been repeatedly applied by the Supreme Court of the United States. Thus, in Pierce v. Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Co. (14) it was held that on discharge from a contract of employment, the party discharged may elect to treat the contract as absolutely and finally broken and recover in an action the full value of the contract to him at the time of the breach, including all that he would have received in the future as well as in the past, deducting any sum that he might have earned or that he might earn thereafter. Horst (15). We are not unmindful that in the present case, the plaintiff was to be paid not a fixed salary but a share of the profits. This makes no difference in the application of the principle. As pointed out by Sir Robert Collier in Cowasjee Nanabhoy v. Lallbhoy Vullubhoy (16), quoted with approval by Bankes, L. J., in Reigate v. Union Manufacturing Co. (17), the man who is paid by a salary is not necessarily affected by the prosperity or adversity of the company or even by its dissolution, while the man who agrees to be paid by a commission upon sales, speculates to a certain extent on the prosperity of the company. But in principle, the rights of the two persons stand on the same footing, subject to the difference that in the one case the amount of loss sustained is certain, in the other it is variable and uncertain. In both cases, however, there is, as Mr. Justice Rankin has pointed out, the inevitable uncertainty of life and health. Consequently, in circumstances like these, the damages cannot be assessed with any approach to mathematical accuracy. In view, however, of the fact that the Court below has assessed the damages at less than three years estimated profits, we are not prepared to hold that the award is excessive.

Finally, we have to consider the question of costs which have been allowed on Scale No. 3. Rule 93 of Chapter XXXVI of the Rules of Court prescribes the fees allowed to the Attorneys with reference to the importance and difficulty of the case, and lays down that, unless the class under which the case falls is determined by the Court, the costs will be taxed under class 1. For the purposes of the rule, cases are classified as short causes, ordinary causes and important causes. The appellants have contended that the present litigation falls within the description "ordinary causes." The respondent has not satisfied us why the suit should be taken out of the category of ordinary causes and classed as an important cause. It is plain that the suit does not cease to be an ordinary cause, merely because witnesses are examined at inordinate length or because the true agreement between the parties has to be spelt out of a lengthy correspondence. From enquiries made, we have ascertained that, till quite recent years, orders for taxation of costs under Scale No. 3 were, as might be expected, very sparingly made. In the case of Buldeo Narayan v. Scrymgeour (18) Paul, J., awarded costs on Scale No. 3 stating that: "This is an important case and the plaintiff has been put to much expense and his legal advisers have been obliged to exert themselves very much." On appeal, it was argued that costs on Scale No. 3 should only be given in very exceptional cases. Norman, C. J., and Phear, J., who heard the appeal set aside the order for costs on Scale No. 3 and directed each party to bear his own costs both of the original suit and of the appeal. Norman, C. J., stated that the award of costs on Scale No. 3 was very unusual, that such costs were rarely given and could only be given in important cases. In the case of Miller v. Gouripore Company Limited (19) Paul, J., again awarded costs on Scale No. 3, "to mark his sense of the grossly dishonest defence." On appeal it was contended that costs should not have been awarded on Scale No. 3. Phear and Macpherson, JJ., who heard the appeal reversed the decree and dismissed the suit with costs in both Courts on Scale No. 2. On the 20th February 1883 Pigot, J., allowed costs on Scale No. 3 in the suit of Prinsep v. Oranburgh (Suit No. 365 of 1882) for damages for infringement of copyright. It appears that the defence in that case completely collapsed and the decree was made practically by consent. On the 2nd March 1885 Cunningham and Wilson, JJ., allowed costs on Scale No. 3 and three Counsel on each side, in the suit of Bainath v. Graham (Suit No. 352 of 1882) and analogous suits, which were heard by a Bench of two Judges on account of their special importance. In a case heard on the Admiralty Side of this Court for 27 days [Drachenfels, In the matter of the steamship (20)] Ameer Ali, J., on the 31st January 1900, directed that the costs be allowed on the special scale in respect of three heads, as, in his opinion, the fees ordinarily allowed under those heads would not be sufficient to indemnify the plaintiffs against the costs incurred by them. The same course was followed by Stanley, J., on the 11th July 1900 in the suit of Nistarini Dassi v. Nundo Lal Bose (Suit No. 311 of 1898) which is reported upon other points; Nistarini Dassi v. Nundo Lal Bose (21) and Nundo Lal Bose v. Nistarini Dassi (22) the reason assigned for the order was that the fees ordinarily allowed under three of the headings would not be sufficient to indemnify the plaintiff against the costs necessarily incurred by her. On the 24th February 1903 Ameer Ali, J., allowed costs on Scale No. 3, only with regard to enquiries relating to certain items in the suit of Sarkies v. North German Fire Insurance Company (Suit No. 767 of 1901) "having regard to the length of the case and to the other circumstances," all other costs were ordered to be taxed on Scale No. 2. On the 9th December 1909 my learned brother, Mr. Justice Fletcher, allowed costs on Scale No. 3 as between Attorney and client, to be paid out of the estate in a testamentary matter; In the Goods of Daniel O'Brien, Hoyle v. Grange (Suit No. 3 of 1908); that case was compromised, but the question of costs was left to the Court. On the 3rd February 1919 Rankin, J., allowed costs on Scale No. 3 as between Attorney and client in the suit of Layalka v. Solaiman Ariff (Suit No. 729 of 1918), because "it was a tricky case and the defence was based upon fraud which might, for lack of care and attention, not have been discovered." In the present case, however, no reasons have been assigned in support of the order for the award of costs on Scale No. 3. It is obviously desirable that, when the Trial Court holds that costs should be awarded, not as in an "ordinary cause," but as in an "important cause," reasons should be assigned for what is, in the words of Norman, C. J., a very unusual course, rarely adopted. Such statement of reasons may ensure that the order is not made without adequate consideration, assure the litigant that the award has not been arbitrarily made, and materially assist the Court of appeal in determining whether judicial discretion has or has not been properly exercised. The appellants have rightly contended that, in this respect at least, the procedure should be analogous to what is followed in England where three Counsel are allowed only when very special reasons are established; Smith v. Fuller (23), Glamorgan County Council v. G. W. Ry. Co. (24), Peel v. London and North Western Railway Company (25), Wilson v. Wilson (26), Mercedes v. F. I. A. T. Co. (27). We must remember that, whatever the origin of costs might have been, they are now awarded, not as a punishment of the defeated party but as a recompense to the successful party for the expenses to which he had been subjected, or, as Lord Coke puts it, for whatever appears to the Court to be the legal expenses incurred by the party in prosecuting his suit or his defence. We are now far removed from the days when "the plaintiff who failed was punished in amercement pro falso clamore, and the defendant, where the judgment was against him, in miserecordia cum expensis litis, for his unjust deception of the plaintiff's right." The theory on which costs are now awarded to a plaintiff is that the default of the defendant made it necessary to sue him, and to a defendant is, that the plaintiff sued him without cause; costs are thus in the nature of incidental damages allowed to indemnify a party against the expense of successfully vindicating his rights in Court, and consequently the party to blame pays costs to the party without fault. These principles apply, not merely in the award of costs, but also in the award of extra allowance or special costs. Courts are authorised to allow such special allowance, not to inflict a penalty on the unsuccessful party, but to indemnify the successful litigant for actual expenses necessarily or reasonably incurred in what are designated as important cases or difficult and extraordinary cases. The object of the provision plainly is, not to give exemplary damages or smart money by way of punishment to a party for unsuccessfully bringing a difficult or extraordinary question, nor to enable the successful party to make anything in the way of gain or profit over and above the expenses for maintaining or defending such an action. The object and intention of the special scale is to enable the successful litigant to obtain indemnity for his expenses in very special or unusual circumstances, which would not be covered by the ordinary scale prescribed for all actions (other than short causes). It is manifest that no rigid definition of an important case can be framed; this much is clear that the character of a case cannot be determined by any particular phase of it, but various factors, such as the difficult and complicated nature of the questions of law and fact involved, the large amount in controversy, the length of time consumed in the trial, and like matters must be taken into account, not separately but in the aggregate. Finally, apart from all this, it must be remembered that, even though a case may appear important or difficult and extraordinary, the Court is not bound to award costs on the special scale.

The case before us cannot, in our opinion be rightly regarded as an "important case" which can be differentiated on any substantial ground from the typical suit for damages for breach of contract of service. On the other hand, we cannot ignore the fact that the claim was grossly exaggerated and that the amount awarded to the plaintiff is less than one-fifth of the sum claimed by him; indeed, if he had been moderate and reasonable in his demand, it is by no means improbable that the opposition might have been less strenuous and the litigation less protracted.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part and the decree is varied in the matter of costs which will be allowed on Scale No. 2 instead of Scale No. 3. As regards this appeal, we direct that each party do bear his own costs.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

Hindu Law—Widow, transfer by, without written instrument—Reversioner, suit by, for declaratory relief, whether maintainable—Declaration, whether should be granted.

In the case of a mere transfer of possession [on the part of a Hindu widow without a written instrument, a reversioner should not be given a declaratory decree, and, in any case, not unless there is cogent evidence that the conduct and declarations accompanying the transfer clearly constitute an injury and it is necessary to perpetuate testimony in favour of such reversioner. The reversioner has no such marketable title which can be depreciated by such acts. [p 34, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Chhindwara, dated the 6th of October 1917, confirming that of the Additional District Judge, Seoni, dated the 20th of July 1917.

Messrs. P. S. Kotval and A. C. Ray, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. B. Bhargava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue as the reversioners of Than Singh after the death of his daughter, Musammât Ujaria, defendant No. 1, who has succeeded to the sixteen-annas share of Mauza Gadarwara which was her father's separate property. The material allegations in the plaint are, that defendant No. 1 in March 1914 had mutation effected with regard to four-annas share of the village in the name of Malukchand, who is now represented in the suit by defendants Nos. 4 and 5, and a similar four annas share in the name of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 each. They filed copies of Musammât Ujaria's statement, dated the 29th January 1914, and the mutation order passed thereon. They pray for a declaration that the transfers, by virtue of which defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 are in possession of twelve annas share of Mauza Gadarwara, are inoperative after the death of defendant No. 1.

In the statement above referred to defendant No. 1, after stating that she is recorded as the malguzarin of the entire sixteen-annas share of the village since the death of her mother, adds: "I now wish to give Maluk Chand a four-annas share, Laxmi Chand a four-annas share and Birdhieband a four-annas share and to retain a four-annas share for my maintenance." The order referred to is the usual order passed in such cases. Both the Courts below have granted the plaintiffs the declaration asked for. The question I have to decide is, whether, as a matter of sound judicial discretion, a declaratory relief should have been granted in this case.

The parties are not at issue on any question of fact: hence there is no necessity of perpetuating testimony. The relationship of the plaintiffs is admitted. Defendant No. 1 claims to be only a limited owner. There has been no registered instrument to effect a transfer. It is not the plaintiffs' case, nor has it been found that there was a surrender by a Hindu female in favour of the next reversioner. The mutation order had not the effect of transferring the property. There was only a transfer of possession. It is not argued that the words accompanying the transfer "throw a cloud upon the plaintiffs' title." Defendant No. 1 claims to retain four-annas for her maintenance, meaning, I presume, a Hindu widow's qualified estate. The intended gift does not purport to be anything more than a gift of such interest as she possesses. The attempted transfer is ineffectual in law. It is competent to the defendant No. 1 to resume possession at any time within twelve years of the mutation. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that the plaintiffs have come into Court with a perfectly unnecessary declaratory suit, there being no transfer to be declared void as against the plaintiffs. In the case of a mere transfer of possession on the part of a Hindu widow without a written instrument, a reversioner should not be given a declaratory relief and, in any case, not unless there is cogent evidence that the conduct and declarations accompanying the transfer clearly constitute an injury and it is necessary to perpetuate testimony in favour of such reversioner. The reversioner has no such marketable title which can be depreciated by such acts.

There are cases which show that the Courts will not, as a rule, give declaratory decrees in the lifetime of the testator in respect of a Will made by a limited owner. The main reason is, that such a Will can be revoked at any time and can scarcely be regarded as a cloud upon the reversioner's title. The same principles apply in this case. It is, however, contended that I should not interfere with the discretion of the Courts below and, in support of this, reliance is placed upon Jaipal Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (1). There the pedigree of the reversioners was disputed and the widow claimed to be absolute owner under an oral Will of her husband. In other words, there was a dispute on matters of fact. Farther, as their Lordships point out, "in both Courts in India it was realized that, under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, a claim to a declaratory decree is not a matter of right, but that it rests with the judicial discretion of the Courts." For these reasons, their Lordships refused to interfere with the decree passed. In the case before me, as I have already stated, there was no issue of fact to be decided. The decree has been passed as a matter of course without reference to the question whether a declaratory decree should be given or not. The Courts below did not even realize that there has been no transfer of property as alleged by the plaintiffs but only a transfer of possession. I, therefore, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that the plaintiffs are not entitled to any declaratory relief. As the objection was not taken in Courts below, I direct each party to bear his own costs throughout.

Petition for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 23rd January 1920

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Petitioner.

Lala Tirath Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff obtained a decree on the 13th May 1916. The judgment runs as follows:—"I accordingly pass a decree for Rs. 10,438 with proportionate costs and future interest from the date of institution of the suit till realisation at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem." The decree-sheet, however, says:—"It is ordered that a decree for Rs. 10,438 with proportionate costs is granted in plaintiff's favour and that the sum of Rs. 860 14 0 be paid to the plaintiff on account of the proportionate costs of this suit with interest thereon at the rate of Re. 1 per cent. per mensem from the date of institution to date of realisation." In the course of execution proceedings the judgment debtor paid up the principal sum due with interest on that principal sum and also the costs of the suit. The decree-holder then applied to realise interest on those costs in execution. The judgment-debtor then applied for amendment of the decree. This application has been rejected by the lower Court by an order which runs as follows:—"The wordings in the judgment are clear, viz., decree is passed for Rs. 10,438 with proportionate costs and future interest from the date of institution of the suit till the realisation. The decree-sheet is in conformity with the judgment. There is no mistake in the decree-sheet." The judgment-debtor has appealed to this Court.

Now, an executing Court as such has no power to amend decrees, even to bring them in accordance with the judgment of the original Court. I must, therefore, regard the order which is now appealed against, as an order of the original Court and not merely as an order of the executing Court. I am, therefore, of the opinion that this is not an appeal from an order under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and Counsel has failed to point out to me any provision under which an appeal lies from an order refusing to correct a decree. Counsel, however, asks me to interfere on revision, and I think I am justified in doing so, seeing that, in my opinion, the lower Court has simply quoted the words of the judgment and does not seem to me to have given any real thought to the correct decision of the question involved, which is, whether the costs, as well as the principal sum, are to cover interest. The lower Court has given no reasons whatever for its finding and simply says that the wording of the judgment is clear, which is obviously incorrect, seeing that the wording of the judgment is quite ambiguous. The words "decree for Rs. 10,438 with costs and future interest thereon" taken simply by themselves might mean either that the defendant was to pay principal plus costs plus interest on the principal sum or that he should pay principal plus costs plus interest on both principal and costs. We must, therefore, go further to consider what the real meaning of the decree is. Now, the interest awarded by the judgment is to run from the date of institution of the suit till realisation at Re. 1 per cent, per mensem. Section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code empowers the Court to allow interest on the principal sum adjudged both from the date of the suit to the date of the decree and also from the date of the decree to the date of payment at such rate as the Court deems reasonable. Section 35, however, which deals with costs, gives the Court power to allow interest on costs at any rate not exceeding six per cent. per annum. This section does not say from what date the interest is to run, but it is obvious that interest should not be allowed to run on costs until such costs have been actually incurred. In the present case it certainly cannot be said that all the costs were incurred at the date of the institution, for the costs include not only stamp for plaint and Pleader's fee but also subsistence for witnesses, service of process and other costs which must have been incurred subsequent to institution. It would, obviously, be incorrect to allow interest on such costs until they were actually incurred, and to allow interest on costs at 12 per cent. per annum would be a violation of the provisions of section 35, Civil Procedure Code, which limits interest on costs to a maximum rate of 6 per cent. per annum. In a case where the wording of the judgment can be read in either of two ways, I think it would be quite wrong to presume that the correct reading is one which violates the provisions of both law and equity. I hold, therefore, that the correct wording of the judgment is that interest is payable only on the principal sum decreed and not on the costs.

The appeal as an appeal is dismissed, but on the revision side I direct that the decree be amended so as to make the interest recoverable only on the principal sum decreed and not on the costs. I pass no order as to costs in this Court.

Under Order XX, rule 12, of the Civil Procedure Code, a Court which is competent to pass a decree for possession is also competent to make an enquiry into the mesne profits pendente lite and to pass a decree for the mesne profits, even where the sum claimed by the decree-holder and the sum actually found due to him as the result of the enquiry are far in excess of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court. [p. 347, col. 2; p. 348, col. 2.]

Where, in such a case, the decree is passed by a Munsif's Court, an appeal lies from it, whatever the amount of the mesne profits decreed, to the Court of the District Judge under section 21 21 of the Bengal, United Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act. [p. 349, col. 1.]

Where it is found that the defendants had conspired to keep the plaintiff out of the possession of land, a joint decree for mesne profits can be passed against them. [p. 349, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal arises out of an application for ascertainment of mesne profits from the institution of the suit until the delivery of possession to the decree-holder in an action for ejectment against the defendants. The questions which we have to determine in this appeal are, first, whether the Munsif was competent to entertain the application, having regard to the fact that the decree-holder valued his claim for mesne profits at Rs. 7,169 5 9, secondly, whether, assuming the Munsif was competent to entertain the application, an appeal from his judgment lay to the Court of the District Judge, and thirdly, whether, in the circumstances of the case, a joint decree for mesne profits could be passed against the defendants.

On the first question, I have come to the conclusion that the Munsif was competent to entertain the application, and that the learned District Judge has taken an entirely correct view of the matter. The original suit, which was for recovery of possession of certain kasht lands, was valued at Rs. 921. It is conceded that the Munsif had complete jurisdiction to hear and dispose of the suit, but it is argued that, on the presentation of the application for ascertainment of mesne profits, the Court should have returned the plaint, in so far as it embodied a prayer for ascertainment of mesne profits, for presentation to the proper Court, that is, the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

It cannot, I think, be disputed that proceedings for ascertainment of mesne profits pendente lite are proceedings in the suit, and, but for the view expressed by Mookerji, J., in the case of Bhupendra Kumar Chakravarti v. Purna Chandra Bose (1), I should not have thought that it could be argued for one moment that a portion of the suit could be disposed of by one Court, and another portion by another Court. I quite agree that it is only by express legislation that the ascertainment of mesne profits pendente lite is brought within the scope of the suit. The plaintiff can have no cause of action in respect of mesne profits pendente lite, that is to say, mesne profits accruing subsequent to the institution of the suit, and, but for express legislation on the subject, it would be necessary for the plaintiff to institute a separate suit for recovery of such mesne profits. But in order to shorten litigation, and to prevent multiplicity of proceedings, the Legislature has empowered the Court, when passing a decree for possession of property, to direct an enquiry as to mesne profits from the institution of the suit until the delivery of possession to the decree holder. I regard the provision of Order XX, rule 12 of the Code as conferring jurisdiction on the Court having seizin of the action to ascertain the mesne profits accruing to the plaintiff subsequent to the action.

It is worth while reproducing the relevant portions of Order XX, rule 12, of the Code. That rule provides as follows:—
“Where a suit is for the recovery of possession of immoveable property and for...
.....mesne profits, the Court may pass a decree—

- (a) for the possession of the property ;
- (c) directing an enquiry as to.....mesne profits from the institution of the suit until
- (i) the delivery of possession to the decree-holder.....”

This is the first paragraph of the rule. The second paragraph provides: “Where an enquiry is directed under.....clause(c) a final decree in respect of.....mesne profits shall be passed in accordance with the result of such enquiry.”

I would respectfully ask, which is the Court that has jurisdiction to direct an enquiry under clause (c) and pass a final decree under the second paragraph of the rule? In my opinion, the section furnishes a complete answer to the question, it is the Court that passes the decree for possession. In my judgment, there is no justification for the view that the Court, having seizin of the case, may pass a decree for possession of the property, and then, if the claim for mesne profits exceeds its pecuniary jurisdiction, solemnly hand over the case to another Court having pecuniary jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit. I do not think that we can separate the trial of a proceeding in the suit from the trial of the suit, for that there is no sanction in the Code. The Code, on the other hand, directly authorizes the Court that passes the decree for possession, to deal with the question of mesne profits.

But it was argued that the Court of the Munsif is a Court of restricted jurisdiction and that it is not competent to investigate a claim which exceeds its pecuniary jurisdiction. I do not think that I can accept this proposition in its entirety. I quite agree that the jurisdiction of a Court is, to adopt the words of Mookerji, J., in the case of Golap Sundari Debi v. Indra

(1) 8 Ind. Cas. 34; 13 C. L. J. 132; 15 C. W. N. 506.

LINAMATH SAHAI v. MAYAWATI KOER.

Kumar Hazra (2) "the authority to hear and determine a cause." The authority conferred on the Munsif is to be found in section 19 of Act XII of 1887, but, in order to properly understand section 19, it is necessary to read section 18 of that Act. Section 18 runs as follows:—"Save as otherwise provided by any enactment for the time being in force, the jurisdiction of a District Judge or Subordinate Judge extends, subject to the provisions of section 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to all original suits for the time being cognizable by Civil Courts." Then follows section 19, which is as follows:—"(1) Save as aforesaid, and subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), the jurisdiction of a Munsif extends to all like suits of which the value does not exceed one thousand rupees."

"(2) The Local Government may, on the recommendation of the High Court, direct by notification in the Official Gazette, with respect to any Munsif named therein, that his jurisdiction shall extend to all like suits of such value not exceeding two thousand rupees as may be specified in the notification." Section 19, therefore, when read with section 18, provides as follows:—"Save as otherwise provided by any enactment for the time being in force, and subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), the jurisdiction of a Munsif extends to all original suits for the time being cognizable by Civil Courts of which the value does not exceed one thousand rupees." The argument that the Munsif is incompetent to investigate a claim which exceeds his pecuniary jurisdiction overlooks the saving clause in section 19 which preserves his jurisdiction to act under the Civil Procedure Code as one of the enactments for the time being in force. Section 19, it is true, does not empower the Munsif to entertain an application to investigate a claim which exceeds his pecuniary jurisdiction; but, also, it does not prohibit him. The word deliberately used by the Legislature in section 19 is "suit", and though the word "suit" must include proceedings in the suit, the proceedings must be such as, irrespective of any Statute, could properly be had in the suits. Now, proceedings in connection with the ascertainment of mesne profits pendente lite, could not, in my judgment, (apart from the express legislation on the point) be had in the suit, because the cause of action in regard to such mesne profits did not accrue to the plaintiff at the time of the institution of the suit. Section 19, therefore, by its own force, does not refer to proceedings for the ascertainment of mesne profits pendente lite. But it was urged that, by the express provision of Order XX, rule 12, the Court is competent, in a suit for possession of immoveable property, to pass a decree for mesne profits pendente lite. But, in my judgment, once we come to Order XX, rule 12, there is no escape from the conclusion that the Court competent to pass a decree for possession is also competent to pass a decree for mesne profits pendente lite, whatever may be the amount claimed by the decree-holder. Section 19 of Act XII of 1887 is a general provision that regulates the jurisdiction of the Munsif in regard to all original suits. It does not pretend to legislate in regard to special jurisdiction that may be exercised by the Munsif by virtue of any special enactment for the time being in force. Order XX, rule 2 of the Code confers special jurisdiction on the Court to take cognizance of a cause of action that has arisen subsequent to the institution of the suit, and cannot, in my judgment, be read as subject to the provision of section 19 of Act XII of 1887. On the other hand, section 19 of Act XII of 1887 expressly saves and preserves such jurisdiction as has been or may be conferred by any enactment for the time being in force and I must hold, on a construction of Order XX rule 12 of the Code, that the learned Munsif had jurisdiction to direct an enquiry as to mesne profits pendente lite and to pass a final decree in respect of the same.

This conclusion is in conflict with the decision of Mookerji, J., in the case of Bhupendra Kumar Chakravarti v. Purna Chandra Bose (1), and it is only due to that learned and distinguished Judge that I should state my reasons for differing from him. Mr. Justice Mookerji gave two reasons in his opinion, weighty and obvious reasons, for holding that the Munsif is incompetent to investigate a claim in excess of his pecuniary jurisdiction; first, because the value of the claim for mesne profits pendente lite which the decree-holder now invites the Court to investigate is much in excess of the value of a suit which a Munsif is generally competent or may specially be authorized to try; and, secondly, because if the Munsif investigated the claim, there would be insuperable difficulty as to the form of appeal, which could not be either the Court of the District Judge, who can hear appeals only in suits of which the value does not exceed Rs. 5,000, or the High Court, because the Legislature never contemplated an appeal direct from a decision of the Munsif to the High Court.

Speaking with the utmost respect, I am unable to agree with either of the reasons. So far as the first reason is concerned, it is for the Legislature to say whether a Munsif, who has undoubted jurisdiction to try the suit, shall or shall not try a proceeding which, but for the provision of Order XX, rule 12, would not be a proceeding in the suit. The Legislature has stated definitely in Order XX, rule 12 that the Court which passes the decree for the possession of property, has power to direct an enquiry as to mesne profits pendente lite and pass a final decree in accordance with the result of such enquiry. This definite statement of the law in Order XX, rule 12, which, it must be remembered, confers special jurisdiction on a Court to take cognizance of a cause of action arising subsequent to the institution of the suit, is not in any way controlled by section 19 of Act XII of 1887 which is a general provision conferring jurisdiction on the Munsif to try civil suits. So far as the second reason is concerned, it is completely answered by section 21 of Act XII of 1887. It is not a correct statement of the law that the District Judge can hear appeals only in suits of which the value does not exceed Rs. 5,000. It is only correct in regard to appeals from a decree or order of a Subordinate Judge. So far as appeals from the decrees or orders of a Munsif are concerned, by the express provision of section 21 (2) they lie to the District Judge, and I can see no difficulty, insuperable or otherwise, as to the form of appeal if the Munsif is allowed to investigate a claim for mesne profits in excess of his pecuniary jurisdiction. It may, of course, be argued on the construction of section 21 that the Legislature never intended a Munsif to entertain a claim in excess of his pecuniary jurisdiction, but such an argument would be founded not on the difficulty as to the forum of appeal, for on section 21 (2) there is no difficulty whatever, but on the fact that the Legislature has shown no confidence in the District Judge in regard to appeals when the value of the original suit exceeds five thousand rupees. But the answer to that argument is that we are here concerned with special jurisdiction, a jurisdiction which, but for Order XX, rule 12, the Court could not have exercised at all, and that the Legislature may well have thought that the trial of a proceeding which by express legislation becomes a proceeding in the suit should be conducted by the Court in seisin of the suit. I am of opinion that the decision of the learned District Judge on this point is right and must be affirmed.

The consideration of the other two questions raised on behalf of the appellant need not detain us long. There can be no doubt whatever that the appeal lay to the Court of the District Judge and not to this Court. Section 21 (2) of Act XII of 1887 is, I think, conclusive on this point. On the last question that has been argued before us, I am of opinion that no valid objection can be taken to the form of the decree passed by the Court. The plaintiff's case against the defendants is, that they illegally offered opposition to him and set up the appellant as one of their zerpeshgidars. It is, I think, a case of conspiracy against them, and the Courts below were right in passing a joint decree against the defendants.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This was an action by the appellant to enforce a mortgage-bond executed by Musammat Bibi Ramzo and Musammat Bibi Chotan in favour of one Bibi Zohra Bai so far back as the 20th October 1909. That document, on the face of it, shows that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 borrowed Rs. 8,000 from Musammat Bibi Zohra and executed in favour of Musammat Bibi Zohra a mortgage in respect of three items of properties.

In order to appreciate the points that have been argued before us, it is necessary to deal with certain antecedent events.

It appears that Zohra Bai died on the 26th April 1912, having executed her last Will and testament on the 21st April 1912. She left a daughter Husanara and a husband who is the plaintiff in the action. By her Will she left the entirety of her estate to her daughter Husanara. The plaintiff applied for Probate of the Will before the District Judge of Patna and obtained grant of Probate on the 14th March 1913.

On the 12th July 1917 the plaintiff as such executor instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises to enforce the mortgage bond executed by the two ladies, whose names I have mentioned, on the 20th October 1909.

The learned Subordinate Judge had found in favour of the appellant that there was good and valuable consideration for the bond, but he has dismissed the action on the ground that the plaintiff, as the executor under the last Will and testament executed by Zohra Bai, was not competent to maintain the action.

In my judgment the learned Subordinate Judge committed an error, a gross and palpable error, in coming to the conclusion at which he arrived. He conceded to the plaintiff the right to sue as executor, but he denied to him the right to sue for the recovery of the mortgage-debt. I confess that I do not understand the distinction at all. But the view of the learned Subordinate Judge seemed to have been that the property which belonged to the testatrix vested in Husanara, and that the property, having once vested in Husanara, could not be divested by her death which took place before the grant of Probate to the plaintiff, and that as Husanara was solely entitled to the mortgage-money, the plaintiff as executor is not entitled to sue for the recovery of that money at all. This, I think, is the ground upon which the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the action. It is, in my view, amazing that there should be such confusion of thought in the mind of the learned Subordinate Judge. In my judgment, the question has ceased to be even arguable since the Probate and Administration Act. Section 4 and section 82 of the Probate and Administration Act, which it is reasonable to suppose were known to the learned Subordinate Judge, provide as follows :—

"Section 4.—The executor or administrator, as the case may be, of a deceased person, is his legal representative for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased person vests in him as such."

"Section 82.—After any grant of Probate or Letters of Administration, no other than the person to whom the same shall have been granted shall have power to sue or prosecute any suit, or otherwise act as representative of the deceased, throughout the province in which the same may have been granted, until such Probate or Letters of Administration shall have been recalled or revoked."

The effect of these provisions is, that an executor or administrator by virtue of his office, or, in other words, in the character merely of executor or administrator, takes an estate in the property of the deceased and a legal character is vested in him.

Mr. Hasan Imam has argued that the property vested in Husanara as soon as the testatrix died. That proposition may be conceded to him at once. The property did vest in Husanara in the sense that Husanara could transmit a valid title to her heirs, could devise the property by Will, could make a gift of the property, and, in any way she chose, deal with the property, but all that is subject to administration and the title to administer the property vested in the executor and in no other person. In other words, the property vested in Husanara for the purpose of enjoyment but it vested in the executor for the purpose of administration, and it has been conceded by Mr. Imam that the enjoyment of the property must be postponed to the due administration of the property. I can understand no principle at all on which it can be argued that, because Husanara was the legatee, or, it may be, the sole legatee, under the Will, therefore, the executor who is entrusted with the duty of administering the estate, not of Husanara but of the testator, is not competent to maintain an action to recover the debt due primarily to the estate of the deceased. I am of opinion, therefore, that the decision of the learned Judge on this point cannot be supported and must be set aside.

It was next argued by Mr. Imam that in any view of the matter, the administration came to an end with the death of Husanara and for this proposition he relied upon section

"If an executor be appointed for any limited purpose specified in the Will the Probate shall be limited to that purpose, and, if he should appoint an agent to take administration on his behalf, the Letters of Administration with the Will annexed shall accordingly be limited."

Now, it may be pointed out at once that the grant of Probate is, on the face of it, unlimited. But it has been urged by Mr. Imam, and with some amount of reason, that there is no section either in the Probate and Administration Act, or in the Succession Act, which sets out any forms in regard to limited grants. Mr. Imam's argument is, and with this argument I agree, that in order to see whether the grant was limited in character, or unlimited, we must see the Will, not for the purpose of construing the Will but for the purpose of finding out whether the Court of Probate did make a limited grant to the executor or an unlimited one. Now, in going through the Will it appears that the plaintiff was appointed to look after Husanara and to look after the estate on her behalf until her death, and upon this Mr. Imam's argument is that the Administration came to an end with the death of Husanara. But I can find no provision in the Will which curtailed the important power of the executor to realise the debts due to the estate. Realization of debts due to the testator is a statutory power and must remain in the executor until the Will in some way has curtailed that power. The true view, of course, is that the grant is in no way a limited one. It is true that he was appointed the manager of the property belonging to the minor until she attained majority, but there is nothing to limit the power of the executor as regards the administration of the estate left by the testator. There is clearly a distinction between the estate of the testator and the property belonging to the legatee. The estate of the testator continues until Administration is complete. The property belonging to the legatee does not come into existence until the Administration is complete. All that the testatrix does is to limit the power of the plaintiff with regard to his power of management of the minor's estate. There is no limitation whatever on his power to administer the estate of the deceased. If the plaintiff was properly appointed an executor of the estate left by the deceased, then, in my view, the grant was an unlimited grant and no argument can be founded upon section 35 of the Probate and Administration Act.

The next point is, assuming that the plaintiff is competent to maintain the action, whether there was collusion between the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the testatrix with a view to defeat the interest of defendant No. 3 who, I may state, is the contending party before us as purchaser of a moiety of plot No. 1 mortgaged by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in favour of the testatrix.

It may be pointed out that defendant No. 3 had a claim against Musammât Bibi Ramzô in regard to certain advances made by defendant No. 3 to Musammât Ramzô from the 15th August 1908 to 10th August 1911. The defendant No. 3 instituted a suit against Bibi Ramzô to realise the moneys from time to time advanced by him to Bibi Ramzô; and it is Mr. Imam's contention that the mortgage-bond executed by Musammât Bibi Ramzô and Musammât Bibi Chotan was a collusive transaction in order to defeat his claim.

Now, it may be pointed out that before the date of the execution of the mortgage, defendant No. 3 had, as a matter of fact, advanced Rs. 1,600 to Musammât Ramzô. Therefore, on the date of the execution of the mortgage there was a sum of Rs. 1,600 with interest thereon due to defendant No. 3 from Bibi Ramzô. We are asked to come to the conclusion that, in order to defeat a claim of Rs. 1,600 with interest thereon due to the defendant No. 3 from defendant No. 1, both defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2 executed a mortgage for Rs. 8,000 in favour of the testatrix mortgaging thereby three items of properties. In my view, the story of collusion set up by the defendant No. 3 is antecedently improbable. So far as Bibi Chotan is concerned, she had nothing to lose by the decree which defendant No. 3 might get against defendant No. 1, and in my view there is no evidence sufficient to induce us to come to the conclusion that there was collusion between the three ladies in order to defeat the interest of defendant No. 3.

On the question of passing of consideration, we must remember that the witnesses are giving their evidence many years after the mortgage transaction, and I am not satisfied that the defendants have established that no consideration passed.

In the result, then, I would allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance, and give the plaintiff a mortgage-decree in terms of the reliefs claimed by him. The plaintiff is entitled to his costs in both the Courts. *

The defendants will have six months' time for redemption from the date of this judgment.

I ought to mention that Mr. Imam, in the course of his argument, asked us to direct that the plaintiff should proceed to sell in the first instance such properties as have not been purchased by his clients. This is a question which arises under section 81 of the Transfer of Property Act. In my view, the question does not arise now but it is open to Mr. Imam's clients to apply on proper materials and before the proper Court if and when he chooses. I say nothing whether such an application ought to succeed or ought not to succeed, all that I say is, that we have not sufficient materials before us to decide that question at the present moment, and that the question does not arise at this stage.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

the suit. On appeal the District Judge passed a preliminary decree and remanded the suit to the Munsif for taking accounts. The latter, finding that a sum beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction was disclosed by the account as being due to the plaintiff, transferred the case to the Subordinate Judge, who ignored the District Judge's decree and ordered the case to be tried de novo :

Held, (1) that all proceedings taken on the valuation furnished by the plaintiff were taken with jurisdiction :

Petition, under section 44 of Act VI of 1918, for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, dated the 17th April 1920.

Mr. Nanak Ohand Pandit, for the Petitioner

Mr. Cooper, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Senior Subordinate Judge's order under consideration amounts, perhaps unintentionally, to insubordination and must be set aside. The plaintiff, valuing his suit at Rs. 130, asked for rendition of accounts. A Munsif rejected the plaint after taking evidence on the merits.

The plaintiff appealed and the District Judge accepting the appeal found on the merits that plaintiff was entitled to an account and gave the plaintiff a preliminary decree for accounts to be rendered.

The Munsif then went into accounts and, finding that a sum far beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction was disclosed by the account as being due to the plaintiff, transferred the case to the Subordinate Judge. That officer has ignored the District Judge's decree and has ordered the case to be tried de novo.

A decree passed without jurisdiction is not a nullity but may be set aside by appeal or revision; till it is so set aside, it is good, whatever the defect of jurisdiction may have been.

In this case, there was no patent defect of jurisdiction.

Until accounts were examined, the value of the suit as fixed by the plaintiff himself was Rs. 130 and this gave the Munsif and the District Judge jurisdiction.

When the Munsif found that he was likely to be called upon to pass a decree in excess of his pecuniary jurisdiction he refused to do so and transferred the case.

He was not competent to pass a decree in excess of his jurisdiction, but all proceedings taken on the valuation furnished by plaintiff himself were within that jurisdiction.

In any case, the District Judge's preliminary decree stands and cannot be ignored.

I accept the petition and direct the Subordinate Judge to decide the case, taking as his starting point the fact that plaintiff is entitled to an account.

Costs to follow final event.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, in Original Suit No. 16 of 1918, (Original Suit No. 56 of 1917, on the file of the Sub-Court, Cocanada).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, (with him Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar), for the Appellant.—The lower Court erred in holding that plaintiff could claim interest under the Interest Act. The contract was to pay for the work within a reasonable time after inspection and approval. This will not amount to a 'debt or sum payable at a certain time,' within the meaning of the Interest Act. The contract does not provide for interest.

See Hill v. South Staffordshire Ry. (1) and Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchand (2). Where the contracts are not covered by the Act, interest should not be awarded. In this case the sum payable could be made certain only after the defendant gave his consent. No certain time is specified in the contract for payment and the Interest Act does not refer to legal presumptions.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Respondents.—The Interest Act does not apply to all cases of contract but only to cases in which interest is awardable under the Act. There is a written contract in this case and a provision for payment of a sum certain. As to time for payment, the presumption, where no time is fixed by the contract, is that it is payable at once.

In any event, the award of interest can be justified as falling under the proviso to the Act. See Chajmal Das v. Brij Bhukan Lal (3), where the Privy Council awarded post diem interest not provided in a deed of mortgage as damages for detention of the debt. See also Hurroopersaud Roy v. Shamapersaud Roy (4) where interest was allowed on mere profits.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is an appeal by the first defendant from a decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Cocanada in a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover from the first defendant money payable for work and labour done under a building contract. One of the points argued before us relates to the price with which the plaintiff has been charged in account with the first defendant for timber supplied by the latter for the building. The first defendant claimed an allowance for the timber supplied by him at the rate of Rs. 3 a cubic foot. The evidence is not very strong on either side and we are not prepared to interfere with the finding of the Subordinate Judge in paragraph 35 of his judgment in favour of the lower figure.

The next objection is to the disallowance of the first defendant's claim for Rs. 1,081 11 0 for stone and sand supplied by the first defendant for the purpose of the building. The first defendant admittedly stored stone and sand on the premises for the purposes of the building erected, without employing a contractor. The interested evidence of the plaintiff that he made no use of these materials, which had been collected for this very building seems highly improbable. The evidence of the first defendant's overseer, whom the Subordinate Judge gives no good reason for discrediting, that he himself measured the stone and sand supplied to the plaintiff seems much more in accordance with the probabilities of the case. We accept the case for the first defendant on this point and allow him Rs. 1,081-11-0 on this account.

The first defendant next objects to so much of the decree as directs him to pay interest on the sum found due to the plaintiff from the date when the building was handed over to him on completion. There is no provision for payment of interest in the contract, nor is there any proof of demand, but the Subordinate Judge has held that the money claimed by the plaintiff under the contract was a 'debt or sum certain payable at a certain time' within the meaning of the Interest Act XXXII of 1839 and that, therefore, the Court had a discretion to allow interest under the Act from the time when the money became payable. The contract provides that 'all work done by the contractor shall be paid for by the Rajah according to the rates herein specified within a reasonable time, after it has been inspected and finally approved and passed.' I do not think that is a provision for the payment of a sum certain, or for the payment of such sum on a certain day. If authority be wanted, reference may be made to Hill v. South Staffordshire Ry. (1) and to the observations of the Judicial Committee in Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchund (2).

The respondent has, therefore, endeavoured to support the decree on the ground that it was open to the Court to award interest in this case independently of the Interest Act, under the proviso to the Act that 'interest shall be payable in all cases in which it is now payable by law.' This contention is opposed to the settled course of decisions of the Court in Kisra Rukumma Rau v. Oripati Viyanna Dikhatulu (5), Kamalammal v. Peeru Meera (6) and to the earlier decision of the Privy Council in Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchund (2) which proceeded on the view that interest not payable under the terms of the contract could only be awarded under the Act, or as being in accordance with usage as to the particular class of instruments. In that case the claim founded on the Act was rejected and the claim founded on usage was upheld. The English decisions on section 28 of Lord Tenterden's Act, III and IV Will. IV, Ch. 42, are to the same effect and are entirely applicable because the Interest Act, 1839, was passed, as recited in the preamble, to extend this section to India and re-enacted it in substance. The English Act, as pointed out by Lord Watson in London, Chatham and Dover Railway Company v. South Eastern Railway Company (7), was passed upon the assumption that Lord Tenterden had correctly laid down the law in Page v. Newman (8) where he said: "interest is not due on money secured by a written instrument, unless it appears on the face of the instrument that interest was intended to be paid, or unless it be implied from the usage of trade, as in the case of mercantile instruments."

In the Court of Appeal, Lindley, L. J., as he then was, had stated the law as follows: "As regards interest, it was settled by Higgins v. Sargeant (9), Page v. Newman (8) and Foster v. Weston (10) that at Common Law, interest was not payable on ordinary debts, unless by agreement, or by mercantile usage; nor could damages be given for non payment of such debts." See London, Chatham and Dover Railway Company v. South Eastern Railway Company (11). What the Statute does, it is now settled, is to provide for interest being awarded by way of damages in cases covered by it, as held in Cook v. Fowler (12) and numerous other cases.

It is, I think, clear that the provisions of section 28 of Lord Tenterden's Act were extended to India upon the same assumption as to the general state of the law in India although there might, of course, be special cases in India coming within the proviso as to the cases in which interest was already payable. We have been referred to a case in which it was held by the Judicial Committee in Chaimal Das v. Brij Bhukan Lal (3) that post diem interest, not provided for in a mortgage-deed might be awarded by way of damages for the detention of the mortgage debt after it fell due, but this was only an application to India of the decision in Price v. Great Western Railway Company (13) where it was held, with reference to the corresponding section of Lord Tenterden's Act, that interest might be awarded by way of damages in such a case, because it had been the constant and invariable practice in cases of mortgage to give such interest by way of damages. That practice was apparently regarded as saved by the proviso to the section, and the rule as to mortgages is treated as an exception to the general rule. Fisher on Mortgages, paragraph 1805. The decision in Chaimal Das v. Brij Bhukan Lal (3) is, therefore, no authority for the proposition that, in other cases of contract, interest may be given by way of damages, for detention, when it is not provided for in the contract and cannot be claimed under the Act. That contention, as already pointed out, is opposed to the scheme of the Act and the assumption on which it is based. The decision of the Privy Council in Hurroopersaud Roy v. Shamapersaud Roy (4) in favour of allowing interest on mesne profits was based on the long settled practice of the Court and this and other cases in which interest was allowed by the Privy Council, in the absence of contract and independently of the Act, must, in my opinion, be regarded as cases coming within the proviso to the Act saving cases in which interest was payable by law when the Act was passed. The decision of this Court in Muhammad Abdul Goffur Rowther v. Hamida Beevi Ammal (14), which has also been cited, does not affect the present case, as that was not a case of contract as to which, in my opinion, the law is clear. It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider it further on this occasion. At the suggestion of the Court, the appeal as to the disallowance of the fines imposed by the first defendant has not been pressed in view of our disallowance of interest and with reference to the position of the parties. The decree will be modified accordingly. Each party to bear his own costs.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree. This appeal relates to four items allowed in favour of the plaintiff-contractor against the first defendant, the Rajah of Pittapur.

As regards the contention that the contractor was bound to take timber from the Rajah at the rate at which Local Boards supplied their contractors, it is enough to point out that the contract in this case does not contain any such stipulation. In the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the presumption is that the purchase by the plaintiff was at the market-rate and not higher. I, therefore, agree with the conclusion at which the Subordinate Judge arrived on this question.

As regards the claim for the fine levied by the Rajah against the plaintiff, for the delay in finishing the building, Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar has agreed not to press this claim.

As regards the third item, namely, the value of the sand and stones supplied to the plaintiff, the document establishes very clearly that the appellant's contention is well-founded. The Subordinate Judge has not given sufficient weight to Exhibit F-8. It was an estimate which was prepared at the spot. When it was sent to the office of the Rajah, it was scrutinised there and the correct units supplied were entered. It was after this that the plaintiff signed the estimate. On his signing it, an order was made that a cheque should be issued for the amount. This by itself is almost conclusive of the quantity of sand and stones which the plaintiff received from the first defendant. There are also Exhibits G and XVII (a). The latter is a measurement spoken to by the plaintiff's overseer and was prepared on the 13th August 1912. That gives the quantity of sand as mentioned in F 8. There is also the oral evidence of the overseer, which there is no reason for not believing. I am clear that the first defendant is entitled to a reduction, as claimed by him in this respect.

Now comes the last question, namely, that relating to the award of interest on the sums decreed. The question arises in this way. The work was finished in November 1914. Soon after, the plaintiff sent in a bill claiming payment. The first defendant, according to Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar, scrutinised the bill and did not come to a final conclusion, until a year later, and when the amount was fixed and tendered by him, the plaintiff did not accept it. Thereupon this suit was instituted. The question for consideration is, whether, from the date of the tendering of the bill by the plaintiff, the amount should bear interest.

Sitting with Ayling, J., I had to consider the provision of the Interest Act, XXXII of 1839, at some length in Muhammad Abdul Goffur Rowther v. Hamida Beebi Ammal (14). In my opinion, unless a claim is within the four corners of the Interest Act, the limitations contained in the Act are not applicable. The language employed by some of the noble and learned Lords in London, Chatham and Dover Railway Company v. South Eastern Railway Company (7) shows that the object of 3 and 4 William was to extend the discretion of the Court in favour of awarding interest, in cases of contracts which do not in terms provide for interest, and this view receives considerable support, from Hill v. South Staffordshire Ry. (1) where Mr. Lindley, as he then was, who appeared as Counsel, discussed the history as to interest very fully. Mr. Narayana-moorthi contended that the Act should be held to affect only those cases in which interest is awardable under the Act and not all cases of contract. To accept this contention would amount to saying, that contracts are within the benefit of the Act and not within its mischief. A class of cases cannot come within the protection of a Statute without submitting itself to its mischief. We find the Privy Council in Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchand (2) holding that in a case of contract, which does not come within the Act, interest was not awardable. In this Court, in Kamalammal v. Peeru Meera (6) and Subramania Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar (15), it was held that, in cases of contracts which are not covered by the Act, there should be no award of interest. In the case in Muhammad Abdul Gaffur Rowther v. Hamida Beebi Ammal (14), we did not differ from these decisions. I am, therefore, of opinion that, where a case is one relating to a contract, the mere fact that the contract does not come within the protection afforded by the Act is not a reason for holding that it is not controlled by the Act.

Now comes the question whether the claim in this case is within the Act. As I began by saying, it was a claim advanced by the plaintiff for money due after rendering accounts of the work which he had done for the first defendant. In such a claim "a debt or sum certain payable by virtue of a written instrument at a certain time" there is no doubt that there was a written instrument, but I am not satisfied that it is a sum certain. It is a sum which is sought to be made certain by the concurrence of the first defendant to the demand. Until that assent is obtained, it is in an unliquidated state. Further, I doubt whether it is a sum payable at a certain time. It may be, as was suggested by the learned Vakil for the respondent, that when no time is fixed for payment, the money becomes payable at once. But I do not understand the Act as referring to such a legal presumption. As at present advised, in my opinion, the words "payable at a certain time" relate to the agreement between the parties and not to a presumption of law. However that may be, this case is covered by the decision in the Court of Appeal in Hill v. South Staffordshire Ry. (1). That was a case where the contractor made a demand in writing for a sum as balance due to him and claimed interest. The Vice-Chancellor held that the claim did not relate to a sum certain, payable at a certain time. The same view was taken by the House of Lords in London, Chatham and Dover Railway Company v. South Eastern Railway Company (7). In that case, there was a stipulation between the parties that accounts should be rendered and that a payment of not less than 75 per cent. should be made, on account of the balance appearing to be due on the face of the accounts so rendered. The House of Lords came to the conclusion that there was no debt, or sum certain, payable at a certain time. The present case is an a fortiori one. Here there is no agreement to pay any portion of the bill on its being tendered to the appellant; it became due only after the parties had settled the accounts. It follows from the above discussion that the claim in this case is one relating to the contract and not one in which a sum certain is payable on a certain date. The provisions of the Act are, therefore, not complied with and consequently the plaintiff is not entitled to the interest awarded by the lower Court. So much of the decree as relates to the award of the interest up to the date of the suit must be disallowed. In this appeal each party will bear his own costs.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This case comes before us on a reference by the Board of Revenue under section 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918. The reference was made upon the petition of Raja Jyoti Prasad Singh Deo of Kasbipur, whose taxable income has been assessed by the Deputy Collector including a sum of Rs. 1,70,706 the amount derived by him from rents and royalties of certain collieries. Road-cess and public works cess amounting to Rs. 10,669 have also been levied on these rents and royalties under the Cess Act. The petitioner claims that this amount should be deducted in assessing his taxable income derived from the source named. The question submitted for our determination is, whether the full amount of the rents and royalties received is subject to income-tax, or whether, as the petitioner contends, the amount paid in respect of cesses should be deducted in ascertaining the taxable income. Section 5 of the Income Tax Act enumerates the classes of income which shall be chargeable to income-tax. They are (i) salaries, (ii) interest on securities, (iii) income derived from house property; (iv) income derived from business, (v) professional earnings, and (vi) income derived from other sources. With regard to each of these sources of income the Act provides how the taxable income shall be arrived at and what allowances shall be taken into account in determining the amount to be taxed. For the purposes of this case, it is only necessary to refer to the provisions made with regard to class (iv) "income derived from business" and class (vi) "income derived from other sources" as it is under one or other of these heads that the income in question falls. In my opinion, the income in question falls under class (vi), but as the petitioner's first contention is that it falls under class (iv) it is desirable to refer to the sections of the Act which deal with both these classes. Income derived from business is dealt with in section 9 of the Act, which provides that the tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head "income derived from business" in respect of the profits of any business carried on by him. It then sets out the allowances which may be deducted in computing the profits. These include any rent paid for the premises in which the business is carried on, repairs to the premises, interest on capital borrowed for the purposes of business, premiums paid for insurance on the buildings, machinery or plant and repairs to the same, certain sums for depreciation and renewals, sums paid on account of land revenue, local rates or Municipal taxes in respect to the premises, and, lastly, any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of earning such profits.

Section 11 deals with income derived from other sources and provides: (1) "The tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head 'income derived from other sources' in respect of income and profits of every kind and from every source to which this Act applies (if not included under any of the preceding heads) with the exception of agricultural income. (2) Such income and profits shall be computed after making allowance for any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of making such income or earning such profits, provided that no allowance shall be made on account of any personal expenses of the assessee."

The petitioner contends, in the first place, that the income derived from rents and royalties is income derived from business and that it is only the profits arising from such business that are taxable and the profits can only be arrived at after deducting expenses such as cesses and other expenses chargeable to revenue account which he is bound to pay. He admits that the deductions now claimed are not included amongst those which are prescribed in section 9 of the Act although that section does provide for the deduction of an allowance in respect of land revenue, local rates or Municipal taxes in respect of business premises. If it is legitimate to draw any inference from the inclusion of local rates and Municipal taxes amongst the allowances permissible under the Act the inference would point to the conclusion that it was the intention of the Legislature to exclude cesses and similar charges other than those mentioned in the section. In fact, if the petitioner's contention be correct that he is entitled, in determining the taxable profits, to exclude all expenditure chargeable to revenue account it would have been unnecessary for the Legislature expressly to include land revenue amongst the allowances to be taken into account in computing the taxable profits. The petitioner contends, however, that the allowances mentioned in section 9 and, indeed, in the other sections dealing with the tax payable are not exhaustive, and that it is only the profits of the business which can be taxed. Although, in the view I take upon the first point raised by the petitioner, it is not necessary definitely to decide this question, I am of opinion that this branch of his argument cannot be supported. If, in assessing the taxable income, cesses must first be deducted it would seem to follow that in determining the amount of cess payable under the Cess Act upon the 'annual net profits' derived from similar property the amount of income tax should first be deducted, but it was held in Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1) that an owner of mines is liable to pay both income tax and road cess tax on the same net profits derived, or royalty received, by him from the mines. That case, in so far as it dealt with the liability to pay cesses, was affirmed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. See Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2). No case has been called to our attention in which taxes imposed by Statute, unless specially provided for in the Act, have been deducted in computing the amount payable either for cess or income-tax,

(2) 9 Ind. Cas. 311; 38 I. A. 31; 38 C. 372; 15 C. W. N. 201; 8 A. L. J. 140; 13 C. L. J. 124; 9 M. L. T. 196; 13 Bom. L. R. 82; 21 M. L. J. 365; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 53 (P. C.).

but as, in my opinion, the income derived from rents and royalties of collieries does not come under the head of income derived from business, it is unnecessary definitely to determine this point. It seems to me that the income in question is no more income derived from business than is the income derived from the lease of house property or land used for the purpose of carrying on business. The royalties received in the present case do not depend upon the profits earned by the lessees of the mine but upon the quantity of coal raised and the royalty will be payable whether the lessees make a profit or not and section 9 has no application to the present case.

I am of opinion that the case falls under section 11, which refers to income derived from other sources.

The petitioner contends, in the second place, that even if this is so the cess should be deducted from the taxable income. His argument based upon this section is two-fold. In the first place, he points out that the section refers to both income and profits, that income may comprehend something wider than profits but that the royalties in question are profits and can only be ascertained after deducting all out-goings necessarily incurred not only for the purpose of earning the profits but charged thereon by Statute to revenue account. It is true that the section relates to both income and profits. The section, however, is dealing with various kinds of income and includes all those not specially mentioned in the first five classes referred to in section 5, and it is quite conceivable that the word "profits" would be a more apt term than the word "income" to describe some of the cases included. But I can see no reason why royalties received from mines should be regarded as anything other than income in the ordinary sense. There is no definition of the word "income" in the Act itself but its meaning as there used can, I think, be determined with sufficient accuracy from a perusal of the Act. Without giving an exhaustive definition, it may be described as the annual or periodical yield in money or reducible to a money-value arising from the use of real or personal property or from labour or services rendered, bearing in mind that in some cases, as, for example, derived from house property, the yield may be taken as the bona fide annual value and not necessarily as the actual yield. Investments and rents derived from houses and land are instances of income arising from the use of property whilst salary, wages and professional earnings, including pensions, are instances of income arising from labour or services rendered. Income derived from business may, in certain cases, be a combination of both classes. It is not, however, the gross income so derived that is in all cases the taxable income. Certain allowances from the gross income are provided for by the Act and certain classes of income are exempt, but unless the exemptions or allowances are provided for by the Act there would appear to be no ground for holding that such are permissible. In the present case the only allowance provided for in section 11 is any expenditure, not being in the nature of capital expenditure, incurred solely for the purpose of making such income or earning such profits. As a last resort, the petitioner contends that the amount levied for cesses is an expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of making the income, but it would, in my opinion, be an undue straining of plain language to say that the payment of road cess is an expenditure incurred solely for that purpose. The liability to pay cesses results from the income having been made, and the payment of the cess can hardly be said to form a necessary part in the making of the income which must come into existence before the liability to cess arises. The payment of cess is a necessary expense arising in connection with the ownership of royalties but it is in no sense an expenditure incurred for any purpose incidental to the making of the income.

In my opinion, the question submitted for decision to the High Court, viz., whether payments made by the petitioner on account of the local cess are to be deducted before his income is assessed to income tax under section 11 of the Income Tax Act must be answered in the negative. The petitioner will bear the costs of this reference.

MULLICK, J.—In my opinion, the owner of a coal mine receiving royalty upon coal is not a person earning profits from a business. His income falls under section 5 (vi), Income Tax Act, as an income derived from "other sources" and should be computed in accordance with the provisions of section 11.

The Act makes a difference between income and profits. Profits are included within the term income, but profits are not synonymous with income. For the purposes of the present case, however, this distinction is not material, the royalties are income and the sole question is, whether the cesses payable under the Cess Act should be deducted before assessing income-tax.

In my opinion, clause (2) of section 11 is exhaustive and no rates or taxes of which the basis of calculation is net profits after such profits have been earned can be deducted in making the computation. A comparison of clause (2) (ix) of section 9, the wording of which is identical with clause (2) of section 11, would seem to make it clear that expenditure incurred for the purpose of earning income or profits means sums paid or liabilities incurred, the purpose of which is to feed the spring from which the income is derived. The expenditure must be incurred as a condition precedent to the production of the income. The payment of a tax which is conditional on the making of an income and which is to be calculated on the amount of such income after it has come into existence cannot be said to be expenditure for the making of such income. For our present purposes, the term "net profits" as used in the Cess Act is synonymous with the term "income" as used in the Income Tax Act.

In the next place, even if payment of road and public works cesses could be called expenditure for the purpose of earning the income, it is clear that it is not expenditure incurred solely for such purpose. In so far as the State, in return for the payment of the cesses, grants inter alia to the assessee security for the enjoyment of his income the payment may be said to some extent to be made for the purpose of earning such income, but it cannot be said to be made solely for such purpose. It is for this reason that land revenue, local rates and Municipal taxes do not come under the exception provided in clause (2) (ix) of section 9 and special provision has been made for them in clause (2) (viii). No special provision has been made in respect of road and public works cesses and if the royalty receiver had been a person carrying on a business, he could not have claimed a deduction for them.

The same principle must apply to the case of an assessee whose income has to be computed under section 11, and these cesses cannot be deducted in his case also. A tax leviable as a condition precedent to the creation of the source of income, such as a license-fee, would stand on a different footing, but that is not the case here. I agree, therefore, with the view taken by the learned Chief Justice.

BUCKNILL, J.—I agree generally. Cesses under the Cess Act, 1880, are admittedly, leviable upon royalties received from the working of mines, (see section 72). Royalty received from mines is "income derived from other sources" section 5 (vi) Income Tax Act, 1918, and not "income derived from business." Such royalty is liable in respect of both income-tax and road-cess and public works cess.

In considering what is the income derived from business the word income means "profits of the business" [see section 9 (1)]. How these profits are to be arrived at, section 9 (2) shows, and there are many deductions which may rightly be made from what may be called the "gross receipts" before the figure of the profits properly assessable for income-tax is arrived at. But in the case of "income derived from other sources" the only abatement contemplated is the broad one expressed thus in sub-section (2): "Such income and profits shall be computed after making allowance for any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of making such income or earning such profits." In this reference this is clearly a case concerning "income" and not "profits". But even if royalty derived from mines could be regarded as falling within the phrase "income derived from business" under section 5 (iv), it does not appear that road or public works cess could be regarded as sums paid on account of land revenue, local rates or Municipal taxes as contemplated under section 9 (2) as being capable of being deducted from gross receipts in order to arrive at the properly assessable profits which is the synonym for "income derived from business" as designed in section 5 (iv).

It is most difficult to see how in the case of "income derived from other sources", the assessment of which is regulated by section 11 and in which the abatement possible in arriving at the taxable income and profits is confined to a deduction of "any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of making such income or earning such profits" it can be argued that "road or public works cesses" are expenditure incurred at all for the purpose of making income or earning profits.

The Board of Revenue in its order of Reference, dated the 17th July 1920 puts forward the tentative suggestion that there is foundation in common sense for an argument that a sum which is levied on the proceeds of a property, before such proceeds are at an owner's disposal and which (I suppose the property is meant) is not at the owner's disposal itself, is not part of his income; but to my mind this is not a logical idea but really an ad misericordiam plea. Cases may well be imagined, with thought, in which a person's receipts which fall under section 11 could be diminished by various causes over which it is conceivable he might have no control and which yet might have no connection either with capital expenditure or with producing such receipts; in such I cannot see how the operation of sub-section (2) of section 11 could possibly be invoked in favour of the assessee. It appears to me that though, as regards the person working the mine, the royalty paid by him to the landlord is part of the profits of the mine, yet, that royalty, as regards the landlord, is part of the landlord's income and in no proper sense his "profits."

In my view, the royalty receiver is liable to be assessed (a) for income-tax, (b) for road and public works cess on the same sum, namely, the royalty payable to the royalty receiver by the lessees of the mines; and that the contention of the Board of Revenue is correct.

*Costs—Defendant sued in representative capacity—
Order making defendant personally liable for costs—
Discretion of Court—Appellate Court, interference

The Courts have a discretion to make such orders as to costs as they think fit and, unless that discretion is exercised unreasonably, an Appellate Court should not interfere.

Where a defendant, who is sued in a representative capacity, raises unnecessary defences, the Court has power to make him personally liable for the costs of the plaintiff.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 20th April 1920.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Lala Mukand Lal Suri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal only as regards costs. The plaintiff sued the defendant for a settlement of accounts due by the late father of the defendant. The defendant pleaded not merely that he was not personally liable but he seems to have raised every other plea that could be thought of. Issues were framed and decided all in favour of the plaintiff, except that the defendant was held not to be personally liable. It was finally found, after going through the accounts, that the plaintiff was entitled to Rs. 20,000 odd, but the plaintiff said that he wanted a decree for Rs. 8,000 only. The meaning of this clearly was that, as the plaintiff was only to get a decree against the estate of the deceased, it was useless for the decree to be more than could be recovered from that estate. The plaintiff could only be the loser as he would have to pay enhanced Court-fee. The lower Court gave a decree for Rs. 8,000 to be realised from the estate of the deceased in defendant's hands and directed that, as the defendant raised all sorts of pleas which had been decided against him, the defendant was personally liable for costs. The defendant has appealed urging that he should not be made personally liable for costs. The Courts have discretion to make such orders as to costs as they think fit and, unless that discretion is exercised unreasonably, an Appellate Court should not interfere. The reasons given by the lower Court for making the defendant personally liable for costs in the present case seem to me perfectly sound.

On behalf of the defendant it is urged that he had no personal knowledge as to his father's dealing and was not, therefore, in a position to make any admissions; but in such a case it was quite easy for the defendant to say that he had no knowledge as to the real state of affairs and could, therefore, make no admissions and could only ask the Court to require the plaintiff to prove his case. There was, as far as I can see, no need to set up a large number of pleas.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

In order to sustain a plea of cruelty in an action for divorce on the ground that one of the parties to the marriage is suffering with syphilis it must be shown that the disease has been actually communicated to the complainant, and that the complainant was not only ignorant of the existence of the disease at the time of its communication, but that it was knowingly and wilfully communicated [p. 467, col. 1.]

The existence of syphilis at the time a contract to marry is entered into, or the incurring of the disease after such contract is entered into, furnishes a good defence in an action for breach of promise of the contract to marry, even though the disease was acquired after the making of the contract but through no wrongful act of the defendant. [p. 364, col. 2.]

Where a person is alleged to be suffering from a loathsome disease, and refuses to attend for medical inspection, the Court may properly draw an unfavourable inference. [p. 367, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher in a suit by a husband under section 18, read with section 19, of the Indian Divorce Act, 1869, to declare his marriage with the defendant null and void on two grounds, namely, first, that the respondent was impotent at the time of the marriage and at the time of the institution of the suit, and secondly, that his consent to the marriage was obtained by fraud. The parties are Indian Christians in an humble state of life and were married on the 15th February 1918 at the Baptist Church at Entally in the suburbs of this City. The petitioner alleged that the parents of the respondent, as also the respondent herself, were, at the time of the marriage, suffering from a highly infectious and incurable form of syphilis; that this fact was wilfully concealed from him; that his consent to the marriage was thus brought about by fraud, and that he discovered the condition of his wife only on the second day after his marriage. The petitioner further stated that he had found it impossible to consummate the marriage and had accordingly instituted this suit on the 4th April 1918, so that the marriage might be declared null and void. The respondent denied that she had syphilis at the time of her marriage and asserted that the marriage had been consummated with the result that she had contracted the disease from her husband. The question of fraud does not appear to have been investigated in the Court below; but three medical practitioners who had seen the girl deposed as to her condition, the petitioner and the respondent also testified in support of their respective allegations. Mr. Justice

Fletcher has found on the evidence that the marriage has not been consummated; that the respondent is a virtuous girl, and that she suffers from hereditary syphilis. This is undeniable on the medical testimony and is evidenced by the ulcerated condition of her palate and nose. As there had been no examination of the private parts of the girl, it was impossible to say whether they were in any way diseased. In these circumstances, Mr. Justice Fletcher declined to annul the marriage, although he found that the husband would run a degree of risk if he had sexual intercourse with his wife. On the present appeal, Mr. Avetoom has contended on behalf of the husband that the test to be applied in cases of this description is, whether the condition of one of the parties to the marriage, at the time of the marriage, rendered consummation practically impossible, and if this is established the marriage is voidable. In support of this argument, he has relied upon the decisions in G. v. G. (1) and H. v. P. (2). In the former case a middle-aged wife had successfully resisted consummation for three years not because of malformation or structural defect, but because she suffered from excessive sensibility; her condition was hysterical and to a certain extent beyond her control. Lord Penzance held that as there was practical impossibility of sexual intercourse, without which the ends of marriage, namely, the procreation of children and the pleasures and enjoyment of matrimony, could not be attained the husband was entitled to a decree for nullity. In the second case, Sir James Hannen ruled that the impediment in the way of intercourse must be physical, and made a decree for nullity, as it was established that, whenever the husband endeavoured to consummate the marriage, the act brought on hysteria, so that he could not effect his purpose without employing such force as, but for the marriage, would have amounted to rape. Mr. Bonnerjee, on behalf of the wife, has contended that the decisions mentioned prescribe the extreme limit of the rule of impotence and should not be extended to cases like the present. In support of his argument, he has referred to the judgment of Sir Cresswell in Stagg v. Edgecombe (3) where a petition for nullity by a wife was (on the authority of the decision of Dr. Bettsworth in Welde v. Welde (4) that the impotence must be a visible incapacity) dismissed, as the alleged impotence of the husband was not due to disease or natural infirmity but was occasioned by the indulgence of a disgusting and degrading habit. None of the cases cited in argument is directly in point, and the question raised is plainly one of first impression, so far as this Court is concerned. The matter consequently requires careful investigation, specially in view of the fact that it is only in comparatively recent times that the true nature of syphilis has been revealed by scientific investigators.

An examination of the cases in the British and American Courts shows that the question of the legal effect of the existence of syphilis on contracts to marry or on the married status has been considered from three stand points, which, though distinct, are mutually related, namely, first is the existence of such a disease a valid defence to an action for breach of a contract to marry, secondly, is the existence at the time of the marriage a ground for annulling the union and, thirdly, is it a ground for divorce.

As regards the first question, namely, whether the existence of syphilis in one of the parties to a contract to marry is a good ground for rescission by the other, we have not been able to trace any reported case in England where the point has been judicially determined. Lord Kenyon in Atchison v. Baker (5) is reported to have laid it down as a general rule that if the condition of the parties was changed after the making of the contract, it was good ground for either to break off the engagement. In the case before him, he ruled that where the plaintiff had become afflicted with an abscess in his breast and the defendant had refused to marry him on that ground, an action for breach of contract could not be sustained. The same rule has been applied where the affliction was syphilis; Kutler v. Grant (6), Allen v. Baker (7), Schackelford v. Hamilton (8). The rule enunciated in these cases may be briefly formulated; where syphilis is contracted, prior to but was not known to exist at the time that the contract to marry was entered into, or where such disease was contracted subsequent to the making of the contract to marry, but through no wrongful act of the defendant, its existence furnished a good defence to an action for breach of promise. It is to be observed that in both the cases just mentioned, the affliction was of a serious type, and, perhaps, incurable; the rule might well be otherwise where the disease is such as to be easily curable and where the plaintiff assents to a postponement of performance. The reason for the rule is best stated in the words of Ruffin, J. in Allen v. Baker (7).

"We cannot understand how one can be liable for not fulfilling a contract when the very performance thereof would in itself amount to a great crime, not only against the individual but against society itself. However, once doubted, it is now generally conceded that if the performance of a contract be rendered impossible by the act of God alone such fact will furnish a valid excuse for its non-performance; and such a stipulation will be understood to be an inherent part of every contract. It is likewise true that, whenever the main part of an executory contract becomes impossible of performance from any cause beyond the power of the party to control, it will be treated as having become impossible in toto. Why should not the same principle apply to a contract, the fulfilment of which, owing to causes subsequently intervening and altogether independent of any default of the party, can only be productive of consequences disastrous to the parties themselves, and such as may entail misery upon others to come after them?.....The usual, and we may say legitimate, objects sought to be attained by such agreements to marry are the comfort of association, the consortium vitæ, as it is called in the books; the gratification of the natural passions rendered lawful by the union of the parties; and the procreation of children. And if either party should thereafter become by the act of God and without fault on his own part, unfit for such relation, and incapable of performing the duties incident thereto, then the law will excuse a non-compliance with the promise—the main part of the contract having become impossible of performance, the whole will be considered to be so....The law will constrain no man to assume a position so full of peril, as to have placed within his reach the lawful means of gratifying a powerful passion, at the risk of another's health or life and the possibility of bringing into the world children in whose constitution the seeds of a father's sin shall lurk."

The point, as we have said, has not been directly decided in England. The defendant in Hall v. Wright (9) refused to carry out his promise by reason of his having become afflicted with bleeding of the lungs rendering sexual intercourse dangerous to himself. The Court held that this was not a sufficient answer to the petition. The Court of Queen's Bench was equally divided, while in the Court of Exchequer Chamber, the decision was pronounced by a majority of four against three. The rule adopted by the majority is a deviation from the general doctrine that in contracts of a personal nature, illness of the promisor rendering him incapable of fulfilling the terms of his agreement is an excuse for non-performance: Boast v. Firth (10), Robinson v. Davison (11). It may be noted, however, that the rule in Hall v. Wright (9) was approved by Montague Smith, J., in Boast v. Firth (10), where he distinguished marriage contracts from other contracts. "In the case of a contract to marry, the man, though he may be in a bad state of health, may nevertheless perform his contract to marry the woman and so give her the benefit of social position so far as in his power, though he may be unable to fulfil all the obligations of the marriage state, and it rests with the woman to say whether she will enforce or renounce the contract." Sir Frederick Pollock, in his Treatise on Contract, has adversely criticised this decision and has expressed the opinion that it cannot be maintained except against the common understanding of mankind and the general treatment of marriage by the Law of England that the acquisition of legal and social position by marriage is a principal and independent object of the contract. It may well be doubted whether the rule will be applied to a case where the disease is of a dangerous and infectious character.

As regards the second question, namely, whether the existence of syphilis in either party at the time of the marriage renders the marriage voidable, the answer must depend primarily on the nature and objects of the marriage relation itself. As observed by Dr. Lushington in Deane v. Aveling (12), the two principal ends of matrimony are, a lawful indulgence of the passions to prevent licentiousness and the procreation of children according to the evident design of Divine Providence. Whatever other object theorists may ascribe to the marriage relation, the practical statesman must continue to regard it as a civil institution whose chief purposes are the legalisation of sexual commerce between the parties and the perpetuation of the race. Capacity for sexual intercourse must exist at least in posse, at the time that the marriage is entered into. It is for this reason that permanent and incurable impotency existing at such time and of such nature as to render complete and natural sexual intercourse between the parties practically impossible is recognised as a ground for the amendment of the marriage. [See the judgment of Lord Johnston and Lord Dunedin, in A. B. v. O. B. (13) and of the House of Lords in A. B. v. O. B. (14)]. The capacity for sexual intercourse, it is true, is not necessarily affected by the existence of syphilis and yet such disease may render coition practically impossible. Reference may, in this connection, be made to the following passage from the judgment of Ross, C. J., in Ryder v. Ryder (15).

"While there was no malformation which renders complete sexual intercourse impossible, there was a physical condition that rendered her (the defendant) incapable of healthy coition. Every such act, by reason of her physical condition, was attended with great danger of communicating to him incurable disease, a disease endangering his health and life....."

BIRENDRA KUMAR BISWAS V. HEMLATA BISWAS.

.....In the case at Bar the petitioner's organs of generation at the time of the marriage were in an incurably diseased condition, which, while it did not physically render her incapable of copulation, or of bringing into life a child, a mass of syphilitic sores, as good as dead when born, yet it did render copulation and procreation on the part of the petitioner impracticable, because the act endangered both his health and life."

To the same effect is the opinion of a Full Bench of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in Smith v. Smith (16). In that case the action for the annulment of marriage was brought by the wife on the ground that, at the time of the marriage, her husband was constitutionally afflicted with syphilis in such state of development as to render a cure very remote and doubtful; he had knowledge of his condition at the time he entered into the marriage, but concealed the fact from the plaintiff, who immediately upon learning of it and before the marriage was consummated, left him, and refused to live with him as his wife. Knowlton, J., in pronouncing the decree for annulment of marriage, observed as follows:—

"His concealed disease was such as would leave with him no foundation on which the marriage relation could properly rest. It had advanced to such a stage as probably to be incurable. The libellant could not live with him as his wife without making herself a victim for life and giving to her offspring, if she had any, an inheritance of disease and suffering....Few, if any, would be bold enough to say that it was the duty of the libellant on discovery of the fraud before consummation of the marriage to give herself up as a sacrifice and to become a party to the transmission of such a disease to her posterity."

In both the cases just mentioned the persons were, it will be observed, afflicted with an incurable form of syphilis. It can hardly be doubted that sound public policy would not permit an extension of the rule to cases where the disease is easily curable. It is the permanent or probably permanent character of the malady, rendering sexual intercourse impracticable throughout the continuance of the marriage, that furnishes the reason for the annulment and the maxim should apply cessante ratione cessat lex ipsa. The determination of the question, whether in a particular case the disease is or is not curable, may be a matter of considerable difficulty. But it must be remembered in this connection that recent scientific investigations have brought to light the grave injury which as the inevitable consequence of infection, may result to the husband or the wife, as the case may be, and to their progeny. We need refer only to the monographs by Dr. Shillitoe on the Primary Lesions and Early Secondary Symptoms of Syphilis as seen in the female, of Dr. Gow on Syphilis in Obstetrics and of Dr. Atkinson on Medico-Legal Associations of Syphilis (See System of Syphilis, Oxford Series, Volume I, Chapter 18, Volume II, Chapter 26 and Volume VIII, Chapter 15). In these circumstances, the rules enunciated in the American Courts may well be applied. The fact that one spouse is afflicted with syphilis does not necessarily make him or her impotent. Impotency is ordinarily understood to mean incapacity, which admits of neither copulation nor procreation, capacity for sexual intercourse seeming to be the matter chiefly regarded in the adjudged cases on the subject. Hence impotency has been taken to mean physical and incurable incapacity from entering into the marriage, that is, incapacity to consummate the marriage. From this it has been held, in Ryder v. Ryder (15), that where at the time of the marriage the wife was afflicted with incurable syphilis, which, though not an absolute bar to copulation, rendered the act impracticable as endangering both the health and life of the husband, there was such incapacity as entitled him to a decree for annulment of marriage. On the other hand, it was ruled in Vondal v. Vondal (17) that the concealed existence of such a disease was not a sufficient ground for a decree of nullity of marriage, where it appeared that by medical treatment the danger from intercourse could have been obviated. The distinction appears to us to be based on reason and good sense.

As regards the third question, namely,

(16) (1838) 171 Mass. 404; 68 Am. St. Rep. 440; 41 L. R. A. 800.

does the existence of syphilis in one of the parties furnish a good ground for divorce to the other; there are cases in the English as also in the American Courts where the matter came up for consideration directly or indirectly. These decisions have in general held that in such cases a divorce may be decreed on the ground of cruelty. To constitute such a ground of cruelty, it is usually required that the disease should have been actually communicated to the complainant, that the complainant should have been ignorant of the existence or nature of the defendant's disease at the time of its communication and that the defendant should have infected the petitioner knowingly and wilfully. If all these facts are established, no question can obviously arise as to the propriety of granting the divorce unless there are facts showing a condonation of the offense [Popkin v. Popkin (18), Collett v. Collett (19), Oiucci v. Oiucci (20), Jones v. Jones (21), N. v. N. (22), Brown v. Brown (23), Boardman v. Boardman (24), Morphett v. Morphett (25) which were all reviewed by Lord Shand in Strain v. Strain (26). Reference may also be made to the decision in R. v. Bennett (27), Reg. v. Sinclair (28), Hegarty v. Shine (29) and Reg. v. Clarence (30); in the last mentioned case, the Judges of the Court of Queen's Bench as the Court for consideration of Crown Cases Reserved, held by a majority of nine against four that a husband who had fraudulently concealed from his wife that he was suffering from syphilis and had thereby obtained her consent to sexual intercourse with the result that the disease was communicated to her was not guilty of having committed an "assault" upon her, "occasioning actual bodily harm" within the meaning of 24 and 25, Viet., C. 100, sections 20 and 47.

We have finally to consider the allegation of fraud. It may be stated as a general rule that, concealment of a loathsome and incurable form of syphilis is recognised as a fraud sufficient to warrant divorce or annulment, specially where the existence of the disease is discovered by the other party before the marriage is consummated and the parties immediately separate. It seems that such disease must be actually or probably incurable, but annulment has been granted notwithstanding a more remote possibility of a cure [Smith v. Smith (16), Vondal v. Vondal (17), Svenson v. Svenson (1), Crane v. Crane (32) see also the notes to State v. Lowell (33), Lyon v. Lyon (34), Burger v. Burger (35)].

In these circumstances, we must hold that there has not been that full investigation of the case which the gravity of the result to the parties concerned required. The appeal must consequently be allowed, and the case remanded for re-trial. The allegation of fraud will be investigated and the question whether the condition of the respondent makes the rule of impotency, as explained above, applicable, will be carefully reconsidered. We may add that it is necessary that there should be a proper medical examination of the person of the respondent. Reference may on this point be made to the following passage from the judgment of Lord Stowell in Briggs v. Morgan (36): "It has been said that the modes resorted to for proof on these occasions are offensive to natural modesty: but Nature has provided no other means; and we must be under the necessity either of saying that all relief is denied, or of applying the means within our power. The Court must not sacrifice justice to notions of delicacy of its own,"

See also Norton v. Seton (37), Pollard v. Wybourn (38), Aleson v. Aleson (39), Sparrow v. Harrison (40), affirmed in Harrison v. Harrison (41). Where a party refuses to attend for medical inspections the Court may properly draw an unfavourable inference. This was laid down in the case of a female respondent F. v. P. (42) and was extended to the case of a male respondent in B. v. B. (43) and was applied again in the case of a female respondent in W. v. S. (44). The Courts naturally exercise a wide discretion in ordering physical examination and always do so, subject to such conditions as will afford protection from violence to natural delicacy and sensibility. We understand that the respondent does not object to a proper medical examination.

Costs of this appeal will be costs in the suit.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION No. 216 OF 1920.

December 20, 1920.

Present:—Mr Justice Jwala Prasad.

Lala HANUMAN LAL—PETITIONER

versus

Musammam RAM PEARI KOER—

OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 151, 152, O. XXXIV, r. 6—Mortgage-decree—Personal decree against persons not mortgagors—Inherent power of Court to set aside decree.

A Court has inherent power to set aside an ex parte decree, passed by oversight under Order XXXIV, rule 6, of the Civil Procedure Code, as against a person who is not the mortgagor.

Appeal from a decision of the Munsif, Arrah.

Mr. H. P. Sinha, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Sunder Lal and Ragho Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The Rule must be discharged. The applicant obtained a mortgage decree, dated the 7th of January 1918, against the mortgagor, Balmukund Singh, his son, and the opposite party, defendants Nos. 3 to 5, who were purchasers of the interest of Debi Prasad, in whose takhta the mortgaged property by partition had fallen. The defendants Nos. 3 to 5 resisted the mortgage, suit on the ground that the mortgagor had no jurasta right in the mortgaged property and that it being the terast land of the proprietors and having fallen into the takhta of Debi Prasad, the predecessor-in-interest of the defendants Nos. 3 to 5, the mortgagee had no right to make the said property liable for the mortgage debt.

This plea was overruled by the finding of the Court in the mortgage-suit, that the property in dispute was the kasht right of the mortgagor, Balmukund Singh, and that their mortgage lien subsisted in it in spite of its having fallen into the takhta of Debi Prasad. Accordingly, a preliminary mortgage-decree was passed on the 18th of December 1914 and ultimately a final decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, was passed on the 7th of January 1918.

The mortgaged property was sold in execution of that decree on the 6th of May 1918, for the sum of Rs. 81. On the 2nd of November 1919, the petitioner applied for a personal decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, which remained unsatisfied out of the net proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property on the 13th of January 1919. The Court passed the following order:—"The decree-holder-plaintiff applies for the preparation of a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it is said that the whole of the decree money could not be satisfied by the sale of the mortgaged property. Service of notice on the judgment debtors has been proved. Hence it is ordered that let a decree asked for be prepared for the sum of Rs. 253 14-9 inasmuch as the decretal sum amounted to Rs. 334 14-9 while the property fetched only Rs. 81-00. The sale is said to have taken place for that sum on the 6th of May 1918."

In pursuance of this order, the decree was prepared in Form 11, Schedule D, to the Civil Procedure Code, prescribed for the preparation of such decrees. In the decrees the names of the mortgagors as well as opposite-party Nos. 3 to 5, the purchasers of the mortgaged property from Dabi Prasad, were included. The names were copied out from the preliminary and the final decrees of 1918. The money and the personal decree thus prepared under Order XXXIV, rule 6, was put into execution and the property of the opposite party defendant's Nos. 3 to 5 was attached.

On the 3rd of February, 1920 an application was made by the defendants Nos. 3 to 5 contesting the legality of the decree passed, on the ground that they were not the mortgagors in the bond of the 25th of May 1896 and hence no personal decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, could be passed against them. The application purported to have been made under Order IX, rule 13, and under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court held that, inasmuch as the notice of the application for the decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, was served upon the defendants Nos. 3 to 5, the right to apply under Order IX, rule 13, was barred by time. It accordingly considered their application under the inherent power vested in the Court by section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure and, by its order of the 2nd August 1920, directed that their names be deleted from the decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6.

The main contention of the learned Vakil on behalf of the decree holder applicant is that the Court was wrong in exercising the inherent power under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure, inasmuch as the opposite party had other remedies provided by the Code to set aside the decree passed under Order XXXIV, rule 6, on the 13th of January 1919. It is true that the opposite-party had a right to prefer an appeal from the decree and also to make an application for review of it under Order XLVII of the Code of Civil Procedure, and ordinarily section 151 of the Code would not apply to cases where the aggrieved parties had other remedies provided in the Code. Vide Muthiah Chettiar v. Bawa Sahib (1). The facts of that case are different from those of the present. I have carefully read the decision in that case and certainly, when the applicant came long after his right was barred under Order XXI, rule 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and after he had been unsuccessful up to the Appellate Court in his application under Order XXI, rule 89, it would have been unjustifiable to stretch the scope and object of section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure to apply to that case.

The recent Full Bench case of Gadi Neslaveni v. Marappareddigari Narayana Reddi (2), has dealt with the matter very fully and exhaustively and has summarised the decisions of different Courts of India upon the question of inherent jurisdiction of Courts under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Woodroffe, J., in the case of Hukam Chand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (3) as a result of a review of a number of cases, observed as follows:—"It has thus been held that, although the Code contains no express provision on the matters hereinafter mentioned, the Court has an inherent power ex debito justitiæ to consolidate; postpone pending the decision of a selected action; and to advance the hearing of suits; to stay on the ground of convenience cross suits; to ascertain whether the proper parties are before it; to enquire whether a plaintiff is entitled to sue as an adult; to entertain the application of a third person to be made a party; to add (section 32 not being exhaustive) a party; to allow a defence in forma pauperis; to decide one question and to reserve another for investigation, the Privy Council pointing out that it did not require any provision of the Code to authorise a Judge to do what in this matter was justice and for the advantage of the parties; to remand a suit in a case to which neither section 562 nor section 566 applies; to stay the drawing up of the Court's own orders or to suspend their operation, if the necessities of justice so require; to stay, apart from the question whether the case falls within section 545, the carrying out of a preliminary order pending appeal; to stay proceedings in a lower Court pending appeal and to appoint a temporary guardian of a minor upon such stay; to apply the principles of res judicata to cases not falling within sections 13 and 14 of the Code and so forth". The aforesaid passage has been referred to with approval in the judgment of almost all the learned Judges who delivered separate judgments in the aforesaid Full Bench Madras case. Referring to the aforesaid passage Abdul Rabim, C. J., said. "There is no instance, so far as I am aware, of an ex parte decree being set aside upon an application made for that purpose in cases other than those coming under Order IX, rule 13". Accordingly, it was held in that case that the Court had no power to set aside the ex parte decree passed under the inherent jurisdiction referred to in section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the applicant relies very strongly upon the aforesaid decision and the passage from the judgment of Abdul Rabim, C. J., referred to above. I am in full agreement with the view expressed in the aforesaid Full Bench decision, but each case has to be judged upon its own merits. It cannot be laid down as a hard and fast rule of law that in no circumstances the power of the Court under section 151 of the Code can be exercised in respect of an ex parte decree except under the provisions of Order IX, rule 13. The learned Chief Justice of Madras himself observed: "I do not, however, wish to suggest that the inherent power of the Court mentioned in section 151 of the Code is to be limited to cases in which it can be shown to have been already exercised, for that would be unduly limiting the scope of section 151," and I would add "the object for which the scope was enacted and the inherent power was vested in Courts." Because in no previous case the power was exercised with respect to ex parte decrees, it cannot be contended that such power should never be exercised in such cases. Woodroffe, J., from whose decision the important passage quoted above has been referred to in the Full Bench Madras decision, continues: "These instances (and there are others) are sufficient to show, firstly, that the Code is not exhaustive and, secondly, that in matters with which it does not deal, the Court will exercise an inherent jurisdiction to do that justice between the parties, which is warranted under the circumstances and which the necessities of the case require."

In the present case it has been admitted by the Munsif himself, and he very rightly says that no personal decree could be passed against the opposite-party who are not the mortgagors in the bond under Order XXXIV, rule 6" and observes, in connection with the order of the 13th January 1919: "I would not have passed it, had it been brought to my notice that these applicants are not exeutants of the mortgage deed."

The order of the Munsif, therefore, was admittedly passed on a misapprehension on account of the fact not having brought to his notice that the opposite-party were not the exeutants of the bond. It was the duty of the petitioner before us to obtain a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, on placing before the Court the true facts and circumstances. He knew very well that the mortgaged property was sold and that none but the exeutants of the bond were liable for personal decree for the balance of the decretal amount unsatisfied by the net proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property. He had a right only to proceed against the exeutants of the bond under Order XXXIV, rule 6. He was guilty of omission to give correct information to the Court. He cannot be permitted to take advantage of his own lapse, if not of fraud.

The decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, has to be prepared upon the pleadings in the original suit and the preliminary and the final decrees passed therein. A mere glance at those documents will clearly show that no decree could be passed under Order XXXIV, rule 6, against the opposite-party. It was the mistake of the Court, and the officers of the Court were probably deceived by the decree-holder. Such mistakes cannot be permitted to be continued in spite of the discovery of the mistake, on the ground that the right of the opposite-party was barred by time or upon the ground that the opposite party did not take steps to have the ex parte decree set aside. It must be remembered that the opposite-party was not bound to come to Court for they knew full well that the application of the decree-holder was not a real application against them but an appliation to have a personal decree against the executants of the bond. It is when the decree holder executed the decree and pursued the opposite party in attaching their property that they thought of coming to Court and pointing out that there was a mistake upon the office record in the preparation of the decree.

On no principle of law the power of the Court can be curtailed to set right such mistakes. The inherent power vested in the Court under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure is ample to cover the Court's jurisdiction in cases like this. I would go further and hold that section 152 of the Code might well be applied for it is an error arising from the accidental slip of the office in the preparation of the decree, an omission which may at any time be corrected by the Court either of its own motion or on the application of any of the parties. No question of limitation applies either in the application under section 151 or section 152 of the Code.

I may also mention that the form appended to the Code of Civil Procedure for the preparation of the decrees under Order XXXIV, rule 6, mentions on the heading "Decree against mortgagor personally". That is the form which has been employed in the preparation of this decree. In the present case, therefore, it was never intended to pass a decree against persons other than the mortgagor.

For all the aforesaid reasons, I overrule the contention on behalf of the applicant and confirm the order passed by the Mansif. The application is dismissed with costs. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Rateable distribution, order disallowing—Revision, whether lies.

The High Court will not interfere on revision with orders allowing or disallowing claims to rateable distribution, save in exceptional circumstances. [p. 372, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 44 of Act III of 1914, Punjab Courts Act, and section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Montgomery, dated the 30th May 1918.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner.

Lala Hargopal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Mangat Ram and Shibu Ram are the judgment-debtors in this case. Three different firms obtained decrees against them. (1) Bhagat Ram-Kalyan Das, (2) Chandu Ram-Tota Ram (now represented by Lala Hargopal Vakil) and (3) Jawahar Mal-Deoki Nandan, who though served have not appeared in this Court. Bhagat Ram-Kalyan Das are the petitioners in this Court. They applied for execution on the 8th March 1918 and by a further application dated the 9th April 1918 they asked to share in a proportionate distribution of assets. The property which had been attached was sold on the 22nd April and assets were realised on the 22nd, 24th and 26th of April. On the 11th of May 1918 the petitioners' application for execution was dismissed for default. Petitioners put in a fresh application on 29th May 1918 which was dismissed on 30th May on the ground that it had been presented long after realization of assets. On the 30th of May 1918 the sale was confirmed, and, as the sale-proceeds were more than sufficient to satisfy the decrees of Chandu Ram-Tota Ram and Jawahar Mal-Deoki Nandan, these two firms were paid off in full. On the 31st of May 1918 the petitioners applied for the balance of the money and got a sum of Rs. 447. This, however, was insufficient to satisfy their decree for Rs. 900, and after an abortive attempt to appeal to the District Judge against the order of 30th May dismissing their application they came to this Court on the revision side. Their petition was put in good time but they named as respondents only the judgment debtors, and though asking for rateable distribution, they never impleaded the rival decree-holders as parties until two years later.

SUKAN SAHU v. JHARI MAHTO.

Lala Hargopal on behalf of Chandu Ram-Tota Ram raises two preliminary objections; (1) that this Court should not interfere on revision as the petitioners have an alternative remedy under section 73 (2), Civil Procedure Code, and (2) that this Court should not interfere in a case where the persons against whom relief is sought have by negligence not been impleaded for more than two years. Dr. Nand Lal quotes Sri Krishna Doss v. Ohandook Ohand (1) as an authority for the proposition that High Courts should interfere on revision in such cases. Lala Hargopal, however, points out that the general practice of this Court is not to interfere and he cites Punjab National Bank v. Salamat Singh (2), Fazal Din v. Narain Singh (3) and Radhe Kishen v. Bholu Mal (4). These are all cases of applications for rateable distribution and this Court has consistently declined to interfere on revision with orders allowing or disallowing claims to rateable distribution, save in exceptional circumstances. In the present case I do not see such circumstances as would warrant interference. Counsel on both sides have quoted Tiruchittambala Ohetti v. Seshayyengar (5) which lays down that only those persons are entitled to rateable distribution who have applied for execution of their decrees prior to the realisation of assets and whose applications are still on the file and undisposed of. On behalf of the petitioners it is urged that their applications were still pending when the assets were realised and that absence on the 30th May 1918 should not have prevented the Court from making distribution of assets in accordance with the provisions of law. For the respondents it is urged that as the petitioner's application for execution was dismissed for default before the assets were actually distributed, the petitioners have no right to share in the distribution. This is a law point which I am not going to decide as it will probably be put in issue in a regular suit. I may also remark that, even if this application were to be accepted, still, as is pointed out in Punjab

National Bank v. Salamat Sinah (2) this would apparently not prevent one side or the other from bringing a regular suit under section 73 (2), Civil Procedure Code. Farther, in this particular case, it is obvious that the petition is directed only against the rival decree holders who were by negligence not impleaded as respondents for more than two years. This appears to be an additional ground for refusing to interfere on revision.

The application is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, rr. 14, 18—Scope and object of rules—Document not produced along with plaint, whether can be relied on subsequently.

The object of rule 14 of Order VII of the Civil Procedure Code, is to shut out suspicious documents and to afford as little opportunity as possible for the production of false and fabricated documents in Court, but where it is made clear to the Court that, in spite of the document not having been filed or entered in the list along with the plaint, the document cannot be said to have been fabricated on the face of it, there is no reason why the party should be debarred from using such a document in Court. the loan advanced to the defendants on two dates Rs. 250 on 9th Aghan Sudi 1324 and Rs. 20 on 5th Ohaitra Sudi 1324. The plaintiff was filed on the 13th of November 1919. The plaintiff's case was that the defendants used to borrow money from time to time and that the loans advanced used to be entered, according to the usual practice, in his rokar books and accounts. The defendants denied the liability based upon the *bahi-khata*s and alleged that they had executed a sudbharna deed for the money borrowed in cash from the plaintiff. The plaintiff examined two witnesses and the defendant No. 1 was examined on behalf of the defendants. The Court dismissed the suit solely on the ground that the plaintiff failed to produce his rokar book in time and "it was not safe to act upon the lekha as sufficient to fasten the defendants with the liability."

The lekha (ledger) is an abstract of the rokar book showing the several advances made to each person. The rokar is a daily book of accounts showing the advances made from day to day.

Witness No. 1 for the plaintiff, Misri Lal, the writer of the rokar and the khata, was examined. He gave oral evidence as to the advances alleged by the plaintiff as having been made to defendant No. 1 in his presence. He also stated that he entered the said advances in the bahis and when the rokar bahi (daily register) was shown to him in order to be proved by him, the Court refused to admit it on the ground that it was "not filed with the plaintiff." The khata (ledger) was, however, allowed to be proved and was marked Exhibit 1, apparently because it appeared to the Court that this was filed with the plaintiff.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the plaintiff contends that the Court was wrong in rejecting the rokar bahi. He says that it was filed in Court along with the plaintiff, and it shows the Court seal of the 13th November 1919, the date on which the plaintiff was filed, at pages 61 and 62 of the rokar, which he produces in this Court. He says that both the rokar as well as the khata were filed along with the plaintiff and were taken back with the permission of the Court as they were books of daily use in the plaintiff's business.

Mr. Sen on behalf of the opposite party defendants disputes the correctness of the contention upon the ground that the list of the books filed along with the plaintiff showed that only one book was filed and that was the khata book (ledger). It, however, appears from the list that the plaintiff filed a book called "rokar bahi khata." A copy of the extract from that book was also filed and is now marked Exhibit I. In the remark column of the list of the documents it is noted that the original was compared with the copy and was allowed to be returned. The copy filed is no doubt a copy of the khata. It refers to the pages of the rokar, pages 61 and 62. It appears to be clear that both the books go together and the plaintiff classed them as one book 'rokar bahi khata', and from the seal of the Court it is also clear that both the books were filed in the Court one and the same time. The Court was, therefore, apparently under a misapprehension as regards the non-filing of the rokar and I do not know whether the attention of the Court was drawn to the fact that it bore the seal of the Court, nor do I know what would have been the decision of the Court if it were aware of the Court seal being on the book in question. I have read the plaintiff and I more than doubt whether the claim of the plaintiff can be said to be a claim based upon the bahi-khata in question. His case is based upon the loan advanced to the defendants. The bahi-khata is used as evidence of the loan containing the contemporaneous entries of the payments made. It would have been otherwise if the defendants had signed the book, and the plaintiff's suit were based upon the basis of an acknowledgment of the advances made to him. I, therefore, think that the document in question really comes under subsection (2) of rule 14, Order VII, of the Code of Civil Procedure, namely, a document upon which the plaintiff relies as evidence in support of his claim. The plaintiff in such a case was required to enter such document of evidence in a list to be annexed to the plaintiff. The plaintiff has done so, for the second item clearly indicates that the plaintiff did so. The document in question, therefore, being only a piece of evidence which was entered in the list filed with the plaintiff, the requirements of the law were complied with and the Court was, therefore, wrong in not admitting the document in evidence. Even if the document ought to have been filed, and was not filed, along with the plaintiff and that the Court had jurisdiction to refuse it under rule 18 of Order VII, the Court exercised the jurisdiction or the discretion vested in it by law perversely. The object of the rules in Order VII of the Code is to shut out suspicious documents and to afford as little opportunity as possible for the production of false and fabricated documents in Court; but where it is made clear to the Court that, in spite of the document not having been filed or entered in the list along with the plaintiff, the document cannot be said to have been fabricated on the face of it, there is no reason why the party should be debarred from using such a document in Court. The plaintiff was filed on the 13th November and was registered on the 15th of November. There is no dispute that the plaintiff filed at least the khata book, a copy of the extract from the book and a list entering therein the said document. The khata book as well as the copy of the extract clearly refers to the entries at pages 61 and 62 of the rokar. The rokar was produced in Court and bears seal of the Court. The writer of the book was produced in Court and there is his oath as to the accuracy and correctness of the entries therein. The Court ought to have, therefore, allowed this document to be admitted and then to decide the plaintiff's claim after considering this document along with the other evidence of the plaintiff. The rokar book which was produced in the lower Court would have clearly shown to the Court that it was a huge book containing innumerable entries and the suit having been decided within six weeks it was not very easy for the plaintiff to forge it in such a short time. I am far from saying that the Court ought to have accepted this evidence as true, but the circumstances of each case have to be considered in order to decide whether a document should or should not be entered in evidence though not filed along with the plaintiff or entered in the list under rule 14 of Order VII. The circumstances of this case leave no manner of doubt that this was one of the cases where the Court ought to have allowed the plaintiff to prove his claim by means of the rokar book which he sought to do. The cases of Ranchhod Hirabhai v. Secretary of State for India (1) and Devidas Jogirao v. Firjada Begum (2) bear me out in the principle enunciated above.

Lastly, the Court acted illegally in omitting to consider the oral evidence offered on behalf of the plaintiff. As already stated the plaintiff examined two witnesses to prove the advances actually made to the defendants in respect of which the plaintiff brought the present suit. The defendants simply denied the loan. Whether the rokar book was filed or not, it was the incumbent duty of the Court to consider the oral evidence and to accept or to reject it. If the oral evidence proved the plaintiff's case and it was worthy of credence, there was no reason why the plaintiff should not have succeeded in the Court below on the strength of the oral evidence offered by him.

For all the aforesaid reasons, I am convinced that there has been a failure of justice. I accordingly set aside the order of the Small Cause Court Judge dismissing the suit of the plaintiff and remand the case to him for disposing of it in accordance with law and in the light of the aforesaid remarks, after giving the plaintiff an opportunity to produce the rokar book in question. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

The rokar book filed here has been returned to the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the plaintiff, to be produced in the Court below.

Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Marriage—Muhammadan woman living as wife with Sikh—Presumption—Appeal, second—Legitimacy—Finding of fact, whether binding.

The law presumes against vice and immorality, and where it is proved that a Muhammadan woman lived with a Sikh for a number of years as his wife, there is a strong presumption in favour of a marriage having taken place between them.

Although a finding on the question of legitimacy is one of fact, it will not be upheld in second appeal where the lower Appellate Court has ignored important pieces of evidence and the strong presumption of the law in favour of legitimacy.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Gujranwala, at Sialkot, dated the 17th May 1916, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Gujranwala, dated the 5th July 1915.

Mr. Gobind Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Cooper, for the Respondents during arguments.

JUDGMENT.—Sulakhan Singh, the defendant-appellant in this case, is admittedly the son of one Natha Singh by a Muhammadan woman, Musammat Kammon; and the only question before us is, whether he was born in lawful wedlock. Natha Singh died in 1903 and his land was then mutated in favour of Sulakhan Singh. Musammat Kammon had previously been married to a Muhammadan Kamhar named Umar and the lower Appellate Court has refused to recognise Sulakhan Singh as the legitimate son of his parents on the ground that there is nothing whatever to show whether Musammat Kammon had ever been divorced from her first husband.

In the appeal it is urged that the lower Appellate Court has totally ignored a most important piece of evidence, namely, an admission by Deva Singh, the father of the present plaintiff, at mutation in 1903 to the effect that he was willing that the land should be mutated in favour of Sulakhan Singh. It is also pointed out to us that the lower Appellate Court also paid no attention to an un rebutted statement by Musammat Kammon herself that her former husband had died some six or seven years before the birth of Sulakhan Singh. The decision of the District Judge was merely based upon the fact that the evidence of a divorce of Musammat Kammon from Umar was not sufficient nor was there adequate proof of an alleged conversion of Musammat Kammon to the Sikh faith. We consider that the District Judge would have come to a different conclusion if he had paid due attention to the evidence which he has disregarded. It is also not denied that Musammat Kammon lived as a wife with Natha Singh for a number of years and, this being the case, as the law presumes against vice and immorality, there is a strong presumption in favour of a marriage having taken place between them. See Amir Ali and Woodroffe's Law of Evidence, 5th Edition, page 72, and the authorities quoted therein. Another authority on the same point is contained in a recent judgment of this Court, namely, Ibrahim Ali Khan v. Mubarak Begam (1).

Although, therefore, the decision of the lower Appellate Court on the question of legitimacy was one of fact, we cannot uphold its decision, as it has ignored important pieces of evidence and the strong presumption of the law in favour of legitimacy.

We, therefore, accept this appeal and dismiss plaintiffs suit with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 5—Claim proceedings—Limitation, question of, whether can arise.

TOMLINSON v. GORAN.

In a proceeding under Order XXI, rule 58 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court has no jurisdiction whatever to deal with the point whether the execution is barred by time.

Revision from an order of the Munsif, Arrah.

Mr. Lakshmi Narain Singh for Mr. Fakhr-ud-din K. B., and Mr. P. Banerji, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Mahomed Jan, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application is directed against the order of the learned Munsif dismissing the execution case of the petitioner. It is necessary to state that this order was made in a claim case preferred by the opposite party. That claim was put forward on the 28th May 1920. The learned Munsif registered it as Case No. 11 of 1920. Without, however, determining any of the matters in controversy between the decree holder and the claimant to the property, the learned Munsif dismissed the execution case as barred by limitation.

Now, it is quite clear that the question of limitation does not arise in a proceeding under Order XXI, rule 58. The claimant has no locus standi at all in the execution proceedings until he establishes his right to the property, and, as soon as he establishes his right to the property, the property must be released from attachment. Either he succeeds in his claim case or he fails in it, in neither case does the question of limitation arise. The order sheet shows that the learned Munsif registered the case as a claim case. He issued notice on the parties, and he directed the claimant to file documentary evidence before him. He issued summonses to the witnesses, but then, without determining the points which it was necessary for him to determine in a proceeding under Order XXI, rule 58, he thought it necessary to deal with the question of limitation first. In my view, he had no jurisdiction whatever to deal with the point whether the execution was barred by limitation in a proceeding under Order XXI, rule 58. I must set aside the order of the learned Munsif and direct him to proceed according to law. If the claimant establishes his claim to the property, then no other question will arise in the matter. If the claimant fails to establish his claim, then the learned Munsif will proceed with the execution case; and, in dealing with the question of limitation, the learned Munsif will give due weight to two cases which I may bring to his notice: the case of Sariatolla Molla v. Raj Kumar Roy (1), and the case of Lakshmanan Chettiar v. Kannammal (2).

In the circumstances, I make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, rr. 17, 18—Amendment of plaint—Plaintiff, failure of, to amend, effect of—Suit, whether can be dismissed.

Order VI, rule 17 of the Civil Procedure Code only provides that the Court may allow an amendment, and if the party to whom the permission is given does not avail himself of it, the only consequence is that, under Order VI, rule 18, he cannot amend his pleading afterwards unless the time allowed for amendment is extended by the Court. [p. 377, col. 1.]

Therefore, where a plaintiff fails to amend his plaint when directed to do so, the Court has no power, merely on this account, to dismiss the suit. [p. 377, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff alleged in the plaint in this case that the defendant and her husband had borrowed Rs. 300 from her on the promissory notes, and had paid nothing except interest up to the end of 1918, and she claimed Rs. 306 for principal and interest

RAMANAND SINGH v. CHANDRAMA SINGH.

The defendant pleaded that the plaint should be returned for amendment, on the ground that it ought to give a full statement of the account and to specify the sums of money which the plaintiff had received, with dates. The lower Court, then, on the 2nd June, returned the plaint, which it said was defective, for amendment by the 16th June, and on the latter date, as the plaint had not been amended, the Court dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has applied to this Court for revision.

I cannot agree with the lower Court that the plaint was in any way defective. It gave all the necessary particulars and needed no amendment. In the second place, the Court was not competent to dismiss the suit when the plaintiff failed to amend the plaint as directed, and section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, under which the lower Court's order purports to have been passed, does not apply in such circumstances as these. Under the old Civil Procedure Code, a plaint could be rejected if the plaintiff failed to comply with the order to amend it, but there is no such provision in the present Code. In fact, the present Code contains no specific provision that the Court may order a party to amend his pleadings, but Order VI, rule 17 only provides that the Court may allow an amendment, and if the party to whom the permission is given does not avail himself of it the only consequence is that, under Order VI, rule 18, he cannot amend his pleading afterwards unless the time allowed for amendment is extended by the Court. I accordingly accept this application for revision, set aside the order of the 16th June 1920, dismissing the suit, as well as the order of the 2nd June 1920 returning the plaint for amendment and awarding Rs. 16 costs against the plaintiff, and remand the case to the lower Court, under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for fresh disposal according to law. Court-fee on the application for revision will be refunded. Other costs will be costs in the case.

The default of a plaintiff to pay process-fees on the date fixed for the payment in respect of one of the defendants can be no justification for dismissal of the suit as against those defendants who have been served and have filed written statements. [p. 378, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

ADAMI, J.—This is an application against an order of the Subordinate Judge refusing to restore a suit under Order IX, rule 4. Shortly stated, the facts are these.—

The plaintiff instituted a mortgage suit against several defendants, one of whom was a minor. It was proposed that the defendant No. 1 should be the guardian of the minor, but it was objected that as the defendant No. 1 had executed the bond he could not act as guardian to the minor in the suit. Process-fees had been paid and summons had issued on defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2; and it was ordered that the defendant No. 2 should be appointed as guardian of the minor, process-fees should be filed and that a copy of the plaint should be served upon him as guardian of the minor. It was further ordered that the extra process-fees should be filed on the 28th February 1920. On that date the plaintiff failed to file the extra process-fees and on the 1st March the Court dismissed the whole suit for default. An application was then made for the restoration of the suit which was rejected.

UDE RAM V. BENI PERSHAD.

It is clear to me that the order of the Court was not correct. The 28th February had been fixed only for the payment of process-fees in respect of one of the defendants who was a minor, and the rest of the defendants who were adults had appeared and filed written statements. The default of the plaintiff to pay process fees on the date fixed for the payment in respect of one of the defendants could be no justification for dismissal of the suit as against the adult defendants. Furthermore, the 28th of February was not fixed for the hearing of the case and, therefore, Order IX, rule 4 could not be applied. The suit is a mortgage-suit and it would not be well to allow the suit to be dismissed as against the one minor defendant while restoring it as against the adult defendants. I would, therefore, order that the suit be restored as prayed for by the petitioners as against all the defendants. Hearing fee two gold mohurs.

DAS, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 5—Mortgage decree—Stay of execution—Procedure.

The execution of a mortgage-decree to be realized first from the mortgaged property and the balance, if any, from the judgment-debtor and his other property, cannot be stayed simply because a claim by a prior mortgagee is pending. The proper course is to sell the hypothecated property and, after retaining out of the sale-proceeds the amount sufficient to meet the said claim, to pay the balance to the decree-holder.

Petition, under section 44 of Act III of 1914, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 21st October 1919, affirming that of Senior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, dated the 28th July 1919.

Mr. Badr-ud Din Qureshi, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the orders of the lower Courts postponing execution of the petitioner's decree against the respondent until the decision of another dispute between the parties relating to certain hypothecated property has taken place. The sum due to the petitioner is, according to the decree, to be in the first instance realised from the hypothecated property and it is only failing such realisation that it can be recovered from the other property of the judgment debtor. The petitioner says that he does not desire to execute the decree at present against any other property, all he wants to do is to proceed against the hypothecated property. It is stated in the second ground of his petition that Rs. 4,500 has to be paid to Talsi Ram and Rs. 6,000 to Banarsi Das before the amount due to him is paid, and he asks that the hypothecated property be sold and sufficient having been retained to satisfy the claims of these two persons, the balance if any may be used for the payment of his own decree. This appears to be reasonable. There are no materials on the record which show me exactly how much is claimed by Talsi Ram and Banarsi Das, but there is nothing to prevent the executing Court from ascertaining this.

I allow the revision so far as to direct the executing Court to proceed with the execution of the petitioner's decree in accordance with law. It should send for Talsi Ram and Banarsi Das and any others who may be interested, and ascertain from them what is the total amount of their claims. It should then proceed to sell the hypothecated property and, retaining sufficient for the payment of those claims, apply the balance to the discharge of the petitioner's decree. If there is nothing over, or an insufficient amount to pay off the petitioner's decree, then the judgment-debtor's other property can be proceeded against. No order as to costs.

THE FIRM OF HUKAM CHAND-NATHU

MAL AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Joint family—Self-acquisitions—Partible and impartible property—Gains of science, when impartible—"Without detriment to father's estate," meaning of—Burden of proof.

In a joint Hindu family the rule is that the acquisitions of the members are joint property and partible. Gains of science made without any detriment to the father's estate are, however, excepted. [p. 381, cols. 1 & 2.]

It was originally sufficient to make such gains partible, that the earner had been maintained out of family funds during his education. This was later on narrowed down, first to the receipt of the education itself at the family expense, and later still education generally was narrowed to specialised education, which is now the basis of the rule. [p. 384, col. 1.]

The burden of proving that the science was acquired without detriment to the family estate is on the acquirer. [p. 383, col. 2.]

It is not necessary to make gains of science partible that they should result directly from the use of joint family funds. Nor does their partibility depend on causa proxima, nor is it negatived by the intervention of the personal element of the individual co-parcener's character. [p. 384 col. 1.]

Once it is found that an unseparated member was originally equipped for the calling in which he made his gains by a special training at the expense of the patrimony, his personal earnings and acquisitions remain partible throughout his life. On the other hand, he can sever from the family at will on the footing of bringing his accumulations into hotchpot and without any liability as to future earnings [p. 382, col. 1; p. 381, col. 2.]

In the present case the earnings of an Indian Civil Servant were held to be partible property and as such liable for the family debts. [p. 383, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Punjab Chief Court, (LeRoussignol and Shah Din, JJ.) dated the 19th May 1916, reported as 4 Ind. Cas. 714, affirming, with a modification, a decree of the District Judge, Ferozepore.

FACTS.—The appellants were brothers, the first a Pleader, and the second a member of the Indian Civil Service. The District Judge held them personally liable on certain hundis, given by a firm carried on by the joint Hindu family, governed by the Mitakshara Law, to which they belonged. They appealed. The learned Judges who heard the appeal (LeRoussignol and Shah Din) agreed that they were liable in respect of the hundis, not personally but to the extent of their shares in the joint property: but differed on the question whether their separate earnings formed part of the joint property: LeRoussignol, J., holding that there was a presumption that their special education had been at the expense of the joint funds, while Shah Din, J., held that there was no such presumption and even if there were the first appellant had discharged the burden of proof.

In consequence of this difference of opinion the Division Bench submitted the case for determination to a Full Bench under section 10 of the Punjab Courts Act, but the Full Bench held that the submission was not well founded. In the result, the following point was referred to Mr. Justice Rattigan, under section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, for his opinion:—

"In a case where a member of a joint Hindu family has received a special training to qualify himself for a profession or for the service of State, is there an initial presumption, in the absence of all evidence on the point, that he received his training at the expense of the joint family property, or should this fact be alleged and proved like any other fact in a case and be found in the negative if no evidence at all were given on either side?"

The opinion of Mr. Justice Rattigan coinciding with that of Mr. Justice LeRoussignol the appeal was, on its again coming before the Division Bench, dismissed by the judgment of the said Division Bench of the 19th May 1916, and a decree passed in the terms following:—

"That the appellants are liable on the hundis in suit to the extent of their shares in the joint family property and that the separate property, of the appellant Gokal Chand shall be held to be joint family property liable for the satisfaction of the decree."

"This decree shall be against the defendants' shares in the joint family property, which shall be deemed to include Gokal Chand's separate property."

An application for review having failed, the appellants applied for a certificate for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, but the application was rejected by the Chief Court. Special leave to appeal was subsequently granted to the appellants by Order in Council.

AMAR NATH V. THE FIRM OF HUKAM CHAND-NATHU MAL.

On this appeal the only party to appear was the second appellant, Mr. Gokal Chand.

Messrs. DeGruyther, E. O., and O'Gorman, for second Appellant, submitted that the education which he had received was an ordinary education, having regard to the position in life of Joti Mal's family, and not a special education within the meaning of that term in Hindu Law. Such a general education does not make the gains of the individual member liable: Metharam Ramrakhiomal v. Rewachand Ramrakhiomal (1).

There the gains were made in trade and commerce.

The true test is to ascertain how the joint property is used. Gokal Chand's salary was due not to the use of joint family property but to his own industry and skill. It is only where the use of joint property is the proximate cause of acquisitions that such acquisitions are joint. The gain from the science must be directly attributable to the detriment to the family estate. It could not be said that a man got into Government service by the use of joint funds: labour and industry were the material factors, not education. Moreover, Shah Din, J., was right in holding that it was incumbent on the respondent, firm to prove that Gokal Chand's education was at the expense of the joint family fund and that they had failed to do so.

The tendency of the cases had been steadily to narrow the field within which the gains of science were partible. The view first taken was that if a man were maintained at the expense of the joint family while receiving a special education all his earnings were joint. Ohalakonda Alasani v. Ohalakonda Ratnachalam (2).

Next, the view taken was that any education at the expense of the joint family made gains partible, then it was narrowed to a special education. It was submitted that the true view was that the use of the joint property must be the proximate cause of the gains.

The following cases were referred to. Dhunookdharee Lall v. Gunput Lall (3), Bai Manchha v. Narotamdas Kashidas (4), Pauliem Valoo Ohetty v. Pauliem Scoryah Ohetty (5), Boologam v. Ewernim (6), Lakshman Mayaram v. Jannabai (7), Krishnaji Mahadev v. Moro Mahadev (8), Lachmin Kuar v. Debi Prasad (9), Durga Dutt Joshi v. Ganesh Dutt Joshi (10).

JUDGMENT.

LORD SUMNER.—This was a suit, brought to recover the principal amount of four hundis, to which five persons were made defendants. The plaintiffs were successful in both Courts below, and their Lordships' Board gave special leave to appeal to two of the defendants, but one only, Mr. Gokal Chand, now appears.

Sundry points connected with the validity of the hundis and their presentation were pleaded by some of the defendants, but not by the appellant. It has been held in the Courts below that, as a matter of practice, he was not entitled to avail himself on appeal of points which had not been raised by him below. Before their Lordships this decision was but faintly contested, and they see no reason to doubt or to review it.

The real issue in the appeal is one of some importance. Joti Mal and his sons, of whom the appellant is one, constituted a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law, which carried on a joint ancestral business as money-lenders under the style of Nagar Mal-Joti Mal at Ferozepore, and the hundis in question were given by this firm in the way of its business for debts due to the plaintiffs, who were near relatives. In the conduct of this business the appellant took no part. He was not privy to the debts incurred. In his youth he was for seven years absent from India for the purpose of being specially trained in England for the Indian Civil Service. He succeeded in entering that service and, returning to India, was posted to the Central Provinces. At the commencement of the suit, he was Joint Magistrate at Sitapur and in receipt of the substantial emoluments of that office, but he has never severed himself from the joint family of which he became a member at his birth.

In a joint Hindu family, such as this, the rule is that the acquisitions of the members are joint property and partible, that is to say, liable to be shared with the other members of the family, and impartibility is the exception.

One of the recognised exceptions is property acquired by the possession of special "science" or "learning." Where, as often happens, this is acquired outside the family and has to be paid for, in one form or another, at the expense of the family, it is described by the accepted writers as acquired "to the detriment of the family property." In that case it is regarded as a family investment, and the emoluments, which its possessor is thus enabled to obtain, are joint property of the family as fruits of the investment thus made in the person of one of its more gifted members. Of the exact meaning of "science" in the original text it is not now necessary to speak, nor need anything be said of the cases of science imparted within the family, or of science obtained by the pupil either by his own exertions or from educational benefactions, or in any other way not detrimental to the family funds.

The question, what is "science" in this connection must be intrinsically one of fact, though the area of discussion has been steadily narrowed by typical decisions, conclusive of numerous cases. The whole doctrine is not without anomalies. If the test is the returns obtained from the family investments, how far are these emoluments the result of the science—the specialising in education at the expense of the family funds—and how far are they the rewards of the learner's brains and industry and good fortune? Many a learned man makes nothing and many a sciolist gets on in his profession by pertinacity and mother wit. Again, if the specialist education is deemed to be the stock from which success—and income—accrue, this is true of success and income to the end of the learner's life, yet it is unquestioned that the individual can sever from the family at will on the footing of bringing his accumulations into hotchpot as part of the family property and without capitalising future earnings or being under future liability as to what he may make thereafter.

The distinction between acquisitions made by a co-parcener solely by his own exertions and those which have involved the use of the patrimony is as old as the laws of Manu. The text of the Mitakshara gives as an instance of impartible acquisition that which has been gained by "science" or learning. Difficulties in applying this simple distinction are supposed to begin when Vijnaneswara makes the comment on this illustration, that "without detriment to the father's estate" must be implied throughout the passage, so that the gains of this kind, which are impartible, are not gains of science as such, but gains of science made without any detriment to the father's estate and acquired by the co-parcener's exertions independently of patrimonial help. Succeeding commentators developed this point, not always in terms that can be completely reconciled, but the rule itself is simple and logical; though difficulties arise, as with so many rules, in the application. If the substance of the distinction is between acquisitions which have and acquisitions which have not involved the use of the patrimony and, therefore, such detriment to it as use of it or expenditure out of it involves, there is no logical reason for making any further distinction between gains made by science and gains made by labouring on the patrimony or by laying out the family funds and reaping the fruits of the outlay, nor for distinguishing cases where the learning employed is a specialised, and cases where it is a mere ordinary, education. The connection between the outlay and its fruits may be more difficult to trace; for a distinction can be made between the use of family funds in acquiring gain and the use of family funds to qualify a member of the family to acquire gain by his own efforts. I may be said to be direct in the one case and remote in the other, but if risk of or detriment to family property is the point in both cases, there appears to be no such merit in "science," recognised by the sages of the Hindu Law, as would warrant the exclusion of gains of sciences as such from the category of partible acquisitions.

Whatever doubt might once have existed, when the Hindu Law was to be gathered from text-writers only, has been removed by a series of decisions, and it is now clear that personal earnings and acquisitions may remain partible throughout the unseparated member's life, if he was originally equipped for the calling or career in which the gains were made, by a special training at the expense of the patrimony. It has been so held in the case of a Prime Minister [Luzimon Row Sadasew v. Mullir Row Bace (11)], a dancing girl [Chalakonda Alisani v. Chalakonda Retnachalam (2)], and a Pleader, [Durvasula Gangadharudu v. Durvasula Narasammah (12)] and Bai Manchha v. Narolamdas Kashidas (1), but secus of an astrologer [Durga Dutt Joshi v. Ganesh Dutt Joshi (10)]. The like distinction is found in the case of a Karkun [Krishnaji Mahadev v. Moru Mahadev (8)] and an army contractor [Lachmin Kuar v. Debi Prasad (9)]. The grounds on which, in the three last-mentioned cases, however, the gains were held to be impartible serve to define the rule still further. In none of them was it held that the occupation in itself was such that the gains of science could not be said to apply to it. Impartibility rested in every case on the slightness or the peculiar character of the education by which the science was acquired. Thus in the first mentioned case the gains were really due to the astrologer's native talent for that profession. In his early youth its rudiments had been instilled into him by his father, an astrologer likewise, but without expense to the family or anybody else, for the casting of horoscopes seems to be a profession in which the equipment is slender and a gift for inspiring confidence is the main thing. It was not, however, suggested that, if the special training had been similar to the skill in song and dance, which enhanced the attractions of a nautch girl, the gains of the astrologer would not equally have been partible gains. As a profession, astrology enjoyed no immunity. Still more striking is Lakshman Mayaram's case (7) where the family member was actually a Subordinate Judge. At the family expense he had received a slight elementary education of an entirely non professional character. His law he had picked up for himself. His salary was held impartible, not because a Judge stands outside the rule or because a knowledge of law in the nineteenth century is not within the term "learning" as used in the eleventh, but because in these matters a self-taught man has the best of it, for gains are impartible which are not the result, directly or indirectly, of anything but his own exertions.

The present case is the first in which such an official position as that of the appellant has come into question, but, except for its higher respectability, there does not seem to be any ground on which as an occupation it can be taken out of the rule which the earlier cases establish. Mr. J. D. Mayne's well-known work on Hindu Law has, throughout all its editions, contained the statement in section 283 that a post in the Covenanted Civil Service of India is a post to which the rule would apply, and this never seems to have attracted comment, still less to have aroused dissent, among the many judgments which have dealt with this subject. In the case in Metharam Ramrakhiomal v. Rewachand Ramrakhiomal (1) the judgment under appeal actually acquiesced in his view, if it did not adopt it, and this passage is recited in the judgment of their Lordships' Board, without dissent or comment. It is true that an Indian Civil Servant is not always what is commonly called a scientific man, but his is certainly a special and, in many cases, an eminently learned profession.

As no distinction in principle can be found between Mr. Gokal Chand's official position and the decided cases, it remains only to consider two questions raised on his behalf. The first, whether in his particular case there is either proof or presumption of the requisite detriment to the patrimony; the second, whether, if so, that detriment is not so remote that the appellant's official salary should be regarded as being wholly acquired by his own personality, integrity and learning and, therefore, as being impartible.

The appellant was not called at the trial nor was any evidence given as to his education and early life, but there is no question here of an ordinary education, which must be the stepping-stone to the acquisition of any learning, such as might be given in a Mission [Lakshman Mayaram v. Jamnabai (7)] or a Government School (Metharam Ramrakhiomal v. Rewachand Ramrakhiomal (1) (supra) still less of a mere provision of "food and apparel." Neither has any question been raised of an equitable distribution of the acquisitions between the separate and the family estates. Admittedly, Mr. Gokal Chand spent seven years in England acquiring that comprehensive and costly education which qualified him to pass with success into this service. The family to which he belongs is a family of hereditary money-lenders, and the ordinary education, which all its male members would naturally and appropriately enjoy, may be taken to be one of considerable extent and to include varied attainments; but there can be no doubt that, alike in the subjects of study, the proficiency to be attained, and the mentality which is formed as the result of it, Mr. Gokal Chand's education must have been very different from that of other members of his family. Mr. Gokal Chand's education was, above all, a specialised education.
